Those who are opposing vigorously and with all their might the passage of this bill, those who are opposing 100 percent the passage of the bill, are the following, and I beg you to lend me your ears:

The American Federation of Labor, which stands for the workingman of this country.

The American Legion, composed of honorable veterans of the World War, who were sent to foreign fields to save the world for Christianity and democracy.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Let me repeat, every organization I have named and every organization I shall name is against the Kerr-Coolidge bill 100 percent, and they are fighting it with all their might.

To recapitulate:

The American Federation of Labor.

The American Legion.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The Disabled Veterans of the World War.

The Daughters of the American Revolution.

The Sons of the American Revolution.

The Junior Order of United American Mechanics, with its 500,000 full-blooded Americans in 42 States of the Union.

The Patriotic Order of the Sons of America.

And 110 other patriotic American organizations, every one of which believes that America should be preserved for Americans; every one of which believes that the time has come when we must quit pussyfooting and let the world know that we stand for Americans and Americanism, and forget our sympathies for those who come from foreign lands.

Mr. President, not only are those honorable legions, associations, organizations, and societies 100 percent against the pending bill but millions upon millions of American citizens are against it; and, before I forget it, I desire to have those who are sponsoring this bill bring to the attention of the Senate the names of the societies that are favoring the bill. I desire to have those who are sponsoring this bill let the Members of the Senate know the names of the societies and the organizations that are advocating the passage of the bill. When the names of the societies and the organizations supporting the bill are brought to the attention of the Senate, it shall be my privilege and my pleasure to reveal what I know about the societies that are back of the bill.

I said that millions of Americans are against the bill—millions upon millions—and in that connection I wish to read just a simple little post card which was sent to me by some man of whom I never heard, one of hundreds upon hundreds of post cards and letters and telegrams I have received from all over the United States. This simple little post card will reveal to the Members of this body the sentiment that is deeply rooted in the hearts of Americans.

DEAR SENATOR:-

I can see him now; I can picture him in my mind—an honest, God-fearing, ordinary American, sitting down before the typewriter with his sleeves rolled up and his collar unbuttoned, somewhat as mine is at the present time, digging away, and a sentiment in every word that he types. This post card comes from Topeka, Kans. I know Kansas is a good State, because I know its Senators.

Dear Senator: Reynolds-Starnes immigration restriction and alien deportation-registration bill urgently needed and I trust will become law at once. Unfair to American citizens—

Listen! He is right. He is using good old common horse sense.

Unfair to American citizens and taxpayers. Social Security Act makes no distinction between American citizens and aliens. Aliens holding jobs in our country should be taxed 25 percent of funds they send to their homelands.

I hope the writer of this post card will vote for my good friend the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGnl] when he comes up for reelection. The writer's name is C. O. Sage, General Delivery, Topeka, Kans.

Unfair that Americans be taxed to keep aliens on relief rolls-

That is true. This fellow has good common sense—good old horse sense.

Unfair that Americans be taxed to keep aliens-

One million five hundred thousand aliens on relief rolls; when they had jobs they sent money out of the country.

I recently read in the Saturday Evening Post a series of extremely interesting articles written by Mr. Raymond Carroll, a former newspaper correspondent of our Capital City, to the effect that since the depression the aliens on the relief in this country and aliens holding American jobs had sent to their respective fatherlands, by way of international money orders, more than $250,000,000—your dollars, the dollars of the American people, sent to their respective countries across the vast waste of water.

Let us see what the man in Kansas further says. He is a man of good sense. When I visit Kansas next year I want to meet him. He says further:

When they had jobs they sent money out of the country: now they should not be carried on relief rolls, but they should be deported for charity of their home government.

Gentlemen of the Senate, I would venture anything in the world that that man does not know what is done with such people in France, or in England; I venture he does not know the consideration given to them in Italy, in Norway, in Sweden, in Denmark, or in any other country of continental Europe, or in any other country in the world, for that matter He says:

Now, they should not be carried on relief rolls, but they should be deported for charity of their home government.

All the education in the world does not make a man smart. Some of the smartest men I have ever known in my life came from down in good old Tennessee, the State so well represented by its senior Senator [Mr. McKellar], who sits before me. Tennessee is a fine State. It used to be a part of North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Be sure and enact into law your important bill.

I know now that this man has sense. [Laughter.]

Fingerprint all aliens in United States annually, tax them 25 percent of money they send home to keep their own home folks. Buy American, employ American, travel American, think American! Faithfully.

C. O. SAGE.

Mr. President, I cherish that finale. I am going to be as faithful to C. O. Sage as he is to the American people.

Mr. President, for the past 2 or 3 days I have been sitting in the Senate thinking perhaps the pending bill would be brought up every moment, and I desired to be here when it was called up because I wanted the opportunity of explaining it to the Members of the Senate, whose friendship I cherish. I assure my colleagues, all the Members of this body, that they have my admiration, whether they are Democrats or Republicans or Farmer-Laborites. I will say, without attempting to flatter my colleagues, that never in my life have I found a finer body of men, and I say that wherever I have an opportunity to say it, because I mean it. I wanted to have the opportunity to help my friends in the Senate. I wanted the opportunity to help them because I know they want to help themselves, because I realize that self-preservation is the first law of nature, I felt that I could do them a favor, and I want also to do a favor to those Senators who are not here this afternoon, I want them to read the RECORD tomorrow morning to find out what all this controversy is about, because the eyes of the American people today are fixed upon the Senate of the United States. Is it because I am speaking? Oh, no; it is because a bill is before the Senate to which the American people are opposed, and the American people are speaking to us through their representatives, the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled Veterans of the World War, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Patriotic Order of Sons of Liberty-

Mr. MINTON rose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And 110 other patriotic organizations of a number of which I am confident my distinguished and beloved friend from Indiana is a member.

Mr. MINTON. I was just wondering whether the Senator | had heard from the Veterans of Future Wars. [Laughter.] Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I did not have them in mind.

Mr. President, for the past 2 or 3 days, as I have stated, I have been here thinking that perhaps this bill would come before the Senate, and I wanted to be here, whether all of my colleagues were present or not. I wanted to have an opportunity to do something for my colleagues, because I knew that sometime they would have a chance to help me. I always like to help a fellow if it does not cost me anything. [Laughter.] Therefore I am very happy indeed to have found the opportunity to express my sentiments upon the pending bill, in the hope that Senators may interest themselves in reading the bill, and above all, in reading between the lines.

While I was sitting here for these several days I listened to many speeches, and the subject I am discussing has had relation to virtually every speech I have heard upon the floor of the Senate for the past 3 days. As I have been studying the data collected I have been listening, from time to time, to the voices of Senators, and the speeches that have been made finally would work around to the subject now before the Senate.

I heard the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] describe very vividly to the Members of this body the great injury caused to all sections of our country by erosion of the soil. Later I will prove to the Senate how that has much to do with this question.

This morning I heard the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] discussing the homeless in this country. He was referring to a bill which interests itself in the construction of homes in connection with Federal housing, and he said that today there are in the United States 12,000,000 people whose incomes are less than $1,500 a year. He failed to say that today there are millions upon millions in our country who have no incomes at all, a tremendous number of unemployed, and he failed to make mention of the great number on relief. all of which interests itself with this great question. I believe he stated that 60 percent of the population, 80,000,000 people, did not have an amount sufficient to provide adequate housing for themselves.

Let me now call attention to the supplemental report filed by members of the committee. Let us read what it says. I shall read just the summary, because later on I expect to take every paragraph of the report these gentlemen have submitted to the Senate and dissect it. I expect to take the report and analyze it. I do not know by whom it was written, but I now state to the Senate that I expect to take the report and dissect it limb from limb, and hang it up here for all to look at, so that the Members of this body may see with their own eyes what it is. Let us read just the preamble.

Which bill is to do what?-

to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

Other purposes! One of the other purposes they have in mind is the creation of what is to be known as an interdepartmental committee, which will have the power, according to their desire, to administer the laws of this country. When they say that the law is wrong, they will make it right.

This report relates particularly to the amendment in the nature of a substitute heretofore reported, which the committee recommended be agreed to.

This substitute bill deals with two of the most urgent problems presented by the deportation laws of the United States: (1) The failure of the present statutes to enable the deportation of dangerous alien criminals.

Mr. President, I wish to comment there for a moment, because I think this is important. "The failure of the present statutes to enable the deportation of dangerous alien criminals." There is nothing wrong with the statutes. Look into the immigration laws. There is nothing wrong with the laws. They say that the statutes are wrong and that because of defects in the law we cannot get rid of aliens now in this country. They breathe hot one moment and cold the next. In that statement they remind me of the chameleon, one color now and another color the next moment.

They tell us that the laws are not adequate to enable the Government to deport aliens; yet at the same time they are trying to get a bill through the Congress to permit 2,862 deportable aliens to stay in the country. Members of the committee want to change the present laws so that those aliens can stay here. Yet we are told that the effort is to enact a law to enable the aliens to be put out. I say that before we pass such a law we should have executed the laws which are already on the statute books, which mandatorially provide that they shall be deported.

Someone might say, "Well, Senator, the 2,862 cases you have mentioned are hardship cases. You ought not to be so cruel, Senator. You ought to think about these poor people." I am as soft hearted as any man I ever saw in my life. I do not hate a living creature upon the face of the earth. There are many, perhaps, who dislike me, but I do not dislike them. The only person who suffers anything by dislike is the man who cherishes dislike. Hating somebody, or disliking him, will age one quicker than anything else in the world; and I do not wish to get old. At least I wish to retain my health until I can protect the American people from the thousands upon thousands of aliens who are coming into this country every year and usurping the jobs of our unemployed.

It is said, "We wish to enact a law under which we may deport alien criminals." I will gladly yield to my friend the Senator from Arizona if he wishes to interrupt me. He seems desirous of saying something.

There are laws under which 100,000 such persons might be deported tomorrow if it were so desired, but it is not desired to do so. It is desired that they be left here.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield. Mr. ASHURST. I did not seek to interrupt the Senator; but, with his accustomed gallantry and pleasantness, the Senator referred to me, and I wish to ask him this question: For every job of work held in this country by an alien is not a citizen displaced?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely! I thank the Senator from Arizona for his excellent contribution.

I had not intended to mention these hardship cases now. because I wish to take a couple of days in discussing those cases, and I did not desire to go into a description of them now; but, so long as we are on the subject, let me say something about them. I hope all fair-minded, all open-minded Members of the Senate—and all Senators are fair-minded and open-minded-will remember what I am now saying about hardship cases. In other words, I am going to be fair with my colleagues the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]. I am going to show them what I have up my sleeve. am not going to "pull" something on them quickly and suddenly. I am preparing them for the jolt which is going to come.

Who else would do that? I repeat, Who else would do that? Well, I am going to do it! I am going to do that, because I like everyone in this body, Democrat and Republican alike, and I believe before I get through discussing this bill I shall convince my colleagues the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Utah that they are wrong, because I think the Labor Department, through Colonel Mac-Cormack, has not given them the full facts.

I should not make a statement like that unless I knew what I was talking about. It would not be right for me to do so. As a United States Senator, it would be quite improper for me to say that I believed that Colonel MacCormack, of the Labor Department, who is the head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, would deceive my colleagues unless I knew what I was talking about. I would not make a

Mr. President, unfortunately, I lost my father when I was a lad 7 years old, but I remember certain things my father told me. That was many, many years ago. He was just a plain, simple mountain man, who was born in our mountains and lived there all his life, and struggled for a livelihood during his youthful days. He had nothing. He had to work for everything he got. Finally, he came to be clerk of the court in that mountain section. But my daddy had a lot of good common sense, and that is worth more than all the book sense on earth. I remember that he said to me, "Son, do not ever say anything behind a person's back that you cannot say to his face"; and I have been working in a gymnasium ever since. [Laughter.] My father said, "Do not ever say anything about anyone unless you can say something good about him." But now I am at a point where I must say that those in the Labor Department, who are sponsoring the pending bill, have not given the facts to my friends the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Utah. In other words, they have practiced deception upon those Senators.

I believe Senators know me well enough to realize that I would not dare to make such a serious charge against that great arm of my Government unless I could back up what I have to say. So I back it up, and say, in fairness to my colleagues, that I take out that which I had up my sleeve and exhibit it to them, and warn them, and put them on their guard, so that hereafter they may take with a grain of salt the information which is given them. An effort is being made to ram this bill down the throat of Congress. what? To leave in this country 2,862 people who Colonel MacCormack has said are people of good character.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Has the Senator discussed this matter with the Commissioner General of Immigration and Naturalization?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Has the Senator seen this list of 2,800 persons, or whatever the number is, whom it is desired to admit under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Has the Senator familiarized himself with

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Are they men of character and standing?

Mr. REYNOLDS. There may be a few on the list who are of good character and standing; but I desire to advise my colleagues about this subject. We ought to know about it. I am not going to apologize for taking Senators' time and discussing the question, because I know the whole American people are more vitally interested in this subject than in anything else which will come before the Congress, and I bar nothing.

What about those 2,862 persons? Senators have heard about them. Oh, it is too bad to put them out of the country-those hardship cases! Let me show the Senate something. I am going to take only a minute on this point now, but I desire to take a couple of days on it when the opportunity shall arise, because I wish to discuss every single one of the 2,862 cases, and I shall do so if the Senators sponsoring this bill wish me to discuss it. I now issue a challenge to anyone who is sponsoring the Kerr-Coolidge bill to bring into this body any single one or 100 of the cases for which they are trying to create sympathy in this body, and let us try those cases on the floor of the Senate, before the eminent Senators, in order that they may know the truth

The whole bill is written around those 2,862 cases. There is nothing else in the bill. Get down the immigration laws from the date the first immigration law was passed, around the year 1782, and Senators will find just exactly what I tell them here today. Everything in this bill is camouflage except paragraph 3, which is so worded that looking at it at a glance one would think it to be a deportation provision, I that they came from the clouds above, clothed in raiment of statement against anyone unless I could substantiate the | whereas, as a matter of fact, if one reads and studies it, and reads between the lines, he will see that it is an importation bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to divert the Senator from what he is discussing.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is all right. I am glad to have the Senator from Pennsylvania interrupt me at any time he feels disposed to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. Inasmuch as the Senator has given some thought to the bill and to this particular question, may I ask him how the interdepartmental committee will work? Can the Senator tell me how the machinery will be put into operation to enable the interdepartmental committee to consider those two-thousand-eight-hundred-odd cases, to stay the deportation of the persons involved, or to give them permanent residence in this country?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The first mention of the interdepartmental committee is made, I believe, in section 3, according to my best recollection, and later on it is stated how the interdepartmental committee is to be constituted, by whom it is to be constituted. There is to be a representative of the Labor Department, a representative of the State Department, a representative of the Department of Justice; but the Senator from Pennsylvania knows as well as I do that when we say a representative of the Department of Labor, a representative of the Department of State, and a representative of the Department of Justice, that does not mean that Mme. Secretary Perkins, or Secretary Cordell Hull, or Attorney General Homer Cummings, is going to sit on that committee. It means that the heads of the respective departments are going to select subordinates to meet and pass upon this thing. In other words, the proponents of the bill have the audacity to ask the Senate to provide for putting a few departmental clerks in a room together to make our immigration laws. That is what is being proposed.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Is any appeal provided from the interdepartmental committee's recommendations, or from the recommendations of the officers who make up the interdepartmental committee?

Mr. REYNOLDS. None.

Mr. DAVIS. Is any appeal to the courts provided?

Mr. REYNOLDS. None whatsoever.

I state, Senators, that Colonel MacCormack had deceived my friends, and I cannot leave that subject until I prove that to Senators; and in proving that in one case I am putting my friends on guard, because I do not want to become involved in a discussion of these cases without telling them what I have done. This is what I did.

I had heard about these hardship cases; I had heard that this bill was being written around those cases; I had heard that it was desired to keep the 2,862 aliens in this country; I had heard most pathetic stories, stories which almost brought tears to my own eyes. So when I heard about some of these dreadful separations, when I heard how saintly these men were, when I heard Colonel MacCormack talking about the poor men who were involved in these hardship cases, when I heard statements as to what a crime it would be to deport them, I almost burst into tears, and I hardly knew what to do. I knew, Mr. President, there was but one thing for me to do; that was to investigate, and if the facts were as disclosed, I would not want to have any action taken that would break the heart of any innocent man, particularly one who by description had been placed upon a pedestal of ivory and clothed in raiment of radiant white. From the description given of some of the poor individuals classified amongst the 2,862 hardship cases, one would think that they had but recently descended from heaven; that they had never seen the Atlantic or the Pacific shores, but white, and with wings had alighted upon our fertile soil. That was the description given.

Now let us see whether Colonel MacCormack, who says that this bill ought to be passed, who says that it must be passed, has dealt fairly with my colleagues, the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge], whose confidence he had had up to the present time.

I am going to examine just a few of those cases; but, before doing so, the Senate may want to know how I learned about them, and I wish to say something about that.

I took 2 or 3 days off here and went to the Labor Department. I sat down at the Labor Department with a stenographer and I said to the gentleman in charge-I do not see him here today, but he was here yesterday-"Just pick out at random any cases you have." They have those 2,862 cases classified into one, two, three, and four-four categories, four classes, four shelves. No. 1 is the lily white; no. 2 is not quite so white; no. 3 is a little darker; and no. 4 is just a little grayish color.

I said to the gentleman in charge, "Now, I am here to investigate these cases; I wish you would favor me by just picking out any cases you want to." I said, "I want more lily-white cases than any other kind; I want the cases of those who have been pictured as coming from heaven above, and not those who are pictured as jumping ships and scurrying across the Mexican and Canadian borders; I do not want those who have come in on bought or counterfeit passports; give me some lily-white cases, and give me more lilywhite cases than any other kind, because I want to be fair with my colleagues. I want to give them the benefit of the doubt; I want to give them every advantage of the argument; and, if I can, I want to prove to myself that I am wrong and that they are right." So he brought in the cases. The gentlemen at the Department were very nice to me, and I want publicly to acknowledge my appreciation of their kindness and aid. They picked out cases at random. I do not think that they got out the best cases. Since I was so nice about it, I am sure that they were equally agreeable, and so I imagine they just picked cases out at random. Now, let me read one of the cases. Let us see about this matter. Here is the case of Goldborn Branch. He is one of those whom, it is said, it would be a hardship to deport and that he ought to be permitted to remain in this country. This is almost a lily-white case; the alien is almost lily white: he is in class 2. The purest, unadulterated, the whitest, the best, are in class 1; but those in class 2 are just about as good as those in class 1; as a matter of fact, it is difficult really to draw any distinction between class 1 and class 2, because they are both about in the same category; and, mind you, Mr. President, the cases in class 3 and class 4, as well as those in classes 1 and 2, were picked out and it was said the individuals concerned ought not to be deported, and they have been kept here for about 3 years in violation of the laws of this country. The Department of Labor would not deport them, although the Congress, which makes the laws of the country, made it mandatory upon the Department to deport those people. Those administering the law have violated the law; they have snubbed Congress and said, "No; we are going to do what we want to do about it; we are going to change the law because we think the law is wrong, and we are going to help in those cases in which we are interested. They are fine people, of fine character, and you must not put them out, because it would be a hardship upon them and upon the loving members of their families."

So I picked up one of those cases at random. This is the record, Senators, that was provided by Colonel MacCormack. It was the duty of Colonel MacCormack to provide the Senate with a summary of every one of those 2,862 cases. The other House of Congress demanded that Colonel MacCormack provide full information in regard to these cases involving individuals concerning whom he wanted the Congress to change the law so that they could remain here. The Department made out 2,862 summaries. Colonel MacCormack was called upon to relate the facts to the United States | the court in this case, that there were no unfavorable factors.

Congress; the facts were called for by the other House of the National Legislature; he made summary of every one of the 2,862 cases, sent them down, and had them put under lock and key under the direction of Mr. Dickinson, who is chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives, a committee of which the Honorable Joe Starnes, of Alabama, is also a member and coauthor of the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

It was the duty of Colonel MacCormack to have given the Congress the facts. That is what was called for. The Congress called for the "low-down" on each case.

Well, this man's name is Goldborn Branch; age, 34. Here is the information that Colonel MacCormack provided:

Date last entry, October 15, 1933.

From that I infer that he had been in the country before. Goldborn Branch.

That is a good name.

Whether previously in United States?

When he was asked that question he said:

Yes; originally entered in 1910. Remained here until 1914, when went to Canada. Reentered in August of 1924.

So we know he came into this country twice.

And remained here permanently since that time, except for short visits to Canada, returning from the last on the above date.

Mr. Branch evidently came into the country once-we do not know whether it was legally or illegally-and went out and came back. I am reading from Colonel MacCormack's record:

Total period in the United States to December 1935?

He has been here 15 years and 5 months. That is all right. His address is 109 Walnut Street, Buffalo, N. Y. He is fortunate in living there near Niagara Falls, in a beautiful city.

Dependent relatives in (relationship) United States?

His answer was: "Beatrice Branch and Edith, wife and daughter."

That is all right. He must be a pretty good man, judging from Colonel MacCormack's record.

'Have you any other relatives in the United States?" "No: I have no relatives in the United States." He just has a wife

"Any relations abroad?" "No; I have no relations abroad." What is your occupation?" "I am just a laborer."

That is all right. Some of the finest characters I have known in my life were plain workingmen, earning anywhere from $1.50 to $5 a day. Some of the finest characters I have known are men who earned their living by the sweat of their brow. I am proud to say that some of the best friends I have on the face of the earth are poor laboring men.

"Self-supporting?" "Oh, yes; I am self-supporting."
"Have you ever been on relief?" "Yes; I was on relief 1 year."

He is an alien, but that is all right. There are 1,500,000 other aliens on relief and many Americans on relief.

"Public charge?" "No, sir; I am all right; no public charge against me."

Now, why did they want to deport Mr. Goldborn Branch?

Grounds for deportation: He has remained in the United States for a longer time than permitted under the act of 1924 or regulations made thereunder.

They just want to deport Mr. Goldborn Branch because he has remained in the United States for a longer time than permitted under the act of 1924 or regulations made thereunder. I do not know whether or not that is fair. We do not know how he got into the country twice.

"Any unfavorable factors on report?" Colonel MacCormack said: "No; no unfavorable factors at all."

I have marked that in red ink so I would be sure to emphasize "none", because the Department of Labor has stated in the report where they were supposed to give all the facts and be frank and fair and honest with the Members of this body, That is all right. He must be a pretty good fellow. He has a wife and daughter and is a good, hard-working man and laborer.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, were the wife and daughter admitted legally in that case?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course. Here is the colonel's record. There is nothing the matter with this.

No. 13-and I hope there is nothing unlucky in no. 13 for Mr Branch

No. 13. Favorable factors or reports: Citizenship of wife and daughter.

The report reveals that they are self-supporting.

14. Reason for stay: Deportation would involve hardship. 15. Date stayed: March 12, 1934.

They are not going to deport him. They stayed the deportation because it would be a hardship to deport him.

Date of last investigation: November 30, 1935.

I rather agree with other Members of the Senate that this man ought to be permitted to stay here. There is no evidence in Colonel MacCormack's report that he entered this country illegally. There is no evidence in the report that the man had ever been arrested for any offense. To the contrary, Colonel MacCormack says there is no public charge against him. There is no evidence in the report except that this man is a hard-working laboring man who earns his living by the sweat of his brow, and fortunately he has a good wife and daughter who are self-supporting, and therefore it would be no hardship upon them if they supported him.

I am a soft-hearted man, and I know most other Senators are soft-hearted, so we should let Mr. Goldborn Branch stay if we base our judgment on the record. Colonel MacCormack says he has a fine record.

Mind you, Mr. President and Senators, and let those who read the RECORD take notice also, the Labor Department has asked us not to deport Goldborn Branch and 2,861 others on the information that Colonel MacCormack provides us. Let us see whether or not Colonel MacCormack has been fair with this body. Let us see whether Colonel MacCormack and his associates have dealt fairly with my colleagues.

Let us see whether or not deception has been practiced upon the Members of this legislative body. The lawyers of the Senate, particularly, will agree with me that deception sometimes may be practiced more cunningly by withholding the facts than by distorting the facts; and I say deception has been more cunningly practiced in all these cases by withholding the facts than by distorting the facts.

What are they?

The Senate has heard what Colonel MacCormack said about Goldborn Branch; and I am going to assume that we are all in agreement, from Colonel MacCormack's records, that Goldborn Branch and his family should be permitted to stay here-a hard-working laboring man who had never been arrested in his life, who had never been in any trouble. From the records, he came into this country legally and had never violated a law of this country.

I went over to the Department. I wanted to find out about this lily-white gentleman. Class 1 is the lily-white cases. Class 2 is composed of those not quite so white. Class 3 is composed of those of a little darker hue. Class 4 is composed of those who are a little gray. Let us find out what the records show. I have here information with which Colonel MacCormack should have provided this body, because I know that my colleagues are entitled to the facts when it comes to passing any kind of legislation.

Goldborn Branch, 109 Walnut Street, Buffalo, N. Y.: Let us see if this gentleman is so lily white.

He is a West Indian negro. He came here illegally by way of Canada. Colonel MacCormack did not tell us that he came into the country illegally. He was married in Canada. He does not know where his wife is. Colonel MacCormack did not tell us that this man had deserted his wife, or his wife had deserted him. I am inclined to believe it was the latter, from the record that will follow. This is the lily-white gentleman who was painted so gloriously in raiment of white and placed upon a pedestal of ivory by Colonel MacCormack and his associates.

Goldborn Branch has a common-law wife. You all know what a common-law wife is-a woman with whom a man lives without being legally wedded to her. He has a commonlaw wife to whom an illegitimate child was born. The record does not show the word "illegitimate", but I use that in preference to another word. He is living with his commonlaw wife and brought her in to this country illegally. Listen to that, Senators! Not only did he himself come into the country illegally, in violation of our laws, but he brought this woman into the country in violation of our laws-the woman with whom he was living, his common-law wifefrom Canada, for what purpose? For immoral purposes!

Colonel MacCormack did not tell us that this man's legal and lawful wife had been deserted by him, or she had deserted him. Colonel MacCormack did not tell us that this man slipped into our country in violation of our laws, and had been here for 15 years in violation of those laws. Colonel MacCormack did not tell the Senate that this man had a common-law wife, a mistress with whom he is living, by whom he had begotten an illegitimate child. Colonel Mac-Cormack did not tell us that this sweet-smelling violet had had the audacity and the disrespect for the laws of your country and my country and our country to slip his mistress across the border in violation of our laws. It shows what disrespect foreigners have for the immigration laws

Senators who have traveled world-wide know as well as I do that foreigners do not give a hoot about the immigration laws of this country. They laugh at us; they think we are the biggest "simps" on earth, and I am beginning to believe we are.

Let us see. How in the world did the authorities get in touch with this man's record? Here is the record. Colonel MacCormack did not reveal this to us.

Goldborn Branch was arrested once, on complaint-why. my heavens!-was arrested once upon complaint of his common-law wife, for beating her! She slipped into the country in violation of the law; and after Goldborn Branch got her over here, and kept her here in violation of the law, and lived in adultery with her, what did he do? He beat her, and that is how the immigration authorities got in touch with him.

That is one of these immigrants. That is a lily-white one. I again challenge those who sponsor this bill to go to the Labor Department and seek out any one of the 2,862 cases of persons whom Colonel MacCormack has said ought not to be deported, and bring it into this Chamber, and let us discuss it on the floor of the Senate. I, therefore, at this hour, have brought to your attention a "lily white" case; and later it will not be my pleasure, but it will be my privilege and my duty to this body to show up the real facts, and to reveal the truth about these cases.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to my colleague from my sister State of Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator whether Colonel MacCormack reported the facts the Senator first read concerning this immigrant.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will state to the Senator that hearings on the Kerr-Coolidge bill were being held by the Senate committee. Hearings on the Kerr-Coolidge bill were being held in the House of Representatives by a committee of which my colleague from Alabama, Mr. Joe Starnes, the coauthor of the bill I advocate, is a member; and there came up the question of the passage of this bill which interests itself fundamentally with changing the laws so as to keep in this country, right now, 2,862 persons.

Mr. McKELLAR. And this is one of them?

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, the House wished to ascertain who these 2,862 men were; and so, by way of a resolution, they requested that Colonel MacCormack, the head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, make up a summary, a digest of each and every one of those 2,862 cases, and provide the House with the facts, the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about each case, so that the gentlemen over there, who were just as much interested as we are, could ascertain whether or not these were what some persons have been pleased to term and classify as "hardship" cases.

So, in answer to the Senator's inquiry, I will say that the first report I read, which painted Goldborn Branch as such an angel and a fine, law-abiding citizen, an American citizen from all reports, is what Colonel MacCormack sent over here; and the second report I read is what the Department's own records show. I know that is the case, because I went there and looked at the records with my own eyes.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, as I understand the Senator, the first report is the one which was handed to the Senator by the head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the second report is from the Senator's personal examination of the facts? The Senator is making the second report?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir. In other words, in order that that may be quite plain, the first report I read is a copy of a report which was sent by Colonel MacCormack to the House. It is one of the 2,862 reports furnished, in which he was requested to state the facts, to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and reveal the situation to us.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator if that is an isolated case, or are there other cases in which the facts were not as reported?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I say to the Senator, by no means is that an isolated case. During the course of the several days I spent at the Department of Labor—at which time, I must be candid and frank to state, I was very generously received and courteously treated by those in charge—I investigated 30 or 40 cases.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I am of the opinion that the Commissioner General of Immigration and Naturalization, Mr. MacCormack, is dependent entirely upon subordinates for the information that is furnished him. I do not presume he has had opportunity to check these matters as the Senator has,

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course; I dare say Colonel MacCormack had his assistants looking up the cases, but I venture to say that when those reports were furnished, Colonel MacCormack, knowing their importance, most assuredly scanned them, if he did not read them carefully, because I cannot bring myself to believe that a man holding the responsible position occupied by Colonel MacCormack would willfully send to this body and the other body reports which are absolutely distorted, erroneous, and do not give the real facts.

Mr. DAVIS. I cannot quite understand, if the procedure is being followed now which was followed many years ago, how that would get by, because first the Assistant Commissioner would have charge of it, and then usually it would go to a board of review, comprised of five very able men, men thoroughly familiar with the immigration laws, and if it passed those five it then would go to the Commissioner's table. So I cannot understand why all this information has not been given out.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I cannot understand it. The Senator from Pennsylvania was Secretary of Labor for a number of years, was he not?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. The Secretary of Labor is dependent entirely upon his subordinates.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, the present Secretary of Labor depended entirely upon the Commissioner General of Immigration and Naturalization,

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall yield to the Senator from Massachusetts in just a moment.

It is beyond my comprehension, it is beyond my sense of fair play, how under heaven a man holding the responsible position which is occupied by Colonel MacCormack would permit a thing like this to be brought to the attention of the public, would permit a summons to come calling for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and the plain facts, and then have such a distorted report sent in.

Mr. DAVIS. Before deportation, it is necessary to issue what is termed a warrant. Then an immigration inspector is sent; the inspector holds a hearing and develops all the material and sends it in for the record.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is correct.

Mr. DAVIS. Then, before a deportation can take place, the Assistant Secretary or the Secretary of Labor must approve what the Commissioner General of Immigration and Naturalization recommends.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is correct, and I thank the Senator for his contribution. Before he takes his seat, permit me to ask him another question. The Senator was Secretary of Labor for a number of years, and I should like to inquire of him whether he recalls just at this juncture how many immigrants have come into this country since 1920.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I do not recall the exact number who have come in, but I have been making some pencil memoranda here which I think are correct, and I shall be glad to give the figures to the Senate.

Prior to the passage of the restrictive act, for which most of the Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber who are present voted, from 800,000 to 1,000,000 were coming to this country annually.

Mr. REYNOLDS. A million a year!

Mr. DAVIS. More than that entered in one of the years, immediately after the war. During the war the immigration act and other acts of the kind were set aside, but prior to the war more than that were entering the United States. If we had gone on for 14 years without the restriction acts, 14,000,000 immigrants would have entered. I will tell the Senator how many have come in since 1922, since the first act.

In 1922, immigration was limited, and there arrived in the country 309,556.

Then, because of the 3 percent law, those coming from Canada and South America were not excluded, and many came in via South America. In 1923 some 522,919 came in.

In 1924, 706,896 came in.

Then there was inserted in the immigration law a residential clause as to Canada and South America, which reduced the number in 1925 to 294,000.

In 1926, there entered 304,000.

In 1927, 335,175 came in.

In 1928, 307,255 entered.

In 1929, 279,678 came in. In 1930, 241,700 came in.

Then, in 1931, under the Hoover administration, the total number permissible under the quota law was 150,000, but immigrants came in from Canada and South America and Mexico, nonquota countries. That is why the number increased so greatly.

In 1931, it was limited, and the number coming in to get visas, 10 percent of the quota, amounted to 97,000.

In 1932, 35,000 came in.

In 1933, under the same limitations, the ruling made under the Hoover administration has not been changed—the number was 23,068.

In 1934, it was 29,470.

In 1935, it was 34,956.

The total since 1922, of restricted immigration, was 3,522,190.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Since what date?

Mr. DAVIS. Since 1922.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It was a number greater than the population of the city of Chicago.

Mr. DAVIS. Over that period of time, from 1922 to 1932, in 10 years, 192,346 immigrants were rejected. In the last 3 years 16,469 have been rejected, making during that particular period a total of rejections at the ports of 208,815.

There were deported by the warrant procedure, such as I outlined just a moment ago, during the first 10 years, from 1922 to 1932, 17,795; and in 1933, 1934, and 1935, there were deported 6,942, or a total of 24,737. That was the number of criminals deported. Of the others, the number was 162,664.

Then there were expulsions without warrants. I remember that many came in from Mexico, and we did not have jails enough on the border to take care of them. I forget just the number we were feeding, but a tremendous expense was involved. I remember on one occasion some Chinamen were deported. Some $45,000 had been saved up by the Department, and it took every dollar of the $45,000 to deport from the country those Chinamen who had entered illegally.

The expulsions without warrant numbered 120,669 during the time referred to. The total expulsions amounted to 248,519.

These are figures I have taken from the reports of the Commissioner General of Immigration for this particular period.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the information is quite pertinent and extremely interesting, and I assure the Senator that I am very grateful for his contribution.

I am pleased now to yield to my friend and colleague the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as I view what the Senator has just presented to the Senate, he has raised an issue which is apart from the merits or demerits of the pending bill, and I should like to ask the Senator two or three questions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. First of all, I understand that the first record the Senator read, which we will call the limited or codified record, was copied from a report sent by the Department of Labor to the House of Representatives upon their request for a statement of the facts in each of these so-called good character deportation cases.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Am I to understand that the second record which the Senator read he himself acquired from the files of the Department of Labor?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The second record I read, I acquired.

Mr. WALSH. From the files.

Mr. REYNOLDS. From the files of the Department of Labor.

Mr. WALSH. So that whoever compiled the record that was sent to the House of Representatives did not state in the compilation all of the facts, and particularly the facts showing the absence of good moral character upon the part of one of these aliens?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me it is the duty of someone to find out who the official is who willfully or negligently kept from the Congress of the United States the full statement of those facts.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely right. I think the Senator in those few words has made one of the most vital and important statements that could possibly be made in this RECORD, because the statement which the Senator has made goes to the very heart of the whole matter.

Mr. WALSH. If the officials who are compiling these records are going to proceed to administer the discretionary power they are to be granted in this bill in the manner in which they made this RECORD, the Congress may well hesitate before giving this discretionary power.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is absolutely right about that matter. I know the Senator has the interest of America at heart. The time has come when we must sympathize with America as well as sympathize with the alien.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator whether he has any information as to how many of the two-thousandeight-hundred-and-some-odd cases are not worthy cases, and how many, perhaps, are worthy cases?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It would be impossible for me to answer the Senator's question precisely by way of providing any definite figure; but I will say that if I am to judge of the entire 2,862 cases by what the records revealed in some 20 or 30 cases which I examined, then out of the whole 2,862 cases there are certainly not over 300 which are deserving of consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there any reason why the Department cannot furnish the Senate or the House, or both, the exact facts about each and every one of the 2,862 cases?

Mr. REYNOLDS. There must be a reason, because a resolution was introduced in the lower House of Congress asking | follows:

for the facts; and instead of getting the bald-faced truth, instead of getting the facts which Senators desired and which Representatives desired, those from whom the facts were required deceived us by eliminating the facts and distorting the facts in this particular case.

This afternoon I am going to refer to another case, because I see that Senators are interested in what I am discussing. Again I wish to say that I have no apologies to make to any Senator here or to the Senate for taking time on this matter, because I feel that I am doing Senators a favor. I know how busy they are. I know how busy I am. It is absolutely impossible for a man to do all the work he is called upon to do as a Senator. I appreciate that, and I appreciate the condition other Senators are in. Some of us have an average of a hundred persons calling upon us every day, unfortunate persons seeking employment, and it grieves us that we cannot find employment for them. I grieve every day because I cannot provide a job for every single one of the 100 or more persons who visit my office every day; and I grieve seriously because I know that there are about 5.000.000 or 6,000,000 aliens in this country who do not care anything about the United States, who are taking the jobs of my constituents and other Senators' constituents. Why should I not grieve about such a condition?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to my friend the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Mc-Kellar] a while ago asked how many of the cases are similar to those specifically mentioned. I wish to call attention to the fact that every one of the 2,862 individuals referred to is in this country in violation of some law.

Mr. McKELLAR. All the 2,862 persons who are being kept here by the authorities are kept here in violation of the law?

Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; they are here in violation of the law. The present law gives the Department discretion to keep them in the country. In my judgment we ought not to do that. If aliens violate a law, they ought to be deported. If they come here illegally, we are not responsible for that. If they are here illegally, it may work some hardship to deport them, but we are not responsible for it. It is their responsibility; and when they come to this country under those circumstances, in violation of law, they ought to be sent back to the country from which they came.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from the State of Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrogate the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis], the former Secretary of Labor? Did I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania, in speaking a moment ago in response to the Senator from North Carolina, to refer to an instance where a Chinaman had come into this country, we will say illegally, with $45,000, and that the Government took that money away from him?

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Senator entirely misunderstood me.

Mr. LEWIS. What should I have understood the Senator to say?

Mr. DAVIS. At one time we deported a number of Chinamen, and it cost the Government $45,000 to do it.

Mr. LEWIS. Did not the Senator say one of the Chinamen had $45,000, which was taken from him?

Mr. DAVIS. No, Mr. President. The Labor Department had saved that much money out of the appropriation; and when the end of the year arrived, it had all been absorbed by reason of sending a number of Chinamen back to China.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to my colleague from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Before the Senator leaves the subject of the response of the Secretary of Labor to the resolution of the House of Representatives of August 23, 1935, I wish to call to his attention House Document No. 392, which purports to contain a letter from the Secretary of Labor, as Department of Labor, Office of the Secretary, Washington, January 15, 1936.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: In accordance with the resolution of the House of Representatives on August 23, 1935, I have the honor to submit-

(a) List of all cases by number and name in which deportation has been stayed up to and including December 31, 1935.

(b) Complete file on each case.

(c) Summary of file and report on each case.

(d) Report of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

Very truly yours.

FRANCES PERKINS.

Did the Senator from North Carolina find that this statement, "(b) complete file on each case", was an inaccurate

Mr. REYNOLDS. I absolutely did not find a complete statement as to the cases.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the Senator find a complete file on each case?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I did not.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. DAVIS. May I say to the Senator from Illinois that after the passage of the restrictive act there were such violations by those who were bootlegging immigrants that we fined steamship companies many millions of dollars for bringing aliens into the country in violation of the law. I remember at that particular time aliens were bootlegged, not only by ships through the sea routes but by airplane. It was estimated at one time that a little Chinese girl could have been sold in Chinatown in San Francisco for $5,000 if she could get into the country. It was a very lucrative business.

Mr. LEWIS. An interesting statement, I confess.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REYNOLDS. With pleasure.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator said he has examined some 30 or 40 of these cases out of a total of 2,832. Mr. REYNOLDS. I think so.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. How did the Senator arrive at the particular cases which he chose to examine?

Mr. REYNOLDS. When I went to the Department of Labor, there were two or three cases in which I was particularly interested. There were two or three cases in particular which I was anxious to bring to the attention of the Senate. When I went to the Bureau and walked into the file room, I was told, "There are the files." I did not know anything about the cases and those who were assisting me knew nothing about the cases. I merely picked out at random several cases which we took into the library where we could work without being disturbed. I told the gentleman who had been so courteous and kind to us that I would appreciate it if he would pick out any cases, 15 or 20 of the lily-white cases, and bring them to me. He picked them out at random. To try to go through 2,800 cases would take a long time, but he picked out 15 or 20 cases and brought the records to us, a great stack of them. We put them on the desk. I had a stenographer there and we went through them.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let us assume the Senator examined 30 or 40 cases.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; just at random.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator has discussed one of them?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. How many of those cases which the Senator examined does he feel are of sufficient interest to discuss?

Mr. REYNOLDS. They are all of great interest, for the reason that the whole bill is built around the 2,862 cases.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am trying to get at percentages or proportions. Of the 40 cases which the Senator examined, how many does he think should be discussed?

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, I may be a little bit prejudiced, because I think anybody who has violated the laws of our country in coming here-

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But leaving out of consideration that element?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Leaving that out of consideration, there might be 1 in the 30 or 40 cases that would be deserving of consideration by this body.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator feels that 39 out of the 40 are not worthy of staying in the country?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I think that is true. Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Because of acts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Acts committed here, violation of the law in coming here, disposition toward the Government, and so forth. I shall be glad to read very briefly just another case picked at random.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator read one that has not been selected? Pick one at random.

Mr. REYNOLDS. None of these cases was selected.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I may say to the Senator from Washington that the hangman's job is a gentleman's job compared to that of the Commissioner General of Immigration and the Secretary of Labor in many of these cases because they are so heart appealing. It just tears one's heartstrings to have to make a decision. However, the question is, as was said by a very distinguished man now on a high court, "What is the law?" One has to follow the law. I would not want to be in the place of the Commissioner General of Immigration and have to accept the responsibility of admitting those 2.800 persons.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in answer by way of actual data to the inquiry kindly directed to me by my friend from Washington, let me take up another case picked at random, just as I picked them at the Bureau, and let us see what it is.

This gentleman's name is George G. Grenier, age 38, a young man. He entered this country July 21, 1926. In answer to an inquiry he said he had been in the United States before; a total period in the United States of 9 years and 3 months. Mind you, Mr. President, I am reading from a record provided the Members of this body and the House of Representatives by the Commissioner of Immigration.

The address of this man is 1213 East Fifty-third Street. Chicago, Ill. He comes from the home town of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]-a fine city.

Dependent relatives in the United States? Yes; a wife and son.

George is all right up to that point, according to the colo-

Any other relatives in the United States? "No"-

Says George.

Any relatives abroad? "No"-

Says George-

"I have no relatives abroad."
"I am a painting contractor." What is your occupation? "I am a painting Are you self-supporting? "Oh, yes, indeed"

Says George-

"I am self-supporting." Have you ever been on relief? "No, sir; never."

George must be a good man. He has a wife and child, and there is no evidence that he got into this country illegally; no evidence of his doing anything that was contrary to good morals or good citizenship.

Have you ever been a public charge? "No, sir"-

Says George.

Here is the colonel's statement as to the grounds for deportation—that he is in the United States in violation of the Immigration Act of 1924. There we do find he violated the law. The colonel further says that at the time of his entry he was not in possession of unexpired immigration visa.

What are the unfavorable factors of the report? Colonel MacCormick says the unfavorable factors are that the alienwait a minute! Unfavorable factors? Colonel MacCormack reports that this man has a bad moral record. There must be some mistake here, because a man with a bad moral record who has violated the law in slipping into the country has been held here. That is all the colonel says, that he has a bad moral record; that he admitted he is the father of an illegitimate child whom he later adopted. That is the only redeeming feature I can see about him; but if he was man enough to adopt his illegitimate child, I have more respect for him than I otherwise would have.

His statements as to birth and military service are ridiculous.

That is what the Immigration Service says. Despite that, the Immigration Service says this alien is a fine man. He will contribute to the future generations of America. He will help us build up America and continue her as the greatest Nation on earth. We must keep him here to help us do it.

Here are the favorable factors:

United States citizenship of wife and child.

Well, let us see:

Reason for stay-

That is, the reason the Department of Labor has for staying the man's deportation; that is to say, for keeping him here when the law says he must be put out. They say—to permit voluntary departure, to prevent separation of family.

Well, after all, that fellow is not so bad. I suppose to err is human. I do not suppose any of us in this body, even, could rise and say, "I have never committed sin." Very few—none, can do it. We all have our faults. So, according to Colonel MacCormack's report, this man is a pretty good fellow.

Let us see what the record shows. Let us see whether or not Colonel MacCormack has been fair with these gentlemen whose confidence he has betrayed. Let us see whether Colonel MacCormack has given us the facts. Let us see what the facts are.

Mr. George Gaston Grenier; he has a good name.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, what is the Senator reading?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am reading from the records of the Department of Labor that I examined.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. What the Senator has read is what?

Mr. REYNOLDS. What I have read is the record provided this body and the other House of Congress by Colonel MacCormack and the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Upon that record, I say to the Senator from Washington and his colleague, Colonel MacCormack would have this body of lawmakers pass upon the question as to whether or not that man should be deported; and if Senators should pass upon the question from this report of Colonel MacCormack, being big-hearted men, as they are, they probably would say, "Well, let the poor fellow stay." But it has been my duty—my sworn duty as a Member of this body—to reveal the truth and to bring the truth to the attention of my colleagues.

Let us see about George Gaston Grenier. Here are the

The files of the Immigration and Naturalization Service show that Grenier entered the country illegally in 1926. When he came into this country, he violated our immigration laws by slipping in here.

Oh, my goodness! I did not know George was so bad. The records show that he was a deserter. That is as bad as being a perjurer—worse than being a perjurer in time of war, when his country is in peril. George Grenier, bearing that good name, was a deserter from the French Army.

How much respect have you for a deserter from the American Army?

Oh, my goodness! The records show that Grenier stole an airplane. He deserted from the Army, and stole an airplane. He is not only a deserter but he is a thief.

Oh, my goodness! The records show that he gave false testimony in applying for United States citizenship.

A deserter! Was that mentioned in Colonel MacCormack's report? It was not. A thief, who stole an airplane! Was that mentioned in Colonel MacCormack's report? It was not. I am talking loud because I wish the world to hear what I have to say about this matter.

The records show that Grenier gave false testimony in applying for United States citizenship. He is a perjurer and a liar. Was that mentioned in Colonel MacCormack's report? It was not. Colonel MacCormack was called upon by a resolution of the House of Representatives to give to the men who make the laws of this great country the facts, the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and he has practiced deception upon my friends here and my friends in the other body by withholding the truth, which is sometimes worse than distorting the truth.

I hope that is all about George. I do not see how he could be any worse. He deserted his army; he deserted his country; he stole an airplane; he committed perjury; he lied.

Oh, my! The records show that he was convicted of a bastardy charge, and that he admits certain relations with various and sundry other people. I am not going to read all about that; it is too bad.

The Department kept this thief, this perjurer, this deserter here. They say he ought not to be deported. The only reason in the world why we ever let immigrants into this country, Senators, is for the benefit of the country. We do not admit imimgrants for the benefit of the immigrants, but the idea is to let immigrants into the country to benefit the country. How is it going to benefit the country to let a man like that stay here? Nobody would dare say that man should be left here because he would contribute to the moral uplift, or the physical development, or the inspiration of the younger people who are coming on—a deserter, a thief, a perjurer!

This is what the Department's records say—I copied this information out of the records:

The decision in the case of Grenier, judging by the files of the Department, rests to a great extent upon a report—submitted by the Immigrant's Protective League.

Overnight I hope you gentlemen will find out something about the Immigrant's Protective League. If you do not find out, I shall make it my business to tell you something about them; but it is easy for you to look them up and see what they are doing. They have recommended that there be kept in this country, as an inspiration for the present youth of the land and those who are to follow, a man who is a perjurer, a deserter, and a thief.

Why, here is something more about George.

Grenier, according to the records, made two illegal entries. He not only slipped in here once in violation of law but he slipped in here twice, his first arrival being dated back in 1919. At that time he came into the country—why, listen to this, Senators—he did not just slip over the border. He did not just jump ship. He did worse than that. Listen to what he did: At that time he came into the country under false papers which he had purchased.

My heavens, Senators! Are you going to say that a man who turned his back on the country of his birth, under whose flag he had enjoyed protection; a man who stole an airplane, who is a perjurer and a thief; a man who went so far as to purchase false papers to get into this country; and a man who, in addition to that, violated the laws the second time to get into this country, is a man whom you want here as an example for yours sons and daughters and the younger generation who are growing up, looking for inspiration from the legislators of the country?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am curious to know the present status of these 2,862 aliens. Are they detained? Are they in jail? Are they out on bond?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Some of them have been released on their own recognizance; that is to say, without bond. Some of them have been required to give a very small bond, which they can skip. I dare say that if there were an effort made to round them all up tomorrow not half of them could be found, because experience has shown that to be the case.

George and Goldborn and these other fellows are waiting for us here to pass a law saying that they are people of good character and that their presence here will contribute something to the United States. Let us see if there is anything else about George.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I wanted to ask the Senator whether in his travels around the world he has found that any other country has been as generous to aliens as the United States has been?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I consider myself as fortunate in having been provided the opportunity from time to time, in a sense, to travel on all the continents of the world, and many of the countries on the continents of the world.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt right there?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am merely trying to get at the facts. The testimony before our committee, as given by Colonel MacCormack and other representatives of the Department, was to the effect that the United States was the only nation in the world which did not permit an administrative department the discretionary right to pass upon cases of this kind. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania know whether that statement is correct?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may state that I am providing myself with data upon that subject.

Mr. DAVIS. I may say, if the Senator from North Carolina will yield, that if I should go to the town in which I was born I would not be in that town 15 minutes before I would be notified that I must appear before one of the agents of the minister of labor in order that he might ascertain how long I intended to be there, and whether I intended to seek work; and if I were fortunate enough to secure work, I would not get my coat off before the minister of labor would come and tell me that I had better be going back to the country of which I was a citizen.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield again?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That may be true, but we are here considering a specific proposition, the right under the law of an administrative department to have the discretion to pass upon this type of cases, and it seems to me the important thing in discussing this question, and making comparisons with other nations, is to find how other nations pass upon this precise question, so long as we want to make a comparison.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is exactly correct, and I am indeed very happy that he made the point, because I know something about that, and I have some material upon it, some data I have gathered; and in the course of my argument pertaining to this matter, which is of more importance than anything else, perhaps of more importance to those who may soon be called upon to fill our shoes, I shall be very happy to provide the Senator with any information I may have in my possession on that very pertinent question.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I was called out on business this afternoon and was denied the privilege of hearing most of the Senator's speech. I assume it is his purpose to offer his bill as a substitute for the pending bill, and I wonder whether he can now tell me, so that I may have the picture clear in my mind as the argument proceeds, whether or not the grounds for expulsion from the country provided in the so-called Reynolds bill and in the Kerr-Coolidge bill are practically identical, and whether the difference between the two bills is largely in the procedure set up, and in removing the discretionary power from a departmental official which is given in the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. They are precisely dissimilar, and in further argument I shall compare the two bills, and I propose to dissect each section of the Kerr-Coolidge bill and explain the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

Mr. BONE. I note in the bill the Senator sponsors that the President is given authority, in the event he formally declares an emergency to exist, to take into custody all aliens subsisting upon public or private relief and deport them forthwith to the countries of their origin. In connection with that provision I should like to ask the Senator whether he has any figures showing the number of aliens in this country who are on public and private relief.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad the Senator brought that to my attention. If the Senator will be good enough to let me answer that in detail as soon as I have finished the case of George Grenier I shall be obliged to him, because I am afraid that if we enter into a discussion of the Senator's question now those who read the Record will not be able to carry George in their minds as I want them to do.

Mr. BONE. Border lines in Europe have been obliterated as a result of the World War, and it occurred to my mind just now that the matter of determining citizenship might present some difficult questions, if not irresistible barriers in the way of enforcement of the law, because a man might have been a Russian citizen, and now be a subject of Lithuania, or some other of the border countries which were created.

Mr. DAVIS. The country which took over the particular territory from which an alien came is the country to which he is usually deported.

Mr. BONE. When the Senator from North Carolina makes the explanation I should like to have him make clear, if he knows—possibly he has examined that phase not only of the law, but that phase of the controversy which might inevitably arise in the operation of the law—what might happen if those countries refused to accept these people. They cannot hang suspended in midair, like Mahomet's coffin; we have not a Devils Island to which to send them; and what would happen if other countries refused to accept them? Where would we send them and what would be done? Here is almost a Draconian code. It is an iron-clad provision, with no exceptions, and I am wondering whether the Senator has made plain or could make plain what we should do.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have given considerable thought to that.

Now, Mr. President, I understand there is a desire that we conclude the session for today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senate adjourns, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. Do other countries, from which Americans have to be deported, pay for their deportation?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. About what does it cost the United States to deport aliens each year?

Mr. DAVIS. We used to figure about $100 a person.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in order that my line of thought may not be broken, I desire to read one paragraph, and then I shall be very happy to defer my argument, in accord with the suggestion made to me, with the understanding that I may have the floor tomorrow.

I was speaking of Mr. George Grenier. According to the records, he made two illegal entries into this country, his first arrival being in 1919, and at that time he came into the country under false papers which he had purchased. He was ordered deported to France in 1932, a country from whose army he had deserted, but he managed to keep from being deported, and eventually his deportation warrant was canceled, at the suggestion of the board of review of the Department of Labor, which gave considerable weight to the report of the welfare agency which examined his history.

One of the moving considerations which led the welfare agency in its report to recommend leniency in the case of Grenier was that if he should be returned to France he would face court martial.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, on the 28th day of May 1935, the Senate passed Senate bill 2512, to require registration of persons engaged in influencing legislation or Government contracts and activities. The bill went to the body at the other end of the Capitol. On the 27th of March 1936, that body passed House bill 11663, relating to subjects closely analogous to those dealt with in the Senate bill which I have

The House bill is on the Vice President's desk; and I ask that the Vice President lay it before the Senate in order that I may make a motion to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am informed that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] does not object to this procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is correctly informed.

Mr. AUSTIN. And, representing him here now, I do not

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Do I understand that is the antilobbying

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator intend to have the bill taken up tonight?

Mr. ROBINSON. My intention is to substitute the text of the Senate bill for the text of the House bill by way of amendment, and then ask for a conference.

Mr. COUZENS. And then ask for a conference?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. But there is no intention tonight to do other than provide for a conference?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is all I could do. Mr. COUZENS. I do not wish to have any bill passed tonight. I wish to object to any bill being passed tonight. There may be a controversy with respect to the bill which passed each House, and I wish to know where that difference of opinion is to be straightened out. I should like to have it straightened out at some other place than in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. It cannot be straightened out at any other place than in conference.

Mr. COUZENS. Then I shall object to the substitution. Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator should give some consideration to the matter.

The Senate, as I stated, passed its bill last year. The House agencies did not take up the Senate bill. They proceeded on an entirely different bill—a House bill. House passed that bill. Now the Senate and the House bills have crossed each other, and the only way to get legislation is to pursue the course I am suggesting.

If anyone wishes to defeat legislation on the subject, it may be accomplished by preventing consideration of the House bill. I think the Senator from Michigan does not wish to do that. My motion would, in effect, substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. We considered the Senate bill at length, and I think it is entitled to consideration in conference.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to have the House bill go to the same committee which handled the so-called Black bill, and let them consider it and report it back to the Senate. In other words, we do not have an opportunity through this procedure to learn of the differences between the two bills and to pass upon them independently. In view of the fact that the House bill has been on the Vice President's desk for quite a considerable time, it seems to me the proper procedure would be to refer the matter to the same committee which handled the Black bill, and let the committee report back to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Suppose the Senate committee should take the course that the House committee took. Some of | day, April 4, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

these days the Senate is going to quit yielding to the House in its policy of refusing to give consideration to Senate bills and passing entirely different bills on the same subject after the Senate bills are over there. I think the Senator from Michigan ought not to put himself and the Senate in the attitude of refusing to give the Senate an opportunity to have its bill considered by the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Of course, the request I am making is subject to an objection. I shall not make a motion at this time, however. I ask, if an objection is made, that the matter remain on the Vice President's desk, and at an opportune time I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly, I shall have no objection to that. If the Senator wishes to proceed with the consideration of the House bill, I am fully in accord with that procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON. I asked that that be done.

Mr. COUZENS. But the Senator wishes to substitute another bill and have it go to conference. I am not willing to have that procedure followed.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate passed the bill which I am asking to substitute for the House bill. The Senate had its opportunity to consider that bill, deliberated on it, and passed it. Now the Senator from Michigan wishes to have us consider it a second time; and I suppose if we should consider it and pass it as a Senate bill and send it over to the House, and the House should pursue the course that it did in this instance, he would wish to have the Senate consider it a third time.

The only way a Senate bill can have consideration is by the course I am suggesting. I ask unanimous consent for

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the House bill be considered and then will ask that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I shall move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and substitute the text of the Senate bill therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COUZENS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will continue to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Claude C. Badeaux to be postmaster at Garden City, La.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the first nomination in order on the calendar will be stated.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Public Health Service on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, nominations in the Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Satur-

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 3, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who alone gavest us the breath of life and alone canst keep alive in us the holy desires Thou dost impart, we beseech Thee, for Thy compassion's sake, to sanctify all our thoughts and endeavors that we may neither begin an action without pure intention nor continue it without Thy blessing. And grant that having the eyes of the mind open to behold things invisible and unseen we may in heart be inspired by Thy wisdom and in work be upheld by Thy strength, and in the end be accepted of Thee as Thy faithful servants. Let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1424. An act to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11691) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes."

INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ACTIVITIES

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, by direction of that committee, filed a report to accompany House Resolution 475, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

The resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 475 (Rept. No. 2366)

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 234, joint resolution authorizing the Senate Special Committee on Investigation of Lobbying Activities to employ counsel, in connection with certain legal proceedings, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVAL AVIATION SERVICE

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on two different subjects. The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, when aviation was quite new in the Navy and most of the naval aviators were junior officers, it became necessary to train as pilots and observers a number of high-ranking officers for command purposes.

It was never intended that this practice should be continued, and at the time that the Navy Department first explained to Congress the necessity for qualifying a few such high-ranking officers, Congress was assured that by the present time the need would have disappeared. Yet the Navy Department keeps right on sending senior captains and commanders to Pensacola. Here they are made "Mex" aviators, and then placed in command of and give orders to real naval aviators who grew up in and made naval aviation.

There are today a sufficient number of naval aviators of every rank with more than 10 years' experience as pilots to command every naval air shore station and all of the present and future airplane carriers and tenders. Therefore there is no need to place in command of these vital national-defense forces of the air any officer who has not had at least 10 years' active experience as a qualified pilot. To select high-ranking line officers, send them to the Pensacola Naval Air Training Station, and give them wings—because that is just what is done; the wings are a present to such officers—is making a mockery of the law that requires trained aviators for the command posts.

It is in spirit and effect a violation of the intent of the law and rank favoritism. It destroys the morale of the younger officers who enter aviation in the Navy as a career. After years of arduous duties as pilots, during which time they are required not only to keep up with the advancements and progress of aviation, but also to pass all the professional examinations of their brother line officers, these aviators expect command posts, only to be shoved aside by seniors who are hurriedly rushed through Pensacola, labeled pilots, and given all of the best aviation commands.

Such officers of necessity know very little about aviation, and nothing from experience of the problems of actual aerial combat. Most of them could not even fly airplanes let alone lead a massed flight of planes. Yet it is these officers who are given the high command of our combat naval air forces. We place not only the success of our aerial defense of the Navy but the very lives of our real pilots in the hands of officers who know nothing about the duties for which they are given command.

The actual pilots know that they are being ordered into the air and their maneuvers planned by officers who do not understand what they are ordering or planning.

This hardly makes for the high order of morale which is so essential in any military operation, especially in the air. Permitting aviation to be dominated by men who are not real airmen retards progress and threatens the ultimate success of our naval air operations.

The theory of the bureau chiefs is that naval officers must progress to the command of large ships by commanding small ones first and then, step by step, the larger ones up to the biggest. This is good logic. But how much more important is this for the command of great armadas of airplanes.

Here the course of command experience must be by the same parallel. A pilot must first learn to fly in a wing position, then to lead a section, and later a division of airplanes before he can hope to lead a squadron or a wing organization.

The bureau chiefs would be the first to protest against giving command of a battleship to an outsider after only a 9 months' course at Annapolis.

Yet that is exactly what they are now doing in aeronautics. No one would think of permitting an officer to command a capital ship without years of previous training and experience at sea. So, too, no one should be permitted to command our vitally important naval air units, afloat or ashore, without years of experience in aviation.

To see that this common sense principle is carried out in the future I have introduced a bill to restrict command of airplane carriers, tenders, and naval air stations to aviators and observers of not less than 10 years' experience as qualified naval aviators or observers. This bill, if enacted into law, will make mandatory the carrying out of the intention and policy of Congress in this respect.

THE W. P. A. PROGRAM

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a communication from the United States Conference of Mayors and resolution adopted March

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter and the resolution adopted at the United States Conference of Mayors referred to therein:

United States Conference of Mayors, Washington, D. C., March 24, 1936.

Hon. RICHARD RUSSELL

HON. RICHARD RUSSELL,

Member, United States House of Representatives,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Last Saturday the United States Conference of Mayors held a regional meeting of most of the New England mayors at Boston. The attached resolution, dealing with the W. P. A. program, was unanimously passed. On behalf of the New England mayors in attendance at the Boston meeting I am asking that you insert this statement in the Congressional Record.

Thanking you very kindly, I am, Sincerely yours,

PAUL V. BETTERS Executive Director.

RESOLUTION ON W. P. A., UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED AT BOSTON NORTHEAST-ERN REGIONAL MEETING OF UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS, MARCH 21, 1936

Whereas we have met in formal sessions of the northeastern regional section of the United States Conference of Mayors and have received first-hand reports from the chief executives of the cities of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hamp-shire, New York, and New Jersey with regard to the pressing prob-lem of caring for the unemployed needy in these communities;

Whereas these reports have revealed that although there has been an evident improvement in general business conditions, still the numbers on relief and in need of aid have not been substan-tially reduced; and

Whereas the present W. P. A. program has been productive of useful and constructive works of lasting benefit and permanent value to our communities; and

Whereas considerable alarm has been felt over the announced reductions in W. P. A. quotas: Now, therefore, be it Resolved as the consensus of the northeastern regional section, Resolved as the consensus of the northeastern regional section, That the president and executive committee of the United States Conference of Mayors be instructed to continue their efforts to insure an extension of the W. P. A. program, which is absolutely essential to provide adequate care and assistance for the unemployed employables of our Nation. It is the hope of this group that industry will absorb much of the surplus labor during the coming months and lessen the problem of relief, but until such does take place we must carry on as in the past. In this connection we authorize the president and executive committee to place at the disposal of private industry all the informational facilities of the conference of mayors in any plan which industry may develop in accordance with the message of President Roosevelt on March 18 to effect increased employment during the coming months: Be it further months: Be it further

OUR AIRCRAFT AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES ARE LOCATED AS TO BE VULNERABLE TO ATTACK

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter addressed by me to the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter to the President of the United States in which I call attention to the need for a careful study of the location of our aircraft companies to the end that there be a development in the interior sections of the country. Similar communications were sent to Hon. John J. McSwain, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, and Hon. Carl Vinson, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and Eugene Vidal, Director of Air Commerce for the United States:

MARCH 30, 1936.

Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt,

President of the United States,

The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: During an address on the floor of the House of Representatives on March 13 I stated the following: "In this Nation practically every concern manufacturing aircraft is located upon the coasts of the United States, and, due to the danger from attack, we should give serious consideration to the need for aircraft development inland." Since that time I have been making a further study of the facts Since that time I have been making a further study of the facts in this connection. I find that factories for the manufacture of planes and bombers, ordnance and rifles, are concentrated in the seaboard States, and are, therefore, left open to destruction by a hostile airplane carrier, perhaps hundreds of miles at sea. I have found that the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Co. and the Wright Aeronautical Corporation are open to attack, since they are located at Hartford, Conn., and Paterson, N. J. It is not a far-fetched assertion when I say that a fast bomber could bring destruction to both these factories within an hour. Not far from the coast is the Lycoming Manufacturing Co., at Williamsport, Pa., which manufactures engines and propellers. The Menasco and Kinner companies are located in Los Angeles, Calif.

We find the Glenn L. Martin aircraft factory near Baltimore; the Seversky and the Grumman Aircraft Corporation at Farmingdale, Long Island; the Sikorsky Aviation Corporation situated at Bridgeport, Conn.; and the Chance Vought Aircraft Corporation in Hartford, Conn. The picture is even more graphically brought to our attention on the Pacific coast, with the Lockheed, Douglas, Vultee, and Northrop companies at Los Angeles, Calif.; the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation at San Diego; and farther north at Seattle, Wash., is to be found the Boeing Aircraft Co., builders of bombers which are recognized as among the best.

In contrast we find that only the Great Lakes Aircraft Corporation in Cleveland Only produces fighting planes in any quantation.

In contrast we find that only the Great Lakes Aircraft Corporation in Cleveland, Ohio, produces fighting planes in any quantity among those situated in the interior. There are three commercial factories at Wichita, Kans., and the Stinson Aircraft Corporation in Detroit.

I have ascertained also the further fact that our manufacturers of firearms are concentrated on the coast. There are three companies in Massachusetts; namely, the Johnson's Arms & Cycle Works at Fitchburg, the Stevens Arms Co. at Chicopee Falls, and Smith & Wesson's in Springfield. In Connecticut we find five companies. New Haven having Mossberg & Sons, Colt's Patent Arms Manufacturing Co., the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., and the Marlin Firearms Co., while in Bridgeport we find the Remington Arms Co. Coming down to Pennsylvania, which is only slightly better protected than the above-mentioned States, we find our largest producer of firearms, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation at Bethlehem. Also, the manufacture of explosives and war chemicals is concentrated in the Wilmington, Del., territory. I feel justified at this time, therefore, in calling your attention to the need for a careful study with the thought in mind of establishing in the interior and more inaccessible sections of the United States our plants for the manufacture of aircraft, engines, firearms, explosives, and chemicals because the picture today is decidedly different than it was even 5 years ago.

Sincerely yours, I have ascertained also the further fact that our manufacturers

Sincerely yours,

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State, and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HARLAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Netherlands, $12,000.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to address the House on the provisions of a very important piece of legislation which is being introduced today by Mr. Wagner in the Senate and by myself The United States housing bill is the culmination of a long period of experimentation, surveys, thought, and united effort on the part of all groups and individuals interested in finding some solution for the housing problem. We have moved slowly, because the problems involved are so serious and complex that no hasty or partial solution will do. But we now present this bill in the full conviction that it will meet with the approval of all who seriously desire to improve the living conditions of that section of the population otherwise doomed to live in the slums, and of all who understand that our future economic well-being is largely dependent on permanent revival and a greater degree of stabilization in the building and allied industries.

In its very essence this is nonpartisan legislation. Housing is not a new idea in America. The national housing policy outlined in this bill has been built up bit by bit and year by year from the knowledge and understanding gained in this country over the past generation.

The necessity for a concrete and permanent low-cost housing program was recognized in Mr. Hoover's administration. The committee on large-scale operations of Mr. Hoover's conference on home building and home ownership reported that "the houses of the country constitute our largest mass of obsolete and discredited equipment." They pointed out that "new houses of acceptable standard of living are too expensive for two-thirds of the population", and they showed that "the present break-down in the financing, construction, and distribution of homes is more than a temporary or emergency situation", and therefore requires more than emergency measures for its solution.

The awakened local interest in the housing problem today knows no party lines. What other issue can you find in which local governmental officials, both Democratic and Republican, social agencies, labor, consumer organizations, and the capital goods industries are all united in seeking public action?

The adoption of a sound national housing policy will be the crowning point of the first 4 years of the Roosevelt Administration. Talk and experiment can now be translated into concrete achievement. The President has said—

We are working toward the ultimate objective of making it possible for American families to live as Americans should.

Here is an economical, efficient, and comprehensive method of taking one real step in this direction.

In the first place the bill sets up a permanent United States housing authority. Permanent local housing authorities of a similar type have already been established all over the country. But they are attempting the impossible, as long as the Federal agencies, from whom they seek necessary assistance, exist only from day to day, on a precarious and temporary basis. Where there are no local housing authorities as yet, there are active and organized groups of citizens who are impatiently waiting only for a permanent national policy before establishing suitable local machinery to carry out a program of low-rent housing and slum clearance. The provisions in the Wagner-Ellenbogen housing bill were framed with the direct collaboration and assistance of such local authorities and groups of citizens.

There are two essentials in a sound piece of national housing legislation. First, it must be flexible enough to meet varying local conditions and needs. No single "solution" handed down from Washington will do in a country as broad and complex as ours. On the other hand, definite checks and limitations and standards must be established to insure that Federal aid really accomplishes what it is supposed to accomplish—namely, the provision of decent living quarters for low-income families and the elimination of slum living conditions. In our opinion, and in the opinion of the numerous and diverse individuals, experts and agencies who have collaborated in its formulation, the United States housing bill achieves this difficult feat.

Loans will be made to local public housing authorities and limited-dividend companies. And grants may also be made, to authorities only, where necessary in order to bring rentals within reach of low-income families in need of housing.

Actual construction and operation will be carried out by local agencies, subject to certain conditions. The most important condition is that such housing projects must be reserved for low-income families who are entirely outside the private building market. There is therefore a permanent guarantee that these dwellings will not compete with the ordinary activities of private enterprise. They will merely extend the market for the products of the building industry and the labor of building mechanics into a hitherto untouched field. In certain special cases, where no local authority has as yet been established, but where there is both proved need and representative demand, the Federal agency may itself undertake construction, pending sale of the project to suitable local agencies.

The financial provisions have been very carefully worked out to provide a maximum of accomplishment with a minimum of public expenditure. An appropriation of $51,000,000 is asked for the first year, and authorizations for ensuing years up to $100,000,000 for the first year and not more than $150,000,000 for each of the succeeding 3 years. The Authority is authorized to borrow $100,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the first year, which may make a special bond issue unnecessary.

Compare these reasonable appropriations and financial measures, every cent of which will go into direct construction, with the funds made available to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, almost entirely for refinancing, or with outright expenditures for relief and other emergency measures which bring no future return and leave no permanent addition to the wealth of the country. The money spent under the United States housing bill will build monuments which 50 years hence will still give concrete evidence that the Congress of 1936 was an enlightened and forward-looking body.

These public funds will, moreover, serve to draw idle private funds into an entirely new field of sound and needed investment. A false distinction is often made between "private" and so-called "public" housing—as if all public-aided housing had to be constructed entirely with public funds. As a matter of fact, through the unguaranteed bonds of local housing authorities, and through equities in limited dividend companies as well as through investment in United States Housing Authority bonds, a large amount of private money will be drawn into a new and highly productive enterprise. Thus, and only thus, can the great building industry and its allied businesses begin to be transformed from a "luxury trade", serving only the richest third of the population, into a stable industry serving the interests of the mass of consumers. Only thus, also can steps be taken to alleviate, if not to avoid entirely, the terrible shortage of any kind of housing which is rapidly descending on us

There will, of course, be opposition. But the argument will not be quite the same old familiar left-right line-up. Rather will it be a line-up between that vast majority of the citizens of the United States and their elected representatives who want to put both the production and consumption of our national resources on broader and more stable basis, and the small handful who for their own selfish reasons are opposed to any truly constructive activity. [Applause.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I had the privilege of attending a hearing before the Senate Agriculture Committee, where an investigation is being made by that committee of the operations of the cotton exchanges and the cause of a 2 cent per pound drop in the price of cotton sometime ago.

I had the privilege of listening to a statement made by the ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange. While I agree with a number of statements made by this gentleman, I disagree with him in his statement wherein he stated that speculation, and a lot of it, was very helpful to farmers in securing a better price for their cotton. After making this statement the gentleman proceeded to lambast Anderson, Clayton Cotton Co., of Texas, for certain transactions on the New York Cotton Exchange during the months of May and July in 1929. Now, Mr. Clayton was doing exactly what the ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange stated would be good for farmers—that is, speculating—and on a large scale.

He stated that in May Mr. Clayton was long several hundred bales of cotton; in other words, was in a position to dominate the price of cotton. In July he stated that Mr. Clayton sold short over 900,000 bales of cotton, which, naturally, would have a tendency to depress the price of cotton, all of which certainly would not be helpful to farmers. Now, you will notice that both of these transactions were in May and July.

Those of us here who represent cotton farmers know that putting the price of cotton up in May or down in July does not do them any harm or any good, in that farmers sell very little cotton during this period of the year.

I contend that the investigation that is now going on for the purpose of ascertaining just why cotton had a 2 cent per pound drop in 1 day is just like putting that much money in a rat hole. Congress is long on taking the tax-payers' money for various and sundry investigations while Congress is in session and during the adjournment of Congress; 99 times out of 100 these investigating committees, largely composed of Congressmen and Senators, are unable to accomplish much in remedying the situation complained of or investigated.

Those of us who have bought and sold cotton and who have had any dealings on the cotton exchanges of the country realize the cause of the wild speculation referred to by the ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange in the case of Anderson, Clayton Co.

Under the Cotton Futures Act a section was written in the act whereby buyers of cotton would have an equal opportunity in doing business on the cotton exchange with the seller. Speculators refuse to use this section. However, another section was written in this bill giving the seller of cotton all advantages over the buyer. That is, suppose I buy on the New York Cotton Exchange 1,000 bales of cotton for July delivery. When July arrives I call for the cotton and request that it be delivered at Charleston, S. C., one of the southern delivery points.

Under the section just referred to, the seller has the right to deliver to me the cotton, the 1,000 bales, of any one of the tenderable grades and can state that he will deliver you this cotton at a delivery point in Texas or several other southern delivery points. Naturally, the buyer is unable to use all of these 1,000 bales of one grade and, certainly, wanting to use this cotton in South Carolina, could not accept delivery in Texas or any of these other delivery points.

Mr. Clayton, when he sold these 900,000 bales short on the New York market, perhaps not having a single bale of actual cotton on hand, knew at the time that he could force a paper settlement by the procedure just mentioned and, therefore, would not have to deliver the actual cotton.

If the Congress will amend the Cotton Futures Act, repealing the section referred to, that gives the seller all of these advantages, and place in the bill and amendment placing the buyer on an equal basis with the seller—that is, permitting him to write into the contract at least half of the number of bales of the grades that he would want, permitting the seller to geliver the other half in grades that he would like to deliver—you will be able to stop Mr. Clayton and others from the type of speculation referred to by the ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange.

Now, why do I say this? Suppose the buyer had the right under the amendment just referred to, which would give the buyer the right to demand the actual cotton. Mr. Clayton would think seriously before he would sell short 900,000 bales of cotton, for the reason that he would be unable to know whether or not he would be able to go on the market and buy this cotton for the purpose of filling his contract. In the next place, in calling the actual cotton, forcing the seller to have on hand the amount of cotton sold or forcing him to go on the market and buy the cotton in question, naturally would bring about a demand for cotton and certainly would advance the price of cotton.

I tried to place such an amendment in legislation in my committee some 3 or 4 years ago proposing to amend the Cotton Futures Act, but the speculators are absolutely against the amendment, stating that it will destroy speculation, all of which will be harmful to farmers in securing a fair price for their spot cotton.

If Congress will write in this amendment and also write into the legislation designating certain southern delivery points, permitting the buyer of cotton to write into the contract the point where he wants the cotton delivered, and at least 50 percent of the quantity of cotton bought of grades that he could use either in his mill or on the market, permitting the seller to designate the grades of the other 50 percent, we will then be able to curb wild speculation and fluctuations of such as a drop of 2 cents per pound in 1 day.

The ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange referred to the holding of cotton on the part of the Government under the program of trying to assist farmers in receiving a fair price, stating that it was a mess. The only difference between the Government's transaction and that of Anderson, Clayton Co. is that the Government is doing a legitimate business, representing the farmers, and having in its possession the actual cotton, while Anderson, Clayton, in connection with the transaction referred to, was speculating without having a bale of cotton in their possession and when the transaction had been closed, it was all on paper, and not a single bale of cotton passed through the hands of anybody.

The day that cotton dropped 2 cents per pound, a loss of $10 per bale, I understand it was all brought about by a rumor put out by those interested in selling the market short for the purpose of making millions.

I am sure if the Senate committee will investigate the transactions on that date they will find that the selling and buying was all on paper, and not a single bale of actual cotton entered into the transaction.

I gathered from the remarks of the ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange that it would be very helpful if the Government would let it be understood that the cotton that they now have on hand would not be sold until a certain price was reached, and it appears that he had in mind 15 cents per pound. If the Government should make such a statement, and I am for it, speculators would not do anything but buy the market, and in less than 30 days cotton would be selling for 15 cents per pound.

The gentleman also stated that there was very little business going on on the cotton exchange at this time, all because speculators and traders in cotton were without any definite information as to just what the Government was going to do with the cotton that they now have on hand. In other words, the speculators are hesitating because of what the Government is doing, and perhaps on account of what the Government may do, in handling this cotton.

Prior to the inauguration of President Roosevelt on March 4, 1933, the Government was not holding any cotton, neither did the Government interfere with speculators and cotton traders, and, apparently, there was quite a lot of business going on on the exchanges. However, cotton at that time was forced down to 5 cents per pound, while today farmers are actually selling cotton at 12 cents per pound. I note that the gentleman stated that farmers were receiving about 10 cents per pound for cotton at this time. I beg to differ with the gentleman for the reason that I sold cotton this week in my district to a country cotton buyer for 12 cents per pound.

The chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Senator SMITH, whom I admire, and whom the people of South Carolina admire, stated on yesterday that the type of speculation referred to by the ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange should be curbed by placing a limitation on long and short selling.

Out of all the legislation passed by the Congress, most of it highly recommended by those who have charge of enforcing and administering the Cotton Futures Act, the situation complained of has not been remedied.

We passed a commodity-exchange bill in the House last year which was reported by the Agriculture Committee of the House, of which I am a member, carrying a provision for putting a considerable curb on selling long and short, especially short selling, both on grain and cotton. I find that this bill has been reported to the Senate by the Senate Agriculture Committee with cotton stricken from the bill.

If the Senator from South Carolina is interested in curbing speculation of the type engaged in by Anderson, Clayton & Co., and others, cotton should be restored to the bill.

I am also hoping that those in the Senate who are interested in stopping speculation, the type that brings about a 2-cent decline in cotton in 1 day, will write into the bill the amendments suggested by me. I feel sure that if this is done and the bill returned to the House we will be able to keep these amendments intact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; the acquisition, collection, classification, and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities, and other institutions; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; purchase and exchange not to exceed $50,000, and hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only on official business; purchase and exchange at not to exceed $7,000 each, and maintenance, upkeep, and operation, of not more than two armored automobiles; firearms and ammunition; such stationery, supplies, and equipment for use at the seat of government or elsewhere as the Attorney General may direct; not to exceed $10,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of such Bureau when authorized by the Attorney General; payment of rewards when specifically authorized by the Attorney General for information leading to the apprehension of fugitives from justice, including not to exceed $20,000 to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, who shall make a certificate of the amount of such expenditure as he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended; and including not to exceed $1,181,500 for personal services in the District of Columbia; $6,025,000, of which amount $100,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McMillan: Page 34, line 6, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, this merely provides for four automobiles for the Bureau of Investigation instead of two.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on page 34, in line 14, I move to strike out the words "when authorized by the Attorney General."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 34, line 14, strike out the words "when authorized by the Attorney General."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am making this proforma amendment in order to call to the attention of the Attorney General of the United States and to the prosecuting officers here that there is a bunch of lawyers in Washington who are continually committing the crime of barratry—soliciting law business from people.

A distinguished citizen died here the other day, and, as is the usual practice with some of these lawyers who are committing barratry, the firm of William Fletcher & Co., composed of John L. Fletcher and John R. Fletcher, on the letterhead of John R. Fletcher, lawyer, 600 F Street NW., Washington, D. C., wrote a letter to the widow of the deceased and said in effect:

"We note your husband has passed away", and they said, "We are prepared to get you a pension from the Pension Bureau", and they told her that if she would fill out the application they enclosed and make them attorneys in fact, having the names stipulated in the application, "William Fletcher & Co., composed of John L. and John R. Fletcher", and would agree to pay them their fee, that they would get her the pension.

That is barratry. That soliciting of law business is nothing in the world but barratry, and it ought to be stopped. When the Government of the United States owes anyone a pension they do not have to employ a lawyer to get it. All on earth they have to do is to fill out a proper application to the Pension Bureau, which will be furnished by the Pension Bureau, and furnish the facts, and they do not need any attorney to do it. They do not have to pay out a cent in fees. They can get what is coming to them from the United States Government without expense. This damnable barratry ought to be stopped. They ought to quit imposing on people at a time when death comes and get these fees out of them.

I hope the prosecuting officers in the District of Columbia will stop this barratry.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.
Mr. COLDEN. That custom prevails throughout many parts of the country aside from the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course; and it ought to be stopped everywhere; but here we are in control. The Congress of the United States is in control of what goes on in the District of Columbia, and we are responsible for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has expired.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRAINING OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND OTHER OFFICIALS Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses incident to the special instruction and training of the United States attorneys and United States marshals, their assistants and deputies, and United States commissioners, including personal services, supplies, and

United States marshals, their assistants and deputies, and United States commissioners, including personal services, supplies, and equipment in the District of Columbia, traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings when specifically authorized by the Attorney General, $35,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph beginning on page 38, line 17, ending on line 26, embracing the proposed appropriation of $35,000, because there is no law authorizing it and it is legislation upon an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan] on the point of order.

Mr. McMILIAN. Mr. Chairman, this item is carried in the bill, I may say to the Committee, on the authority of law as we find it in section 317 of title V of the Code of Laws of the United States in force January 3, 1935, in which I find this language:

The Attorney General shall exercise general superintendence and direction over the attorneys and marshals in the districts of the United States and Territories as to the manner of discharging their respective duties—

And so forth. We take it that, in view of the language I have just read, the Attorney General would have discretion under this substantive law to provide for these men, marshals and district attorneys, and what not, to be brought to Washington for such a course of instruction or training as they may need. The purpose of this language is to make uniform a policy to apply to district attorneys and marshals throughout the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that language in the statute read by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan] in no way embraces authority for "special instruction and training of United States attorneys and United States marshals, their assistants and deputies, and United States commissioners" and their trips to Washington. There is nothing in that language read by my colleague that embraces or authorizes anything like that. This is nothing in the world but providing for junket trips, pure and simple, and such junket trips to Washington have been turned down by the Comptroller General in the past. I have some of the accounts in my office, certified to by his office, showing where he has turned them down because there is no authority of law. This $35,000 provision is an attempt to get around the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. McCORMACK. Not necessarily on the point of order, but I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas to yield, if he will.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I just wish to make this observation: I do not think the gentleman means to let it remain in the Record that these are junket trips. I think what the Attorney General has in mind is something which is a very desirable objective, namely, to create uniformity throughout the country in the offices of the United States district attorneys. I know something about the objective of the Attorney General in this respect. It seems to me that, independent of the point of order, it should not be permitted to go into the Record, without an expression of view to the contrary, that this is nothing but a junket trip.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the gentleman that he has not given the attention to this matter that I have. I have gotten some of these accounts in the past from the Comptroller General's office, because it was my duty to look into those things as a member of this committee. I have found out where they have attempted to put these junket trips over and they have been approved by the Department of Justice, but when they reached Comptroller General McCarl he turned them down, and they were not paid out of Government funds.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARLAN). The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

The question to be decided is the interpretation of the phrase, "special instruction and training", contained in this appropriation bill, the question being whether that phrase comes under the statutory authorization to the Attorney General in the section referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan], section 317 of title 5, in which the Attorney General is authorized to exercise "general superintendence and direction" over the attorneys.

This section has been on the statute books certainly for more than half a century. So far as the records disclose, up to the present time there has been no attempt to organize or operate a school for instructing district attorneys under that authorization. There is very little in the decisions interpreting this phrase of the statute. In the case of Fish v. U. S. (36 Federal Reporter, 680), however, in a decision by the District Court for the Eastern District of New York, the court, by way of obiter, spoke as follows:

The section no doubt confers upon the Attorney General power to superintend any criminal prosecution instituted by the district attorney, and to direct the district attorney in regard to the method of discharging his duties in any particular prosecution instituted by him. But it does not, in my opinion, authorize the attorney general to control the action of the district attorney in criminal cases by general regulations. The supervision and direction contemplated by section 362 must, as I think, be a particular instruction, given in a particular case, and based on the facts of the particular case. To hold otherwise would in many instances deprive the court of the aid of counsel, learned in the law, which is contemplated by the statute, and substitute in place of counsel a set of general regulations issued by the Attorney General; and in some cases the ends of justice would be defeated by such a practice. A general regulation of the Department of Justice that all district attorneys should in all cases refuse to consent to any postponement of a trial, should never admit a fact, should always move for the infliction of the extreme penalty of the law, would hardly be upheld. The statute must have some limit; and one proper limitation, as it seems to me, is to require, for the validity of any direction by the Attorney General in criminal cases, that it be made in a particular case, and with reference to the duties of the district attorney in that particular case.

If this decision is to be followed, there is no authority under present statutes for the Attorney General to operate a school for district attorneys.

The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Structural and mechanical care of the building and grounds: For such expenditures as may be necessary to enable the Architect of the Capitol to carry out the duties imposed upon him by the act approved May 7, 1934 (48 Stat. 668), including improvements, maintenance, repairs, equipment, supplies, materials, and appurtenances, and perconal and other services, and for snow removal by hire of men and equipment or under contract without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, secs. 5 and 16), $55,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to reply, briefly, to the remarks of my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], and what I say is not in any sense controversial. The gentleman properly, within his rights, raised a point of order. I want, nevertheless, to express my personal opinion with reference to Attorney General Cummings, and what he has in mind in connection with affording opportunity to United States attorneys throughout the country, from time to time, to collaborate.

The Attorney General has been doing a very remarkable job. He has confined himself to the conduct of his own Department and has administered it and performed his duties in a very able and commendable manner.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is no better friend of the Attorney General of the United States than I am, and I would defend him as quickly as would the gentleman if he were under fire, but he is not under fire. Nothing was at issue except a $35,000 legislative provision on an appropriation bill, and it is the duty of Congress to keep legislative items out of appropriation bills. I was merely doing my duty in upholding the rules of the House in keeping this improper legislative item out of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I have stated, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas was acting within his rights, so there cannot be any misunderstanding either directly or indirectly that I was undertaking to criticize the gentleman. I do want. however, to incorporate in the RECORD my personal view that had this item not been stricken from the bill on a point of order it was not the intention of the Attorney General to permit the money to be used for junketing purposes. In this respect the gentleman from Texas and I may honestly differ, and I am not going to make any remarks which could be construed as a criticism of the opinion he entertains. It is my intention to express my own opinion. It is my view that had this item remained in the bill, or if this item is restored in the Senate—and I hope it will be—the Attorney General will not permit it to be used for junketing purposes. Attorney General Cummings has commended himself, as my friend from Texas agrees, to all of us, irrespective of party, as a Cabinet officer who is trying to perform the duties of his own Department; and in his effort to perform his duties, which he is doing ably, has confined himself to his own Department, realizing that he has enough work to do in conducting the affairs of the great Department of Justice. If this item is restored in the Senate by way of amendment-which I hope will happen, and I hope the item will be increased to $50,000, which the Attorney General asked in the first place-the Attorney General will not permit the money to be used for any junketing purpose. Attorney General Cummings is one of the ablest and most conscientious men in the public service of today.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts indicating that an effort is to be made to secure the reinsertion of this item in the Senate, I desire to outline briefly the reasons which prompted me as a member of the subcommittee to oppose the insertion of this item in the bill as reported from the committee.

Those reasons had nothing to do with the Attorney General nor with the question of whether or not if the appropriation was made he would spend the money honestly and for the best interest of his Department. I think anyone who is acquainted with the Attorney General and his record of service will cheerfully give him credit for the best of intentions to use the utmost good faith in connection with the expenditure of the appropriation, if made. But my objection to the proposed appropriation is that these district attorneys have been selected presumably because of their eminence in their profession for the positions which they occupy, and it is to be assumed that men selected in this manner for positions of this high type are fully qualified to discharge the duties of these positions. There is an element of the ridiculous in suggesting that money should be appropriated from the Treasury of the United States to afford these men training and instruction. It is not only possible but probable if this procedure should be started in the Department of Justice that it would rapidly spread to other departments of the Government. In our committee the suggestion was made by one of the members that a similar training school be established for employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Since it seems to be the policy of the present administration not to apply the civil service, and they are making these political appointments all the time, might it not be well to set up some school of instruction so that these people who are appointed may be able to properly

Mr. TARVER. In reply to the gentleman may I say I do not know that the policy as to civil service has been substantially changed under this administration from that followed heretofore. In my judgment, in the main it has not.

But without regard to that question I think it highly inadvisable to begin in one department of the Government a practice which we ought not consider spreading to all departments of the Government to afford training and instruction at public expense to employees or appointees who are presumably selected because they are well qualified in an effort to have them become qualified to discharge the duties for which they were selected.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER | knows that during 50 years of Republican administration there never has been one Federal United States district attorney appointed through the civil service. That is all bunk.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that if there ever were any who needed to go to school it was the district attorneys appointed in the South by the Republican administration for the last 15 years. Of course, it is too late for them, because they will probably never get back in office.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ask my good friend from Texas whether he has read on the editorial page of this morning's Post an article entitled "Blanton! and then "Heil to the Dictator!"?

Mr. BLANTON. The Post and its writer, Karl Schriftgiesser, are Russian Communist sympathizers, with just about the same kind of sympathetic ideas for communism that the gentleman entertains.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman from Texas answer the question whether he would prefer a "red rider" to a night rider in Washington?

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather have night riders here and in the State of Washington than "red riders", if the "red riders" were "reds."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Why does not the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. BLANTON. The Post and its editor, Karl Schriftgiesser, know that I have never belonged to the Ku Klux Klan and that in the zenith of its power one of its high kleagles ran against me for Congress, and I carried every county in my district against him by a big majority.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the discussion has nothing to do with the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF JUDGES

Salaries of judges: For 42 circuit judges; 157 district judges (including 2 in the Territory of Hawaii, 1 in the Territory of Puerto Rico, 4 in the Territory of Alaska, and 1 in the Virgin Islands); and judges retired under section 260 of the Judicial Code, as amended, and section 518 of the Tariff Act of 1930, $2,95,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the salaries of all United States justices and circuit and district judges lawfully entitled thereto, whether active or retired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cochran: On page 40, line 11, after the word "retired", strike out the period and the colon and add the following: "Provided, That in the event of the death or re-tirement of a district judge where a successor cannot be named by the President under existing law the President shall have the power to fill the vacancy for a period not exceeding 1 year."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I realize the amendment is subject to a point of order and its constitutionality can also be questioned. My purpose in offering the amendment is to get a situation before the House.

There is a situation existing in various judicial districts of the country, including my own district, where the Congress has provided an additional Federal judge and there is a provision in the law which prevents the President from making an appointment in case of the death or retirement of the present incumbent. Those laws were passed to meet a situation that grew up after the enactment of the eighteenth amendment. Since the eighteenth amendment has been repealed, various amendments to the Bankruptcy Act have been adopted and many new laws have been placed upon the statute books by the Congress. We have doubled the work of the Federal judges.

Mr. Chairman, St. Louis is a great railroad center, and we have in our courts a number of railroad receiverships. We have but two judges. One of the judges is what is known as a temporary judge. Of course, everyone hopes that this judge will live for a long period of time, but we cannot predict what might happen. If that judge should pass away during the time that the Congress is not in session there would be a situation created that I am unable to describe. It would be physically impossible for one judge to handle the business before the court.

The conference of circuit judges has recommended that this vacancy, along with many others in the country, be made permanent. The conference of circuit judges has also recommended additional judges. I am not speaking now of the appointment of additional judges, although the recommendation of the conference of circuit judges provides for two additional judges in my own State. What I want to see now is the Congress give the President power to fill the temporary places in the event of death or retirement, so that there will not exist a congested docket in a locality where the judge is liable to pass away or is forced to retire. We should provide to meet a situation that might exist in your district or

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think there is a great deal of merit in the gentleman's amendment, and I hope that a point of order will not be urged against it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. We have a similar situation in the middle district of Tennessee, and in the event of the death of the present judge it would be a calamity if the vacancy could not be filled.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I could not hear just what his amendment provides.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is a pro-forma amendment granting the President power to appoint, for 1 year only, a successor to a judge who is now holding a judgeship which expires upon the death of the present judge. This would give the Congress an opportunity to decide whether or not the judgeship should be made permanent.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the matter been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. COCHRAN. It has not. It is a matter that came to my mind just at the moment. My real purpose is to call attention to an existing condition.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is a splendid legislator and I have been able to follow him very often, because he is sound on these matters, but I am sure he would not for one moment want an amendment of this kind adopted here unless it was submitted at least to the Attorney General and the judicial council and had a proper background.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would not except for the fact that, as the gentleman knows, there are pending before his committee a large number of bills providing for additional judges and also to make the temporary judgeships permanent. The gentleman knows as well as I do that we are not going to get action on a great majority of these bills at this session of the Congress. The gentleman can readily understand in a great city like St. Louis, which has only two judges, with the many railroads there and with the railroad receiverships taking up the time of one judge, what would happen if we only had one Federal judge.

I am not asking for an additional judge now. I repeat that the conference of circuit judges has recommended that these judgeships be made permanent, and in addition, that two additional judges be appointed for Missouri, as well as new judges for other sections of the country.

Mr. MICHENER. I am sure the gentleman would not want to establish the policy or the precedent of creating Federal judgeships on the floor of the House on the spur of the moment without any further consideration.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman that he well knows what my purpose is in offering such an amendment. We have a wonderful man presiding in St. Louis, who is a Republican, and politics does not enter into this matter. I am not going to have anything to do with the appointments if there should be a vacancy. I found that out when a vacancy occurred sometime ago. I am simply trying to meet a situation that might arise, so that we can carry on in a proper way in the event that one of the judges holding a temporary appointment should pass away. I am sure the gentleman would not want such a situation to occur in his own district.

Mr. MICHENER. Might we not apply that same reasoning where there are other temporary judgeships?

Mr. COCHRAN. The amendment does not apply alone to my district, but applies all over the United States and covers all the temporary judgeships.

Mr. MICHENER. Does it cover the Philippines?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York, a member of the Judiciary Committee, where the bills I refer to are pending.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I can assure the gentleman that if he will introduce a bill to accomplish the purpose he now has in mind the Committee on the Judiciary will give it its usual prompt and courteous attention.

Mr. COCHRAN. I appreciate that. I have introduced a bill for my own district.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I do not believe this is the proper time to legislate, because the Committee on the Judiciary should have an opportunity to study this question, and therefore I shall be constrained to raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. A point of order has already been raised and the point is being reserved. I am going to be required to concede the amendment is subject to a point of order.

I am going to ask the gentleman to kindly give very serious consideration to my bill that has been sleeping in committee a long time to make the temporary judgeship in my city permanent.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will consult article III of the Constitution, he will find his amendment is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, which provides that both the judges of the Supreme Court and the inferior courts shall hold office during good behavior. As I understand the amendment, the gentleman is attempting to limit the term to 1 year. Therefore, before that could be done, an amendment to the Constitution would be necessary.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman, as usual, is undoubtedly correct. I have, however, had the opportunity to call to the attention of the committee the necessity of enacting legislation at this session that will give the President the power to appoint successors to those now serving as temporary judges, so-called, in the event of a vacancy caused by death or forced retirement. Surely we cannot let this condition exist permanently or wait until the vacancy occurs. As I said before, I have accomplished my purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been reserved against the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, may I say in reply to the gentleman from Missouri that I think there is a great deal of merit in his argument, but, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is clearly legislation attempted to be placed in an appropriation bill, and as our friend the gentleman from California has pointed out, I think it is in direct conflict with the Constitution, and for this reason, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am compelled to agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Establishment of air-navigation facilities: For the establishment of aids to air navigation, including the equipment of additional air-mail routes for day and night flying; the construction of necessary lighting, radio, and other signaling and communicating structures and apparatus; investigation, research, and experimentation to develop and improve aids to air navigation; aircraft, aircraft power plants, and accessories; for personal services in the field; purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work, including their exchange; replacement, including exchange, of not to exceed two airplanes for service use and two for experimental purposes; special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes; and for the acquisition of the necessary sites by lease or grant, $792,920: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for any purpose not authorized by the Air Commerce Act of 1926, as amended.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, line 3, strike out "$792,920" and insert in lieu thereof "$942,920, of which not to exceed $150,000 shall be available immediately."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Aircraft in commerce: To carry out the provisions of the act approved May 20, 1926, entitled "An act to encourage and regulate the use of aircraft in commerce, and for other purposes", as amended by the act approved February 28, 1929, and the acts approved June 19 and 20, 1934 (U. S. C., title 49, secs. 171-184), including personal services in the field; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; fees and mileage of witnesses; purchase of furniture and equipment; stationery and supplies, including medical supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing machines, accessories, and repairs; replacement, including exchange (not to exceed $2,000), maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work; replacement, including exchange, of airplanes (not to exceed $16,500); purchase of airplane motors, airplane and motor accessories, and spare parts; maintenance, operation, and repair of airplanes and airplane motors; purchase of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes; purchase of books of reference and periodicals; newspapers, reports, documents, plans, specifications, maps, manuscripts, and all other publications; and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; in all, $558,000. foregoing; in all, $558,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, line 10, strike out "$558,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$733,000, of which not to exceed $175,000 shall be available immediately."

The committee amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

For the expenses for securing information for and compiling the census reports provided for by law, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; compensation and expenses of enumerators, special agents, supervisors, supervisor's clerks, and interpreters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; cierks, and interpreters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records; temporary rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia; not to exceed $2,500 for the employment by contract of personal services for the preparation of monographs on census subjects; not to exceed $54,000 for constructing tabulating machines and repairs to such machinery and other mechanical appliances, including technical, mechanical, and other personal services in connection therewith in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and the purchase of necessary machinery and supplies; and where, and the purchase of necessary machinery and supplies; and not to exceed $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the collection of statistics when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce; $1,900,500, of which amount not to exceed $1,450,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, including not to exceed $51,000 for temporary employees who may be appointed by the Director of the Census under civil-service rules, at per-diem rates to be fixed by him without regard to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for the purpose of assisting in periodical inquiries, and not to exceed $35,000 shall be expended for printing accumulated census data.

"Census of agriculture: For an additional amount for salaries and necessary expenses of the Census Bureau for compiling and publishing the census of agriculture of the United States for 1935, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act of 1936, $200,000, to be available immediately, and to remain available until December 31, 1936."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, the field work incident to the agricultural census has been completed and all of the data has been compiled. It now develops, however, that all the data and memoranda connected with that census work are not available, lacking sufficient funds to provide for the printing of the accumulated material. The census of agriculture for 1935 is very important at this time, particularly on account of the Soil Erosion Act which was just passed, and for that reason a supplemental estimate was sent down by the President and the committee has approved of it in the same amount as submitted, namely, $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Retired pay: For retired pay of officers and employees engaged in the field service or on vessels of the Lighthouse Service, except persons continuously employed in district offices and shops, $620,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having inserted at this point an extract from the minutes of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, of the annual meeting of January 1936. I should have had this inserted when we were reading the appropriation for the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection Service. At that meeting a resolution was passed appropriate for the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record at this point by the insertion of this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR LEGISLATION

[Extract from the minutes of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, annual meeting of January 1936]

Washington, D. C., January 21, 1936.

Mr. William Fisher, supervising inspector of the first district, offered the following resolution:

"Resolution 3876

"Whereas the Board of Supervising Inspectors of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection of the Department of Com-merce, now in session at Washington, D. C., is impressed with the fact that many of the local United States inspection officers in the field are behind in their work due to lack of personnel; and

"Whereas the prime function of the Bureau is safeguarding of life and property at sea; and

"Whereas this function cannot and is not properly being fulfilled on account of inadequate and underpaid personnel: Now, be it therefore

"Resolved, That the Director of the Bureau be requested to take further and vigorous steps to remedy the very serious condition that now prevails in the entire inspection service in the hope that some constructive and intelligent measures may be accomplished before any more major disasters occur on American-fiag ships; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be requested to appropriate funds to provide for additional inspectors and office employees, to provide for traveling expenses of the personnel of the service, to provide for means for reducing long and onerous hours of work among its employees, and otherwise enable the members of this service to carry out the mandate of the safety-at-sea laws which they are sworn to execute."

In support of the foregoing resolution we submit the following

In support of the foregoing resolution we submit the following data which merely indicate the deplorable conditions that exist:

There is a very serious shortage of inspectors necessary to conduct the various inspections of vessels required by the statutes and the rules and regulations enacted to effectuate these statutes.

In addition to our inability to perform the inspections provided for by the statutes, we are unable to make intermediate inspections of freight vessels, both steam and motor, at intervals frequent enough to insure that they are seaworthy in every respect. We are also unable to make special examinations of the lifesaving and firefighting equipment, conduct frequent fire and boat drills on all classes of vessels, conduct better examination of able seamen and lifebeat men it order to review the standard of these important lifeboat men in order to raise the standard of these important

Excursion steamers carry large numbers of passengers and we should make more frequent inspections than is now possible with our present force of inspectors and conduct fire and boat drills at short intervals.

As many of the districts do not have assistant inspectors, the local inspectors must leave their office to make inspections and perform other work at some distant place. There are instances when they have been absent as long as a month, during which time other work has been neglected. It was during one of such absences of the local board on routine duties in its district that the Diric disaster of 1935 occurred. It was impossible to contact the local inspectors for 2 days following word of the disaster in Washington, and during the time that they were necessarily absent from their office on account of this disaster no means of contact between the Bureau and this district was possible. The demoralizing effect upon the work of the Bureau is obvious.

Many drydock examinations of the underwater body of vessels

Many drydock examinations of the underwater body of vessels cannot be made and many vessels are not visited more than once cannot be made and many vessels are not visited more than once a year.

The Service conducts investigations of all marine accidents and holds trials of licensed officers charged with responsibility for such accidents. The proceedings are comparable to trials in United States courts. Manifestly matters of such judicial character should be given careful thought, consideration, and study before a decision is rendered, and unless the inspectors charged with these duties are relieved of other routine matters, either in the functioning of their offices or of inspection duties within their districts, they are seriously hampered in rendering just, equitable, and proper decisions.

There is attached hereto a record of the inspections and other routine work which the local inspectors in one district were unable to perform during the calendar year 1935. This record indicates a condition throughout the Service; it does not include a record of the inability to perform many other duties, such as examination of repairs to vessels, vessels under construction, etc.
Which resolution was adopted.

Attest:

J. B. WEAVER Director, President of the Board.

Approved February 18, 1936: DANIEL C. ROPER, Secretary of Commerce.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, repair, alteration, improvement, equipment, and operation of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment (including rubber boots and oilskins) and apparatus, contingent expenses, pay of permanent employees not to exceed $387,030, temporary labor, and not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels and the necessary expenses connected therewith, and not to exceed $10,000 for the purchase, collection, and transportation of specimens and other expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of aquarium, of which not to exceed $5,000 may be expended for personal services in the not to exceed $5,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, $664,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. McMillan: Page 86, line 5, strike out "$664,000" and insert "$667,000."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, this is an item of only $3,000 to provide for a temporary shad hatchery along the south Atlantic coast. The committee recognizes the value of the Bureau of Fisheries, and at this time I desire to commend that Bureau for its very fine work in the propagation and protection of our food fishes. The shad, of course, is a very fine food fish, but it is only for certain periods of the year that the shad run in certain of our waters. Very little is known of their migratory habits.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad that the chairman of the committee has offered this amendment. I think it is well worth while. I think for a small expenditure of $3,000 great benefit will result.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am very grateful to my colleague for his statement. The shad run only during certain seasons of the year. For that reason it is impossible to maintain what we would call a permanent hatchery. It must be temporary in character, and we feel that $3,000 will take care of such a hatchery for a temporary period.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $750 of the appropriations herein made for the Bureau of Fisheries shall be available for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of said Bureau when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce, and not to exceed $500 shall be available for the rental of suitable quarters in the District of Columbia for laboratory and storage purposes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question on the elimination of an item for the enforcement of the black-bass law. On page 31 of the committee report, with reference to an item of $15,000 carried in the appropriation bill of last year, and I think for several years prior to that, to enforce the blackbass law, the committee says:

With regard to this last decrease it may be said that the committee remains unconvinced of the reason or wisdom in maintaining a separate investigative force of two persons engaging themselves in enforcing a law that should be administered and enforced in the same manner as other penal statutes of the Federal

That, of course, refers to the elimination by the committee of the $15,000 item. In view of the fact that this bill does not carry the usual $15,000, I am wondering if the enforcement of the black-bass law, under which such splendid work has been done, will be retarded in any way because of lack of funds in the possession of some other department of the Government.

Mr. McMILLAN. This enforcement, if continued, will be carried on under the Department of Justice or the Biological Survey of the Interior Department. The committee feels that the Bureau of Fisheries is not an investigative or an enforcing agent of the Government, and, while the item has been carried and has been undertaken to be enforced by the Bureau of Fisheries, we think it is not the proper place for this item to be carried.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Is that the attitude of the Bureau of Fisheries? Does that Bureau so recommend?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Bureau of Fisheries estimated this item for the Budget, and the Budget in turn estimated it down to Congress, but the committee feels, in view of the statement I have just made, that the item should not be carried in this bill, but should be left to a proper law-enforcing agency of the Government to handle.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I understand the gentleman's position. Realizing the futility of having an amendment pass to restore at this time the amount in question, I hope, if the item is not restored in the Senate, that the Committee on Appropriations will see to it that the Department of Justice or such other department as may be responsible for the enforcement of the black-bass law will have ample funds to enforce it. It is certainly not consistent to have a law such as the Black Bass Act, now being enforced by Bureau of Fisheries, and which this committee feels should be enforced, to not have sufficient funds with whichever department of the Government might be in charge of its enforcement, to continue uninterruptedly the present efficient enforcement of the law.

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall be very glad to call that matter to the attention of the Department of Justice.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Under the present program of reforestation and also through public works, a great many artificial lakes are being constructed.

Has the gentleman's committee taken into consideration any provision for stocking these newly created waterways?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am glad the gentleman called this matter to my attention. The Bureau of Fisheries has for the past year or more been working in cooperation with the Forestry Service and other branches of the Government with relation to setting up a definite program to take care of our food fish and game fish in the various forest reserves and parks that are now under way through emergency funds.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Referring especially to my own State of Tennessee, you have in contemplation making available through the hatcheries a sufficient amount to stock Norris Dam, as an illustration?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. I may say the committee has added additional funds this year in order that our hatcheries may produce greater quantities of fish for this very purpose. I may say that the output from our hatcheries last year was approximatley 1,000,000,000 eggs more than the previous year.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I want to commend the committee for its consideration. One other question about the Tennessee situation. There is a hatchery at Flintville, known as Warren Hollow. I presume, of course, that is provided for in this bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; it is.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I was wondering if some of the mountain streams in the State of Kentucky might participate in some of this fish activity, if the gentleman happens to know where Kentucky is? [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLAN. My time has expired, but I think Kentucky is taken care of.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD BUREAU

Salaries and expenses: To carry out the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended, the Merchant Marine Acts of 1920 and 1928, as amended, the Intercoardal Chipping Act, 1933 (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 741-790, 801-848, 861-889, 891-891x, 911-984), and Executive Order No. 6166 (June 10, 1933), including the compensation of attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, and clerks, one technical expert in connection with construction loan fund, and other employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and for other expenses of the Bureau, including the rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia, traveling expenses of employees of the Bureau while upon official business away from their designated posts of duty, including not to exceed $300 for attendance at meetings or conventions of members of any society or association, the purpose of which is of interest to the development and maintenance of an American merchant marine, when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce, and for the employment by contract of expert stenographic reporters for its official reporting work, $249,000, of which amount not to exceed $243,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any salary at a rate in excess of $8,000 per annum, except that this limitation shall not apply to the salary of the Director of the Bureau: Provided, That the annual estimates of the Shipping Board Bureau for the fiscal year 1938 shall be accompanied by a statement showing the number and compensation of employees of the Fleet Corporation assigned to that Bureau: Provided further, That employees of the Merchant Fleet Corporation assigned to and serving with the Shipping Board Bureau whose compensation is within the range of salary prescribed for the appropriate grade to which the position has been allocated under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, shall not be subject to reduction in salary by reason of their transfer during the fiscal year 1937 to the pay roll of the Bureau.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMillan: On page 92, line 24, after the word "Provided", insert the word "further."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: Secretary of Labor, Assistant Secretary, Second Assistant Secretary, and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $300,000: Provided, That persons (not exceeding 10 in number) now employed in the determination of wages pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings", approved August 30, 1935, may be continued in such employment and paid from the amount herein appropriated without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws requiring competitive examinations: Provided further, That said personnel (except attorneys and referees) shall be required to take nonassembled examinations.

Mr. McMillan. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMillan: On page 97, line 5, strike out "$300,000" and insert "$330,000."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I may say this is the first of a series of three amendments that I shall offer in connection with this item.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, having for a great many years, in the State legislature and here, been interested in the prevailing-rate-of-wage law, when the matter was brought to my attention that the appropriation had been reduced for the enforcement of that law, which is commonly known as the Dayis-Bacon Act, I took up the matter with the committee. The reduction seemed to me quite extreme. Today I understand the committee is restoring an additional $52,000, under three items, to improve the facilities of the Department of Labor to enforce the provisions of this act.

I want to thank the committee. I know we are all interested in the enforcement of this particular law to see to it that the employees on Government contracts receive subsantially the prevailing rate of wage paid other employees in the locality and in the industry.

This appropriation bill, H. R. 12098, as reported out by the House Appropriations Committee (Rept. No. 2286, dated Mar. 31, 1936), cut the allowance for the administration of the amended Bacon-Davis Prevailing Wage Act to one-third of the Bureau of the Budget's estimate. This estimate itself was a reduction of more than $30,000 from the request of the Secretary of Labor for this purpose. A new and important regulatory statute would thus be virtually crippled before it has been in operation a year.

Appropriations for carrying out the provisions of the amended Bacon-Davis Act (act of Aug. 30, 1935, Public, No. 403, 74th Cong.) are contained under the general heading "Office of the Secretary" in H. R. 12093 (p. 97, et seq.). The new act has placed a heavy burden on the Department. In the last year of the operation of the original Bacon-Davis law 21 cases were received; at the end of the first 5 months under the amended statute, approximately 900 requests for predetermination, or an average of 169 per month, have been made.

For the current fiscal year the Works Progress Administration allotted $100,000 to the Secretary of Labor to carry on this work. This amount was for a 10-month period, since the act went into effect on September 30, 1935. From the experience of the first 5 months the Acting Solicitor of Labor estimated that $124,343 would be needed for the next fiscal year. This figure was cut by the Bureau of the Budget to $94,000, $6,000 less than that allowed for the first 10-month period. A detailed statement on the administrative expenses (hearings before Subcommittee House Committee on Appropriations, p. 7 ff.) pictures graphically the importance of the work to the entire Federal construction program. To prevent the blocking of the program in the Department of Labor it is imperative that funds for adequate personnel be provided.

The House Appropriations Committee had sharply reduced that of the Bureau of the Budget. It has eliminated entirely items for continued expenses $13,940, and for traveling expenses $11,000. These reductions would jeopardize the future of the prevailing-wage law.

It is gratifying that the Committee on Appropriations has reconsidered the matter and increased the appropriations by $52,000.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I simply rise at this time to congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee on his excellent judgment and fine appreciation of what was necessary in this appropriation, by the amendments which he is offering to protect labor in this bill. The Walsh bill, which passed the Senate and then came out of our Committee on Labor and passed the House at the last session, provided that these contractors must pay the prevailing rates of wage. That is one of the most important bills, as far as labor is concerned, which has ever passed this Congress. If the chairman of the subcommittee had not put back this appropriation to the Budget estimates, it would have seriously hampered the Department of Labor in its enforcement of this law.

I understand from the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. McMillan] that two other amendments will be offered also, which will take care of other matters connected with the labor situation.

Mr. McMILLAN. The other two amendments have to do with the administration of the Bacon-Davis Act. Those two amendments will be offered as they are reached in the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. I want again to congratulate the chairman and say those are amendments which I had intended to offer, but I am glad they have been offered by a better man, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan]. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. MORITZ. I want to call to the attention of the gentleman, who is chairman of the Committee on Labor, that at the Federal post-office building in Pittsburgh there was a contract let for painting at 50 cents an hour, which was less than the prevailing rate of wage.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will send me a brief on that, I shall be glad to take it up with the Department.

Mr. MORITZ. I called the matter to the attention of the officials at Pittsburgh, and they said they had nothing to do with it, because the contract was signed here in the city of Washington.

Mr. CONNERY. I shall be glad to take that up with the Department of Labor, if the gentleman will give me a memorandum on the subject.

amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the offices and bureaus of the Department, for which appropriations for contingent and miscellaneous expenses are not specifically made, including the purchase of stationery, furniture and repairs to the same, carpets, matting, oilcloths, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, laundry, street-car fares not exceeding $400; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motorcycles and motortrucks; maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges; newspaper clippings not to exceed $1,200, postage to foreign countries, telegraph and telephone service, typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices; purchase of law books, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals, not exceeding $4,500; contract stenographic services; all other necessary miscellaneous items and expenses not included in the foregoing; and not to exceed $25,000 for purchase of certain supplies for the Immigration and Naturalization Service; in all, $100,500: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Department of Labor when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $100. not exceed the sum of $100.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMillan: On page 98, line 18, strike out "$100,500" and insert "$112,500."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the amendments to which I referred to a moment ago, and is offered to accomplish the same purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 611) and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, and not to exceed $50,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $398,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMillan: On page 99, line 8, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$80,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMillan: On page 99, line 9, strike out "$398,000" and insert "$408,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Liaison with the International Labor Organization, Geneva, Switzerland, salaries and expenses: For a United States Labor Commissioner and other personal services in Geneva, Switzerland; compensation of interpreters, translators, and porters; traveling expenses of employees, including transportation of employees, their families, and effects, in going to and returning from foreign posts; rent, heat, light, and fuel; hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; purchase and exchange of foreign and domestic books, periodicals, and newspapers; purchase of furniture, stationery, and supplies; printing and binding; postage; telephone and other similar expenses, for which payment may be made in advance; necessary technical or special investigations in connection with matters falling within the scope of the International Labor Organization; allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 118a), not to exceed $1,700 for any person, and contingent and such other expenses in the United States and elsewhere as the Secretary of Labor may deem necessary, fiscal year 1937, $28,000. $28,000.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I call to the attention of the committee, for the RECORD, the fact that the $28,000 item appearing in the bill at page 100 is for the purpose of defraying the ex-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee | staffed with five employees, to keep the Government posted on the work of the International Labor Office.

The Committee have viewed with some concern the increasing yearly costs to the United States Government of the International Labor Office. The annual cost has now reached the total, I believe, of $385,000, the major part of the amount, of course, appearing under the Department of State, which acts as agent for the Department of Labor. Whether we should continue our membership in this body is something, of course, for the Congress to decide and not for the Appropriations Committee to pass on. We, therefore, have allowed the amounts required to continue our membership in this International Labor Organization.

We questioned the different people who came before our committee as to concrete results. They gave us page after page of testimony full of beautiful ideas for the future, but our committee has not been able to find any one actual, concrete good that has yet come out of our membership in this organization; we can only hope for the best in the future.

My particular purpose in rising at this time, Mr. Chairman, is to call the attention of the Committee to this Geneva office of five people maintained the year around in Switzerland. I am not now questioning the necessity of maintaining this office. However, our membership in this international labor organization requires attendance at four quarterly meetings in Geneva by some representative of our Government. Although we have Dr. Rice and four assistants in Geneva permanently, we send four times a year more than one representative from this country to attend these quarterly meetings, which are meetings of the council or governing body and are not the regular annual meetings of the full body. I do not now question the necessity of sending a delegation to the annual meetings of this international labor organization, nor do I now question the necessity of maintaining this office in Geneva; but I do question the necessity of sending three times a year to three of the quarterly meetings representatives from this country on a joy ride to Geneva when the interest of our Government could be just as well and just as adequately attended to by Dr. Rice, the permanent member of our staff, who maintains the year around residence and office in Geneva.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Is any official action taken at the quarterly meetings, or is that taken at the yearly meetings?

Mr. BACON. All official action, as I understand it, is taken at the yearly meetings. The quarterly meetings are of the governing body, and we should, of course, be represented in the governing body if we are to be a member of the organization. The point I am trying to bring out is that Dr. Rice, our permanent representative at Geneva, could well represent us at these quarterly meetings rather than sending over on a joy ride some member of the Department of Labor. Only a few days ago one of these quarterly joy rides took place when Dr. Lubin, of the Department of Labor, went all the way from this country to Geneva. He has just returned. The expense of sending him was considerable. It seems to us these quarterly meetings might be attended by our permanent representative in Geneva.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have prepared an amendment which I intend to offer at the end of the reading of this section, striking out, on page 99, all of lines 10 to 24, inclusive, and on page 100, all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive; in other words, wiping out our participation in this International Labor Organization. For three different terms in Congress I have tried to stop this appropriation and stop sending people on joy rides to talk with Mussolini, Hitler, Stalin, and other great "friends" of union labor throughout the world. I do not see any necessity of sending a representative on the part of the United States to sit in with a subsidiary of the League penses of maintaining an office in Geneva, Switzerland, of Nations and then expect to obtain any results beneficial to labor in this country. The League of Nations has been a colossal failure and we should keep away from any of their committees unless we want American labor to get its fingers hurned

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. I am in hearty accord with the gentleman's statement, except that I feel we should continue paying the dues that naturally we assumed in the adoption of the resolution authorizing the President to accept membership in the I. L. O. Until Congress by legislative action withdraws our membership, I do not see how we can refuse to pay the dues that naturally follow from the passage of the previous resolution.

Mr. CONNERY. If this House today will wipe out this appropriation, then in a very few days there will be brought in a resolution wiping out the further need of any participation on the part of this country.

Mr. TARVER. Might not some embarrassments in international relationships ensue?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think there will be any international difficulties. Of course, it is a nice joy ride for these members to go over there and sit in and discuss labor conditions. Then they are told politely that the United States should mind its own business and pay its own decent wages, which Europe will refuse to pay under any circumstances.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. WOOD. The gentleman seems to be very much afraid to send our representatives of labor to foreign countries to confer with other representatives of labor.

Mr. CONNERY. Not particularly labor; any representatives on any subject under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Mr. WOOD. Why send over other emissaries to discuss various things? Why have a Diplomatic Service at all?

Mr. CONNERY. Some diplomats have been all right in their place, but our diplomats do not sit in as representatives of the League of Nations.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman seems to think that representatives of labor are more easily influenced than members of the Diplomatic Service, for instance.

Mr. CONNERY. No. The representatives of labor are far less apt to be influenced, I may say.

Mr. WOOD. Then why object to sending labor representatives over there to discuss these things?

Mr. CONNERY. Because I object to our representatives sitting in over there on a useless proposition, when the cards are stacked against labor before the conference even begins. The gentleman should know that this is merely a junket.

Mr. WOOD. No; I do not know that. It is simply a matter of difference of opinion.

Mr. CONNERY. They discuss with representatives of the antilabor countries in Europe increases in wages and shortening of hours, and then, as I said, are told politely to return to America and keep dreaming their dreams.

Mr. WOOD. Why not discuss those matters with the representatives of labor over in Europe?

Mr. CONNERY. Because the I. L. O. is in connection with the League of Nations, it is the committee and the tool of the League, and we never got to first base with the League of Nations on anything which was for the best interest of the United States.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell the House what useful service any diplomat has ever rendered at any time except to get countries into trouble?

Mr. CONNERY. I cannot agree with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, tell us about that.

Mr. CONNERY. I think some of our diplomats in foreign countries have rendered real service and tried to keep us out of war.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What war?

Mr. CONNERY. We had men like Brand, Whitlock, and others who were real Americans. They were patriots and tried to do everything they could to keep us out of trouble. But some of our diplomats went over to Europe and as soon as they got to England they became more English than the English themselves, and as soon as they got to France they became more French than the French, more German than the Germans, and so ad nauseam. Those are the kind of diplomats to which I referred. They are the type of men who forget they are Americans as soon as they bow to some foreign king or potentate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Salaries and expenses: For personal services, including temporary statistical clerks, stenographers, and typewriters in the District of Columbia, and including also experts and temporary assistants for field service outside of the District of Columbia; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics when concerned with the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor; purchase of periodicals, documents, envelopes, price quotations, and reports and materials for reports and bulletins of said Bureau, $748,000, of which amount not to exceed $600,000 may be expended for the salary of the Commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bacon: On page 100, line 17, after ne word "Bureau", strike out "$748,000" and insert "$700,000." In line 18 strike out "$600,000" and insert "$550,000."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to make a small cut in the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which is the most extravagant bureau of the most extravagant department in the United States Government.

In 1935 they received a total appropriation of $528,000. This year our committee has allowed them $748,000, an increase of $220,000 over 1935. If my amendment is agreed to, they will still have an increase of $172,000 over 1935.

Mr. Chairman, in 1931 this Bureau started with an appropriation of $37,000, and yet in this bill there is appropriated a total of $748,000, or an increase in 6 years of over $700,000.

I call attention to the fact that the big statistical bureau of the Federal Government is the Bureau of the Census. It so happens that the Bureau of the Census comes under the Department of Commerce, which is also under the jurisdiction of this subcommittee. When Dr. Austin, head of the Bureau of the Census, appeared before our committee we examined him very carefully. He stated that all these statistics gathered by the Bureau of Labor Statistics could be more economically gathered by the Bureau of the Census. They are the experienced gatherers of statistics. Then, of course, having gathered the statistics they could be turned over to the Labor Department for analysis, use, and so forth. My point is that we could save a lot of money if we told the Bureau of the Census what kind of statistics was wanted. The Bureau of the Census would then gather those statistics at a great decrease in cost and turn them over to the Department of Labor, where they could be analyzed and used.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. What matter has the Bureau of the Census ever turned over to this Congress in the past 3 years that had reference to statistical matters?

Mr. BACON. They have never been asked to do so. They can do the work and they are equipped to do it. This Bureau is buying tabulating machines and renting tabulating machines the use of which they could easily get from the Bureau of the Census.

They are duplicating the work of the Bureau of the Census, and, furthermore, it is a very interesting fact that the Department of Labor last year, over and above the automatic promotions required by law, was able to save sufficient money out of the appropriations we gave them last year to make over 700 administrative promotions.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. They saved enough money to make over 700 administrative promotions in addition to the automatic promotions.

The State Department has not made a single administrative promotion since 1932, while this Department has made over 700 of them. The Department of Labor saved enough money in this very Bureau out of what we gave them last year to make over 700 administrative promotions. This was done out of the money that was not used for other purposes. I maintain it is not fair to the faithful employees of a department like the Department of State, who have not had a single administrative promotion since 1932, to look across the street at the Department of Labor and see men who are doing the same kind of work receiving 700 administrative promotions over and above the automatic promotions required by law.

I cite this to show that they have padded their estimates in this Department in order to make enough savings to make these administrative promotions.

If we believe in economy, I think we can well begin by dealing with this Bureau that has increased its appropriations in 2 years over 100 percent. It is time to stop, look, and listen in the interest of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MAY and Mr. WITHROW rose.

Mr. BACON. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The only way to save money is to begin by cutting down on appropriations and then they will have to curtail their promotions.

Mr. BACON. That is the only way to stop these administrative promotions that other departments have not enough money to make. These people pad their pay rolls and their estimates in order to get money to accomplish this very purpose

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that there is a great deal of force in the argument that has just been made by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon].

It is true that in 1935 there was appropriated for this Bureau $528,000, and for 1936 there was appropriated $885,000. For the present fiscal year there was estimated $885,000. This is more than a 100-percent increase for this particular activity over a 3-year period. So, as the gentleman from New York has said, if we expect to economize and save a little money in an activity, I think here is a mighty good place to do it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield? Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. I think it should be said in justification of the substantial increase that the passage of the Social Security Act has added materially to the importance of the work of this Bureau.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is true.

However, as the Members of the House realize, we have a great many statistical agencies now operating. The Shipping Board has one of these agencies, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce carries on statistical work, and, of course, the Bureau of the Census is regarded as our leading statistical Bureau. We should also have in mind the agricultural census work, and I may say that a lot of the work done by this Bureau is for the benefit of the farmers.

Having all this in mind, Mr. Chairman, the committee did reduce this item from $885,000, which was the amount estimated by the Budget for the next fiscal year, to $748,000, a cut of $136,000.

I feel this is about as far as we ought to try to go at this time and be consistent. While my friend from New York has offered this amendment to further reduce the item, considering the case as I know it to be and the history of this activity as I have found it to be from the hearings, I believe $136,000 is a consistent cut for this Bureau at this time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Did the committee make any study of a method to coordinate all of these different activities that are gathering statistics in one bureau or one department and try to save some money in that way?

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say that the committee has, but as the gentleman knows, there is now under consideration, both in the Senate and in the House, a resolution under which steps are to be taken toward a consolidation of such activities and the prevention of such duplications as I have referred to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, if the Department of Labor would spend more time trying to answer letters sent to them asking intelligent questions—from the constituents of Congressmen—and spend less time monkeying around with statistics which they do not understand themselves, we would have a better Department of Labor.

I do not know of a department in Washington, D. C., that ignores communications from Members of Congress as does the Department of Labor. I think the Department needs a thorough housecleaning, and that includes probably the madam who is a member of the Cabinet. As reluctant as I am to support an amendment coming from the Republican side, I am going to do it anyway. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the previous paragraph that I may offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I object.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to say to the gentleman from Maryland that the Clerk read down to line 20, including the "District of Columbia." The gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] offered his amendment and the paragraph I refer to was not read.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield? The subject was proposed and considered by the House a year or two ago and disposed of.

Mr. CONNERY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the paragraph has not been read, and to support that I will refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague is in error. I heard the Clerk read distinctly the amount "$28,000", which ends the paragraph. That was before the gentleman addressed the House.

Mr. CONNERY. I did not desire to bring this matter up in reference to the Clerk's reading, but he could not possibly read the paragraph in the time that elapsed between the time I took my seat and waiting for the paragraph to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in ruling on the point of order will state that the Clerk insists that the paragraph was read, but the gentleman from Massachusetts, unfortunately, rose to speak out of order at the time the amendment was pending.

Mr. CONNERY. I started to talk about the word "Columbia", which ends the paragraph. The gentleman from New York rose and moved to strike out the last word, and I rose in opposition to the pro-forma amendment and said that I was going to offer an amendment to this paragraph, which has not been read.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if the section or paragraph in the bill has been read and no debate has been had on that section, the question of going back in the bill is waived regardless of whether it was read or not. It is presumed to have been read if the preceding section was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, with regret, accepts the reasoning of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] on that point.

Mr. CONNERY. Then, Mr. Chairman, after explaining the situation to my friend from Maryland [Mr. Lewis], and knowing the fairness of the House, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again put the request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to offer his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. GRISWOLD: Page 100, line 17, strike out "$748,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$884,600."

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is simply giving to the Bureau of Labor Statistics what the Budget Director asked that they have. No matter what one may say, and I recognize the interest of the Committee in economy, I think the Committee has erred in its judgment. The Committee has tried to bring out the bad things about this Bureau of Labor Statistics, the fact that they have promoted efficient employees, but has not brought out all of the good things. It has not brought out the fact that this Bureau of Labor Statistics is by statute that we have enacted forced to do certain things, collect certain figures-all of your retail sales statistics, all of the wholesale sales statistics, all the living costs on which are based the subsistence fees of the Army and Navy, the building permits, hours of work, wages, working conditions—all come under this Bureau. It is said that it has increased its functions. It has increased its functions, as the Department of Agriculture has, as the Department of Commerce has. You give to the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Economics, more than $3,000,000 for 30,000,000 farmers, for the collection of information, while for 40,000,000 laborers, salaried workers, you give only $748,000. To the Department of Commerce for the collection of information and the dissemination of information you give $2,700,000, and to 40,000,000 who are vitally interested in labor, living cost, and employment information you give less than $800,000. These statistics are now reaching a place where they are used more than ever in the economic life of the country. They are the only statistics on which you can base national income. They are the statistics being used today in case after case to prevent strikes.

The Bureau puts out information both for the employer and the employee-facts on which they can sit around a table and adjudicate matters, and if all of the money exrended here will prevent only one strike of major importance in this country it will have saved more than the total appropriation. Fifty-one thousand requests, according to the hearings, came to this Bureau last year for special information, which were answered. The largest percentage of them came from industry. The hearings show that the Department of Commerce uses the Department of Labor figures as a basis for its own figures, and you give the information service of the Department of Commerce $2,700,000. The Census Bureau cannot collect these figures. It has no means by which it can do it. As a matter of fact, when the last census was taken, and the hearings show this, the Director of the Bureau of Labor Statistics went to Mr. Austin with a request for the information that he should get to help them with this Bureau, and Mr. Austin did not get the information. It is not of record. There is no other way to get it. The only governmental agency that puts out figures on retail prices and the cost of living to the American housewife is this Bureau. For the work it does, in comparison to other governmental bureaus, it receives a mere pittance. The amount should not be reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There is no purpose on the part of the committee to discount the value of the work which is being done by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. We recognize to the full the great importance of that work and the efficient manner in which it is being handled, and we also recognize the fact that on account of the passage of recent legislation, notably the Social Security Act, the duties of that Bureau have been very largely expanded, and that additional moneys to those which were sufficient a few years ago are necessary in order that this work shall be properly carried on. The chairman of our committee a few moments ago resisted vigorously the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon], which was designed to reduce this appropriation by $48,000. It is now our duty to express with equal vigor our opinion that the appropriation should not be increased by $136,000, as is proposed by the gentleman from Indiana. Why? Because the committee has carefully examined the subject matter and has determined from the evidence which was at its disposal that the amount of money carried in the bill is amply sufficient to carry on the work. The arguments of the gentleman from Indiana are not adjusted to that question. He simply stresses the importance of the work being done by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. With that portion of his argument we agree, but he has not offered any suggestion of a reason why more than $748,000 is required to do that work; and, in our opinion, based on the evidence received by us at the hearings, the amount carried in the bill is amply sufficient.

Attention has already been called to the fact that the Department of Labor last year made 700 administrative promotions. How did they do that? They did it by using the savings fro 1 appropriations made by Congress for the Department of Labor. How were they able to make the savings? Because the Congress had appropriated more money than was necessary for the activities of that Department. The question here is whether or not we propose to permit that practice to continue.

May I read to my colleagues a very instructive bit of testimony given by Judge William J. Graham, of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, which appears on page 300 of the hearings had upon the Department of Justice appropriation bill, illustrating the practices followed in some of these departments in the matter of appropriations and securing additional appropriations from Congress. Judge Graham says:

The trouble is that Congress makes an appropriation of, say, $10,000 for an item, and when the department finds about the first of June that it still has $2,000 or $3,000 left, there is a great hurry and bustle to contract for the expenditure of that money, oftentimes for things that are unnecessary. They do that instead of covering it back into the Treasury. The principal motive back of that is this: They think that if the committee notices that they have been covering money back into the Treasury they will not get as much next year. For that reason they spend it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, no Member in the House could be more disposed to thank members of the committee for their faithful efforts to keep down expenditures on the part of the Government than I am. However, as I look at this subject matter, I am amazed to find how very minimal, how contentious we are, with regard to some very maximum subjects. One of those is the subject of employment. In the previous appropriation the sum of $884,000 was carried for studies by the Department of Labor into wages, employment, living conditions, and related topics. Those inquiries concern 40,000,000 wage earners in the United States. If you will divide $884,000 into 40,000,000, you have a statistical grant of 2 cents per employee given the Department of Labor under last year's appropriation to cover the great subjects

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many of those 40,000,000 people to whom the gentleman has referred really read these statistics that are gotten out for this money that is appropriated?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. If 50 men in the United States in the right positions, ourselves, for example, should read them, they would determine the weal or the woe of the whole 40 000 000

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. Does not the gentleman think that, in view of the billions we are expending in an attempt to solve the problem of unemployment, it is essential that we should have a thorough census of unemployment, and that the expenditure of that amount of money would be infinitesimal in relation to the billions we are spending trying to meet the problem? How can we attack the problem intelligently until we know what the problem is?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I agree with the gentleman. I should be sorry to see this great subject fall between two stools, the Director of the Bureau of Census and the director of this particular bureau. Some $3,000,000 are allowed for analogous work, for statistical reports with regard to some 6,000,000 farms in this country. Certainly we get more than compensatory benefit from that kind of investigating work.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. In the hearings it shows there were 8,743 special requests by Members of this House. The booklets go to over 5,100 local labor unions in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Lewis] has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it is seldom I rise to sponsor an increased appropriation, but, to my mind, this is one of the very most important appropriations that has been considered by the House. The fact that the Bureau of the Budget has recommended $885,000 should be sufficient evidence that it is needed. It is not only for the purpose of the 40,000,000 wage earners. It does not make any difference whether 40,000,000 wage earners, or others, read these reports. This Congress needs some concrete information. We have not had any real information with reference to wages, hours, working conditions, the employment situation, the number of unemployed in the United States, the number of employable, and so forth. We have had to depend upon a private agency for the best information we have received.

It has been variously admitted on numerous occasions that the American Federation of Labor is about the most authentic source of information we have, insofar as statistics are concerned with reference to the number of unemployed and the number of unemployables in the United States, scales of wages, and related matters it is so necessary for this Congress to have. I think we ought to have a permanent institution, and our Bureau of Labor Statistics is a permanent institution, but through limited appropriations it has been a statistical institution in name only.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think $885,000 is enough. I think the expenditure of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 in this all-important matter would be well worth while; because, if I should come back to the next session of Congress, I would like to have some accurate information as to just how many people are unemployed in the United States, what the wage standards are, and what the condition of the unemployables of the United States is. I would like to know how many men and women we must take care of because they cannot be used in the factories, the mills, and the mines of our country; and I hope and trust this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is stated in the report that the reduction will be made where the pinch will be least felt. Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Is it not a fact that in this case 40,000,000 people will feel the pinch?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; and more than 40,000,000, because with 40,000,000 people affected, everyone in the United States is

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Can the gentleman think of any more vital information to the Congress than that which can be provided by this Bureau if it has sufficient funds?

Mr. WOOD. I certainly cannot, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I took occasion to rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from New York, further reducing this item. At this time, however, I desire to say a few words in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to increase the appropriation.

We are not here today, Mr. Chairman, abolishing this Bureau. From some of the statements which have been made one would gather the impression that we were going to run this crowd out of Washington before sundown. Nothing of the kind is going to happen. We are only reducing the appropriation in the light of the testimony given before our committee. We feel that $748,000 is sufficient to carry on this work.

The remark was made a moment ago that between 800 and 900 requests have been made on this Bureau by Members of Congress. Perhaps so, but we are not abolishing the Bureau, and I make the assertion that even if this item is reduced as the committee recommends, a Member of Congress can still get from the Bureau the very kind of information he secured before.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. Mr. GRISWOLD. Is it not true that by this reduction the efficiency of the field force will be decreased by 40 percent?

Mr. McMILLAN. It will be reduced a little, of course.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Forty percent. Mr. McMILLAN. We have got to make a start cutting down at some place, and here is a Bureau which has been increased more than 100 percent in 3 years. It is about time somebody took the bull by the horns and said "Stop." This is the situation.

The gentleman talked about 40,000,000 people being affected by a lessening of the work of gathering statistics. So many statistics are put out in this country by boards and bureaus that we get absolutely dizzy reading them. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman speaks of the many bureaus issuing statistics. Does the gentleman get from the Government any accurate statistics as to wages and hours of employment? He does not get them from a single bureau.

Mr. McMILLAN. Certainly I get statistics. The members of the committee have been so flooded with statistics that I think we want to change our names so we won't be plagued with them. I am absolutely satisfied that the $748,000 allowed by the committee for this work for another year is quite sufficient.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In the last 3 years this Department has spent something over $2,000,000 in the gathering of statistics and has not yet found out how many unemployed there are, has it?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a great deal to what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Now we are asked to let them spend an additional $137,000 so they can find out how many unemployed there are. It is silly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. CONNERY) there were-ayes 17. noes 51.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. All those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will stand and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Fourteen Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

GRANTS TO STATES FOR MATERNAL AND CHILD-HEALTH SERVICES

Grants to States for maternal and child-health services, Children's Bureau: For grants to States for the purpose of enabling each State to extend and improve services for promoting the health of mothers and children, as authorized in title V, part 1, of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 629-631), $2,820,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be allotted to any State (as defined in such act) under subsection (b) of section 502 thereof: Provided further, That in carrying out such part 1, the allotments to States and expenditures thereunder for the fiscal year 1937 are authorized to be made on the basis of a total of $3,800,000 for all States under subsection (a) of section 502 and for such purpose the sum of $1,800,000 named therein shall read $2,780,000. Grants to States for maternal and child-health services, Chil-

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 105, strike out the remainder of the paragraph following the colon in line 10, and insert the following: "Provided, That in carrying out such part 1, the allotments to States and expenditures thereunder for the fiscal year 1937 are authorized to be made on the basis of a total of $3,800,000 for all States (as defined in such act): Provided further, That any allotment to a State pursuant to section 502 (b) shall not be included in computing for the purposes of subsections (a) and (b) of section 504 an amount expended or estimated to be expended by the State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1933; personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the United States Employment Service when specifically authorized by the Secretary of Labor; law books, books of reference, newspapers and periodicals, printing and binding, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and miscellaneous expenses, $2,785,000, of which amount not to exceed $885,000 shall be available for the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, District of Columbia Public Employment Center, and all other purposes, including not to exceed $197,500 for personal services in the Department in the District of Columbia, and not more than $1,900,000 shall be available for apportionment among the several States: Provided, That the conditional indefinite appropriation to supply the Government's conditional indefinite appropriation to supply the Government's apportionments to States qualifying under said act for the first time provided for in Appropriation Act of March 22, 1935 (49 Stat. 104), shall continue available for the fiscal year 1937.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations a question. The appropriation for the Employment Service of the Department of Labor for the year 1936 was $3,200,000. The Budget estimate for 1937 was $4,000,000. The committee allowed $2,785,000, which is less than the amount of money appropriated for 1936.

Mr. Chairman, the Employment Service, especially in these arm that the Government has. I shall not offer an amendment, because I feel sure that the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations has gone quite far with us today in connection with allowing liberal appropriations, and therefore I do not want to embarrass him. I think the Senate will put it back to $4,000,000. May I inquire what the reason of the committee was for cutting this appropriation for the next year below what it was the past year?

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to my delightful friend from Massachusetts who is making the inquiry, that the Budget recommended $4,000,000, because that is the authorized amount. This was the amount authorized by the Wagner-Peyser Act. The fact that the committee did not recommend that amount here is due to the record showing that the Employment Service has on hand at the present time the sum of $1,100,000 that has been apportioned to the States but not used by them. On the 1st of next July, coincident with the availability of this appropriation, this sum of $1,100,000 will be reapportioned among all the States.

As the gentleman knows, these funds are apportioned to the States under certain conditions and regulations. Going back just a little for the purpose of explaining the item, onefourth of the $4,000,000 estimated by the Budget and authorized by law, or $1,000,000, is intended to take care of the administrative expenses incident to the act. This would leave $3,000,000 to be apportioned to the several States. Insofar as this apportionment is concerned, certain rules and regulations are laid down for the States before they may secure the funds. They have to qualify under the rules. I believe there are 35 States which have qualified and 15 or 16 States and Territories have not as yet qualified. Consequently, there is the sum of $1,100,000 that has not been apportioned by reason of the failure of these States to qualify. While next year the other States may come along and in the course of the year qualify under these terms, in view of the fact there is $1,100,000 still unexpended and is ready to be reapportioned, the committee has provided $1,900,000 additional in this bill, which, added to the $1,100,-000, will make $3,000,000 available for grants to the States in the next fiscal year.

In addition to the $1,900,000 for grants to States, $885,000 has been provided for administrative expenses and costs of the veterans' placement, farm placement, and other special services. This explains how we arrived at the total of $2,785,000.

Mr. CONNERY. Would it not be wiser to leave it at the $3,200,000? Would the chairman accept an amendment to put it to the place where it was last year; not go up to the $4,000,000, but $3,200,000?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think so.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Even with the amount of money unexpended, to which the gentleman referred, suppose the 10 or 12 States come in during the coming fiscal year; what then?

Mr. McMILLAN. If they should come in, there will be a sufficient amount of money. In view of the facts brought out before the committee I do not think it is necessary to increase

The situation is just this: If all 48 States qualified under the terms of the act when the first appropriation was made 2 years ago, and if each State at that time and each year since had availed of all of the money they were entitled to receive, there would be no money in this jackpot to reapportion among all the States. The fact is, however, that all States have not qualified, and only six of them have taken all the money to which they were entitled. So it is we find that there is a nest egg here of $1,100,000 that represents moneys apportioned to the States, but not used by them. Now, instead of giving the Employment Service $3,000,000 days of unemployment, it seems to me, is the most valuable for grants to the States plus this $1,100,000, or a total of $4,100,000, we simply propose to give what the law authorizes, namely, $3,000,000, and thus save $1,100,000 to the Government. It seems to me that this is a most fair and equitable arrangement.

Mr. CONNERY. I shall not offer an amendment because the gentleman has been very generous.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. This matter of the $1,100,000 to which the gentleman refers as being unexpended, does not help us in my State. We find we are handicapped by being restricted in the use of the funds and the appropriation has resulted in the closing down of one after the other of the county offices where these records have been laboriously built up. We have begun to depend on this service and now find ourselves without it. I think that is what the gentleman from Massachusetts refers to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the gentleman is referring to the State reemployment service provided for by emergency funds. I can assure the gentleman from Minnesota that his State will get their proportionate share of the $3,000,000 that will be available on July 1, 1936, under this appropriation.

Mr. KVALE. But the service has been inadequate, and we have had to curtail it instead of building it up. As we built up these records and qualified we find ourselves unable to use them.

Mr. McMILLAN. In many of the States that have not qualified they, too, are in the same position; and, as a matter of fact, in worse shape than the gentleman's State.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BITUMINOUS COAL LABOR BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For three Board members and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for all other necessary expenditures of the Bituminous Coal Labor Board in performing the duties imposed upon said Board by the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, including supplies, stationery, telephone service, telegrams, furniture, office equipment, travel expenses, and contract stenographic reporting services, $79,300.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANDOLPH: On page 109, line 20, strike out "$79,300" and insert in lieu thereof "$160,000."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time because I am peculiarly and particularly interested in this item of the pending bill.

Of course, I represent, together with my five Democratic colleagues in the House, the State of West Virginia, which is the largest bituminous coal producing State in the United States at the present time.

You will recall that when the supplemental appropriation bill was brought in during the present session of the Congress there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to strike out the salaries necessary to carry on the Bituminous Coal Commission itself. I recall that at that time the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], who originally voted against the Guffey coal bill, on that occasion when it was desired to strike out the appropriation to carry on the Commission, rose on this floor and said that even though he was against the act itself, after it had been passed it certainly should be carried out in all its parts. You will recall that Mr. Taber's motion upon that occasion, on January 24 of the present year, was defeated in committee, while the supplemental appropriation bill was being considered, by a vote of 70 noes to 29 ayes.

I am very certain that the fairness of my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee here today, will cause him to bring to our attention this fact, that this appropriation is for the carrying on of the mediating body, which is the Bituminous Coal Labor Board, by providing the money for the salaries and other expenses which are actually needed in order to function.

I regret the committee has brought in a report in connection with this item which uses this language:

The life of this mediating Board is contingent upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the so-called Carter case now pending before it to test the constitutionality of the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act.

Certainly the Members of this House never pass legislation with the idea of such legislation being declared unconstitutional. It would be an admission on our part if we failed to carry forward the appropriations for any part of the Commission or Board, because of such a contingency.

Let me repeat the words of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], who was in charge of the supplemental appropriation bill, when, in referring to the gentleman from New York, he said:

Mr. Chairman, this is a new departure in legislative procedure when the House of Representatives undertakes to anticipate the action of the Supreme Court and thereby withhold appropriations from institutions.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. What will the gentleman's amendment do?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The amendment simply puts in the bill the amount which the Budget has allowed of $165,000 to carry on the work and pay the salaries and operating expenses of the Bituminous Coal Labor Board.

Mr. CONNERY. Set up under the Guffey bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; for the year 1937, and in the report it is stated that the committee has cut the estimate for operating expenses about 50 percent.

I say that in all fairness the committee should vote today as the committee did when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] had his appropriation bill here, when salaries were allowed for the Bituminous Coal Commission. Today they should be allowed for the members of the Bituminous Coal Labor Board. The two fit in and work together in carrying forward the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act, and I am certain that the fairness of the chairman of the subcommittee will cause him to rise and accept the amendment, or if he does not see his way clear to do that, the Members on the floor today will carry forward what it has vitally needed and adopt my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, our friend the gentleman from West Virginia has made a mighty good speech. I have enjoyed it, but I desire at this time, before entering into the matter of the particular amendment which he has offered, to state that just a couple of months ago, when we brought in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill the question arose as to the funds necessary to provide for the administration of the Potato Act. I may call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the House declined to include such funds for the very reason the committee at this time has declined to take the action suggested by the gentleman in this matter. However, I may say to my friend that we did go 50 percent better than we did in the potato case, because in this matter we have at least provided funds sufficient to take care of the administration of the act in the event it is declared constitutional, until next January, when Congress will be back here and can make a reappraisal of the need for funds.

The situation in respect of this matter is this: Everybody knows that the question of the constitutionality of the Guffey bill is now pending in the Supreme Court and a decision, perhaps, will be rendered in the case in a few weeks.

Now, when these men came before us they did not have any definite program set up. They did not know just what would be necessary. They estimated as best they could what they thought would be necessary, but in view of the fact that the decision of the Supreme Court will be handed down within a few weeks, certainly there is enough money here, according to their own estimate, to take care of the administration of the law until next January, when we come back in the next session of Congress.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; but I want to say that I am not adverse to the gentleman's proposition, nor am I unsympathetic to the need of providing adequate appropriations, but we can go along, and I am satisfied that without any trouble these funds we are providing will be more than sufficient until next January.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say once more that the membership of the Committee, the Members of this House, will put themselves in a position which is improper if they fail to adequately provide for this Board set up under a legislative act.

Mr. McMILLAN. We are not providing legislative authority for a board to be set up; we are only providing funds for the expenses, on the Board's estimate, to take care of the administration of the law until next January.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is my understanding that the estimates placed by those who are administering the Board are $165,000, and not $81,800, as placed in the bill. Funds unused if the act was unconstitutional would be returned to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Randolph) there were 25 ayes and 35 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. No part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid to any person for the filling of any position for which he or she has been nominated after the Senate has voted not to approve of the nomination of said person.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. For some years my honored and beloved colleague, Hon. WILLIAM B. OLIVER, of Alabama, has been chairman of the subcommittee which has charge of the pending bill. It has been a matter of deep grief and regret to all of us that on account of a temporary indisposition he has been compelled to forego his duties here in the Congress of the United States. He will not be a candidate for reelection to the House, and I am sure that my distinguished absent colleague will carry away from this body the universal love and respect and admiration of every Member on both sides of the aisle with whom he has served in the past. [Applause.] It will be very comforting and heartening to him, in the period of his illness to have had this manifestation which you have just given of the genuine love and respect in which he is held by the entire membership of this body, and your recognition of the great service he has rendered to the Congress and the country during the 26 years of distinguished service in this body.

Fortunately for the Congress and the interests of the country, he has been succeeded in his position by our distinguished colleague from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan]. [Applause.] And I rise to pay tribute of admiration as well as commendation to the present chairman of that subcommittee as well as to his associates on the subcommittee, upon both sides of the aisle, for the very splendid and efficient work they have done in the discharge of their duties in reporting and passing this bill. This is a bill making appropriations for four of the great coordinate departments of the Government, and in the discharge of the duties of a committee looking into all of the intricate ramifications and details of a bill of this character, infinite patience, perseverance, and persistence is required as well as good judgment. It is rather remarkable, however, that the hearings on the bill have been so well considered by the subcommittee before bringing it to the floor of the House, containing, as it does, 100 pages and more, that we have passed it under the 5-minute rule really in a very few hours and without any substantial amendment whatever. And it is a further evidence of the desire of this subcommittee to reduce the expenditures of the Government as far as possible, by the sum of $9,000,000 under the Budget estimates for these appropriations. [Applause.]

I do not want to be fulsome, and I never am, in my praise of men here on this floor, but I say to you in all candor that one of the chief compensations we have here in our service in this body is to have occasional words of praise and appreciation with reference to our duties, and I have thought it only proper, and I trust you will think it pertinent, that I have paid this small tribute to the chairman of this subcommittee and to those who have acted with him on this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished majority leader for the kind words that he has said about my chairman and about the members of this subcommittee. I have served for 14 years in this House with Mr. OLIVER. of Alabama, and for some 6 years as a member of the same subcommittee, of which subcommittee he later was chairman. I am glad to tell the members of this committee that in the course of my entire service with Mr. OLIVER there never has been a single partisan question raised in our subcommittee. [Applause.] We have tried, and I think that is universal on the Appropriations Committee, to look at the fiscal affairs of the Government purely from the point of view of the Government itself, and not from any partisan consideration. I regret very much that Mr. OLIVER's illness is going to prevent his standing again for reelection. He has been a very able member of the Committee on Appropriations for many years, and, having served with him on this subcommittee, and also having served with him on the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee, I can testify as a Republican that he has been always efficient and particularly courteous to the minority members. Never once has he tried to shut us off from full and free questioning of the witnesses. I regret very much to hear that he will no longer be with us.

As for our new chairman, I think that everything that I have said about Mr. Oliver applies to Mr. McMillan. He is a very worthy successor. [Applause.] We have been struggling for between 7 and 8 weeks now, every day, including most of the Saturdays, on this bill, and in this entire winter there has never been a difference of opinion between Mr. McMillan and myself, either personally or in a partisan way.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, of course, I am very grateful to the majority leader, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] and to my colleague from New York [Mr. Bacon], the ranking minority member of my subcommittee, for the very kind remarks they have made in connection with my service as chairman of this subcommittee.

On yesterday during my remarks in explanation of the bill I undertook, in an humble way, to pay my respects to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver], who has for so many years served with such great distinction and ability in this House. It is a regret to every member of the committee and, I am sure, to every Member of this House to lose his services. In the future, as in the past few weeks, as chairman of this subcommittee I shall always look for Mr. Oliver at the head of the table. It is a great regret on my part that he is no longer with us.

Mr. Chairman, I do want to say just a word to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] and to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon]—that I am very, very grateful to them for the very kind remarks they have made in connection with my service. I want to assure every Member of the House that it is a pleasure to have served in this capacity, and it is a great pride to me today to have my bill go through in the way it has. I am very grateful to you. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Harlan, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. McMillan, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HON, ADOLPH J. SABATH

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I was delighted a few moments ago to hear our distinguished majority leader, Mr. Bankhead, pay an eloquent and richly deserved tribute to our colleague, Mr. Oliver, of Alabama. Such kind words of sincere friendship and admiration are a wonderful inspiration and a dearly cherished feature of our lives. Expressions of that kind lighten our frightfully onerous and strenuous service, and go a long ways. On this occasion I take pleasure in calling the attention of the House to the fact that tomorrow the dean of this House, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], will reach the period of threescore years and ten, his seventieth birthday. [Applause.]

It has been a genuine delight for me to have served with Mr. Sabath for nearly 28 consecutive years in this House. His services here have been characterized by a high order of American citizenship, by exceptionally efficient and distinguished statesmanship. He has served his great State loyally and well. He has done a world of patriotic and public-spirited good work during these past 30 years that he is now rounding out in this House. He has the admiration and respect of the entire House. During the entire history of our Government, from the time the first Congress met on March 4, 1789, in New York, we have had almost exactly 10,000 Members of the House of Representatives. Of all those 10,000 Members, our colleague from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] is the only Member of foreign birth who has ever served 30 years in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

We have had a thousand distinguished men in this House who were born in foreign lands, but the gentleman from Illinois has the rare distinction of being the only one of all of them who has honorably represented our country in the Congress of the United States for 30 years. I feel that is something he and this House have a right to be proud of. In fact, the American Republic has a right to be proud, because it sets a high and encouraging example. It holds out a hope and an inspiration to all other citizens of our country who have come from foreign lands.

I may say that the gentleman's brother, as judge of the domestic relations court in Chicago, has had a most distinguished career. For 30 years he has made a world's record of beneficent services to troubled humanity. I know we all hope that ADOLPH SABATH may have good health and be spared for many more years of membership in this House.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, during my service in Congress I have been thrown in close contact with Adolphus Sabath, a distinguished Member of this House, who has had 30 years of continuous and able service in which he has reflected credit upon himself and the position with which he has been honored. Although he is a Representative from a great city he has always been interested in agriculture, labor, and industry. His every act, every thought, and every heartbeat has been in the interest of his country and those in distress. He is one of the hardest working Members of this body and one of the most conscientious and patriotic citizens with whom I have ever come in contact. I have never known of a more loyal party man. To him it is almost impossible for his party or his friends to do wrong. He possesses and demonstrates the highest principles of statesmanship. For almost 2 years I have served as vice chairman, under him, of what is known as the Sabath real-estate bond investigating committee. It is almost entirely due to his untiring efforts that multiplied millions of dollars have been saved to bondholders, most of whom are in need and have invested their life's savings in these bonds. Often have I sent him home when he was physically exhausted working in their behalf. One of his greatest faults is taking his responsibilities too seriously, often to the impairment of his health.

He is a striking example of what a poor boy of foreign birth can accomplish in America. He knows what it is to feel the pangs of hunger and to long for the friendly voice or handshake of a friend. He knows the rough and rugged road one travels from obscurity to a position of honor and esteem. He never forgets those who have befriended him. He is an untiring worker not only for the constituency of his district but for the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois.

May he live long in this land he loves, surrounded by his loved ones and friends. May the winter of his age be as green as spring, as full of blossoms as summer, and as generous as autumn. May all of this period of his life be spent in the Halls of Congress, an honor he so richly deserves. When at last the fires of life grow dim, may the memory of his wonderful achievements in Congress, in behalf of his constituency and all America, fill his soul with peace and perfect joy.

I am sure it is the profound wish of every Member of this House that he enjoy good health, happiness, and heaven's richest and best gifts during his journey through life.

DISTINCTIVE CAREER OF CONGRESSMAN SABATH A CREDIT TO HIS PEOPLE AND TO OUR NATION

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words in tribute to the service of our beloved colleague from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], who, when I came to Congress, was so kind to me as a new Member. I have asked favors of him time after time, and he has been patient and sympathetic. I have always appreciated it.

I want also to add that his career is distinctive of the United States of America. As is well known, he was born in Bohemia, a foreign country, and is of Jewish blood. His life demonstrates that, after all, the American people are not prejudiced against a man because he is of foreign birth. It also singles out the United States of America as a nation tolerant of a man of Jewish extraction serving in the chamber of deputies, the parliament, the Congress, or the law-making body of the Nation. He has been a shining light to his own people and an example to the race from which he sprang. He has also been a shining light to the American people.

He is honest, sincere, and has never cared for riches. He has preferred to serve his country and humanity simply, fairly, and courageously.

As a new Member of Congress and as a Member of Congress from the far, great State of Texas, I add my praise of a man who has given this Nation more than a generation of faithful, patriotic service. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes. gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, to one who is a newcomer in the field of public service there is a great element of inspiration in the life of our distinguished colleague from the State of Illinois, my good friend, Mr. Sabath. As you reflect upon his whole existence you get a better idea of the fluidity and the speed with which history passes. He was born in the old country only 4 or 5 years before Germany had vanquished France and heaped upon that prostrate country a great indemnity which was really the seed for the World War. He was born just a year after Lee surrendered his sword to Grant at Appomattox; and from the date of his birth and from the time he came to this country as a lad, he has seen the swift-moving panorama of history and has been identified with that portion of American history which is glorious indeed. He came here under an illustrious Roosevelt and we honor him today under another Roosevelt.

I am glad to add my little meed of praise to the service he has rendered to his constituency, to the State of Illinois, and to the people of the United States.

It was my good fortune to serve during the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses on the Select Committee Investigating Real-Estate Reorganizations, of which he is the distinguished chairman. I know with what vigor and energy he has applied himself to this work. I know, too, the tax that work has been upon his vitality. No person can go through daily hearings morning and afternoon and then sit in the smoke-filled room in some hotel in a city distant from home pouring over records to prepare for the morrow without having some high regard for the energy, the vigor, and the sincerity with which he has addressed himself to a task that was assigned to him by the Congress of the United States.

He has been a faithful and diligent public servant, and as one of his colleagues from the State of Illinois and from the Republican side of the aisle, it is really a privilege and a pleasure to add my meed of praise to his record of public service today. His has been a distinguished and praiseworthy career.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am going to object to every speech after this. This is turning out to be a mutual admiration society.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I feel that these eulogies of my very dear friend, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] would not be complete if I did not speak on behalf of the entire Democratic delegation from New England as the senior of that delegation, in paying a tribute to him the eve of his seventieth birthday and congratulating him upon having served 30 years in the Congress of the United States. Any Member who has served for even 1 year knows the strain, mentally and physically, which devolves upon every Member of this House. When we consider that Adolph Sabath has survived 30 years in Congress through all its legislative battles and through all of the legislative trials and tribulations which he must have undergone, and we look at him today, his fine, hale, and hearty physique, we are all happy that he is with us. I want to congratulate him on behalf of the New England Democratic delegation and to speak the thoughts of every Member of that delegation in wishing him many, many happy, successful, and healthful years. Ad multos annos. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I served with the gentleman from Illinois 20 years in this House. No man here has a more genial and delightful personality. I believe that I speak the sentiments of the House when I say that everyone who has served with ADOLPH SABATH is his friend. I do not know of an enemy that he has made in this House and in serving 30 years that is quite an accomplishment.

I think that Adolph Sabath is a remarkable Representa-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the of agriculture, but he has been an active farmer himself. He has been one of the great producers of this Nation, and I want to add my humble word of praise to that which others have expressed. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my hearty approval of what has been said in regard to the services of the Honorable A. J. SABATH, of the Fifth District of the State of Illinois.

There is no one in the House who enjoys to a greater extent the respect and the confidence of his colleagues. Neither has anyone ever served his district and his country with greater ability and greater loyalty. He was a Member of the House when I first came to Congress, and for many years has enjoyed the distinction of being one of its leaders. During that time he has not only served as a member of many of its important permanent committees but he has been appointed on a number of important special committees, and is now serving as chairman of the special committee which is investigating the issuance and the pyramiding of bonds upon hotels, apartment houses, and other large buildings in various cities of the country. It can be truly said that by his earnest, able, and conscientious work as chairman of this committee he has saved many millions of dollars to the small investor, and if he had done nothing else as a Member of Congress this accomplishment makes his career a notable one.

The fact that he is also chairman of the steering committee is a further mark of confidence and esteem which his colleagues hold for him.

He has always been loyal to his party and to his administration, and the House loves and admires him because of his loyalty to every obligation and his very earnest, active attention to his duties.

I take pleasure in paying this brief tribute to the distinguished service which he has rendered as one of the leaders of the House, and to express the hope that he may be spared for many years to come in the service of his constituents and his country. [Applause.]

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not wish to let pass this opportunity to felicitate our beloved and respected colleague from my own State upon his reaching such an important milestone in his busy and useful life. Now, I want to say to all of you that which I have heretofore said privately and to smaller groups of our Members. ADOLPH Sabath deserves the congratulations of all of us for a record of worthy accomplishment. That record, if we are to judge from his undiminished mental vigor and his fortunate state of health, as well as from the approving regard of his constituents, is one which we may confidently expect to be enlarged to by the addition of many more years to his long period of devoted public service.

One of the commendable qualities possessed in a rare degree by the dean of this House is his willingness to share without stint the benefits of his long experience and his familiarity with public affairs among the younger Members who feel the need of his counsel. Few of us have failed to profit by that generous spirit; and I, for one, wish to make public acknowledgment of my indebtedness to him in that respect, as well as in many, many other ways.

We may well congratulate our colleague upon this propitious birthday; and I think all of you join with me in the happy belief that Judge Sabath is surely destined to have his years of active and outstanding service in this House extended beyond the time that any Member has served here since the birth of the Republic.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, very few men in the history of this country have ever had the pleasure and privilege of rendering such noble and distinguished service to our country as the Honorable Adolph J. Sabath, who today reached his seventieth birthday. As one of his colleagues I desire to congratulate him. I also congratulate his constituents for their selection of such an able and courageous man to represent them in the United States Congress. Judge Sabath, as he is known by his colleagues, is dean of the House, having served in the House of Representatives longer than any other tive of the people. He has not only been a faithful friend one person. As he was a distinguished judge in the great ideal for the type of service that a Member of Congress is called upon to render. The country is fortunate in having a man of his ability, foresight, and knowledge in the House of Representatives.

Judge Sabath, whose every heart throb and pulse beat is with the plain people of this country, is a friend of the worker and the poor people. He is a friend of veterans of all wars and their dependents. Judge Sabath was a member of the steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1, known as the bill to pay three and one-half million World War veterans the remainder due on their adjusted-service certificates. He was a member of that committee for a number of years and at the many conferences and meetings of this committee, of which I was chairman, Judge Sabath was seldom absent. His advice and counsel were relied upon by the other members of that committee in our efforts to go in the direction of the best and most effective results. Our efforts were finally crowned with victory and no other Member of this House is entitled to more credit for the payment of these certificates to the World War veterans than is Judge SABATH.

Again, I congratulate him on his 70 years of good living, right thinking, and able and courageous service.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, owing to an important hearing of my committee, Ways and Means, on the pending tax legislation, it was not possible for me to be in the Chamber during the closing minutes of today's session, at which time many of our colleagues paid honor to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the dean of this House, Adolph J. SABATH. I would have liked to have obtained a few minutes to voice my high regard for him and tell this body about the respect the people of the great State of Illinois have for our leader from the Fifth District of my State.

Mr. Sabath has just passed his seventieth birthday and is now serving his thirtieth consecutive year in the House of Representatives, a record never before attained by a foreignborn Member of the House. He has thus served here during peace, during war, during the reconstruction period following the close of the World War, during the "wild" twenties, during the depression, and during the present recovery period. He has seen at firsthand real history in the making and I know is exceptionally proud of the fact that it was his privilege to play such an active part in it all.

It is certain that the United States is a greater Nation, a more potent influence in world affairs, because of the service of Adolph Sabath of the great city of Chicago. Adolph SABATH never sold his country "short" and was always on the side of patriotic Americanism and righteousness for all the people. He has sponsored much progressive legislation during his many years of service in this House, and his name will go down in the archives of this, the greatest legislative body in all the world, as one of its outstanding Members. He has served on the most important committees and all such service has been most effective. He has never been found wanting or hesitating when the welfare of his adopted land was at stake, and has often raised, effectively, his voice in defense or in opposition to policies of Government as he saw them. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the dignity of this branch of our Government has been enhanced because of Mr. Sabath's long service in it. And I speak for the entire Illinois delegation here when I say that we all hope that he will be here many more years in order that the Nation can continue to have the benefit of his wisdom and rare legislative ability.

While Mr. Sabath has been in Congress for the past 30 years, and necessarily absent from his home city of Chicago a greater part of that time, he has nevertheless kept in very close touch with affairs in that great city, and especially with the people in his own section of the great metropolis on Lake Michigan. He has long been a recognized leader there and his advice and counsel has been sought by civic leaders for the last 40 or 50 years, or since he attained his majority. Before coming to Congress he served with much honor and distinction upon the bench in his chosen city, a proceed for 5 minutes.

city of Chicago for a number of years, his background is | position which is now occupied by his brother. No task, no job, no effort has been too great for Adolph Sabath to tackle if he thought it would be for the benefit of his people, his city, his State, or his Nation. His own people have been coming to him for advice for many years, and he is the real leader in his section of Chicago. He understands the problems, hardships, and handicaps of the poor of a great city, many of whom, like himself, came to the United States from a foreign shore. The name Sabath is legend in Chicago, and with all respect to other members of his fine family, our colleague here in the House is the reason therefor. This man has surely lived a busy, useful life, and the manner in which he has stood up under it is the marvel of his many friends and associates. Mr. Sabath is the head of a large and successful law firm with offices in Chicago, and has, in addition to his fine services in the Congress, attained much prominence in his chosen profession. Chicago is one of the greatest cities in all the world, and it has been leaders like ADOLPH J. SABATH that has made it such.

Not only has our dean given a lifetime to his Nation, his adopted country, but he has not neglected the Democratic Party, with which he became identified early in his career. He has been a member of the Democratic County Committee of Cook County for over 40 years and has thus been high in the councils of his party for most of that time. He is still a member of that committee, and if I know anything about practical politics in my State, he will be for many years to come. With all his service here in the House, he has not forgotten the people who live in his district and his ward on the west side of Chicago. With all his contact, official contact with high officials of the United States, and the solving of the problems of a great National Government, he has not neglected his own neighbors and friends at home. They have not and never will forget him; make certain of that; and when I make the statement that A. J. SABATH WIll be here many years yet and also be a most vital part of the democracy of the third largest State in the Union, Illinois, I think I know whereof I speak. Mr. Sabath's political activity has not been confined solely to his own ward, district, city, county, or State, but he has taken a most active part in the affairs of the Democratic Party nationally and is frequently in consultation with leaders from throughout the

I do not believe that another individual has done as much toward swinging the foreign vote in the great metropolitan centers of the Nation toward the party of which he and I are a part as Mr. Sabath, and a good many of my friends of the Democratic side of the House received much larger majorities in their own districts at various elections because of the effective work done by the gentleman from Illinois among the foreign born and those of immediate foreign extraction. He has always been at the service of his party wherever and whenever possible.

Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen spoke about Mr. Sabath today, and on behalf of the Illinois Democratic delegation, the third largest in this House, I want to thank them. I have always thought it much better to "send flowers to the living instead of to the dead", and I know of no better subject of such felicitations than the dean of this House, now 70 years young and in his thirtieth consecutive year in this great legislative body.

A statesman, a friend, an able legislator, a good citizen, may he be spared to us for many, many more years.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH rose.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CITRON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I would not be honest with myself nor with the Members if I did not admit that I greatly appreciate the complimentary remarks that have just been made, on the occasion of my seventieth birthday, about me and my 30 years' service in the House. I want you to know that I am sincere when I say that I have always tried, since first entering the House, to be of real service to a great Nation which gave such wonderful opportunities to me and to millions of others. Like many of them, I came from a land that had suffered much, to find in the United States a country offering liberty, freedom of thought, and opportunity. All my life I have lived among the poorest of people. Because I know what it is to want, and what it means to suffer, I can never forget these people, and during later years, when by their will I represented them in Congress, I was ever mindful of their needs, their hardships, and their problems.

I have always been proud to be a Member of Congress, and have declined other public offices, even though more highly paid. It has been my honor to serve with such outstanding gentlemen as the late Champ Clark, John Sharp Williams, Claude Kitchin, Bourke Cochran, and Henry T. Rainey on the Democratic side and with "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Nicholas Longworth, Jim Sherman, Sereno E. Payne, John Dalzell, and James R. Mann on the Republican side, as well as with hundreds of other able and fearless legislators. All of them at one time or another were subjected to criticism and attack. I have naturally resented the charges that have been brought against Congress, particularly during the past few years, and as one who has served 30 years I think I am qualified to judge as to the loyalty, honesty, and ability of this Congress. In that connection may I say that I consider the membership of this body more truly patriotic, able, honest, and sincere than any group of people in the Nation, whether they be leaders of industry, of finance, or of any of the professions.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] states that I have always been an ardent Democrat. That is true. I have studied the history of our Nation, and, in my opinion, the principles of the Democratic Party as set down by Jefferson, its founder, show a more humane understanding of the problems of the poor and the oppressed. I have always felt that the Democratic Party is nearer to the people than any other.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the expressions of friendship from both sides of the House. It is something I will remember in the years to come. I hope it will be my honor and distinction to continue to serve my country.

May I also express the wish that my old friends, ED TAYLOR and the Speaker, as well as those other Members who have been so kind as to speak of me today, and the other Members present, equal or surpass my 30 years of service. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that there may be other Members of the House who would desire to pay a tribute of respect to our colleague from Illinois. May I therefore ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks in the Record at this point?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was granted unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But the gentleman yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The SPEAKER. The House granted 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, and the gentleman out of deference yielded to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think it is inappropriate to talk about textiles after a day like this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to talk about anything he pleases within the rules of the House. The House has granted him 5 minutes, and the Chair proposes to see that the gentleman gets 5 minutes.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, on March 26, 1936, I protested to the Secretary of State about the reported increase in the importations of cotton goods from Japan. Today I received a letter from the Secretary of State, which is as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 2, 1936.

The Honorable WILLIAM M. CITRON,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Citron: I am glad to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of March 26, 1936, covering a copy of a letter of March 25 which you have received from Mr. Russell T. Fisher, secretary of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, Boston, Mass., of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, Boston, Mass., with regard to the increased importations of certain cotton textiles from Japan in January 1936, together with a mimeographed copy of a letter of the Cotton Textile Institute of New York City on the same subject. I have noted these communications with care, and particularly your own emphatic protest against the increased importation of Japanese cotton goods.

Importations of cotton-piece goods from Japan did increase markedly in January as compared with the rate of importation of these goods from Japan during the last 6 months of 1935. In view of the assurances given by representatives of the Japanese Government to this Department in December, the January figures of imports from Japan were brought to the attention of the Japanese Ambassador just as soon as they were available, and the Japanese Embassy took the matter up immediately with the Foreign Office in Tokyo. I am sure that the question is being given serious consideration by the Japanese Government. We are awaiting a definite response to our representations and it is our hope that the Japanese will be able voluntarily to control this situation. Should this prove impossible, then we shall certainly give further consideration to the entire problem. You can rest assured that very close attention and study is being given to this matter by this Department and by other interested agencies of the Government.

For your convenience, I enclose a copy of the press release of the Government.

For your convenience, I enclose a copy of the press release of December 21, 1935, relative to the assurances of the Japanese Government regarding voluntary restriction by the Japanese exporters of their shipments of cotton textiles to the United States. Sincerely yours,

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an enclosed release given out by the Honorable Cordell Hull on December 21, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

December 21, 1935.
The Japanese Ambassador called on Mr. Francis B. Sayre, Assist ant Secretary of State, on December 21, 1935, with reference to the suggestion which had been made by the Department of State that some agreement be reached providing for voluntary control by Japanese exporters of their shipments of cotton textiles to the United States.

The Ambassador informed Mr. Sayre that his Government au-The Ambassador informed Mr. Sayre that his Government authorized him to say that Japanese manufacturers and exporters of cotton textiles have decided voluntarily to restrict their exports to the United States. He said further that this self-imposed restriction of shipments to the American market is already in force and that in view of the assurance of the Japanese exporters that they would continue to hold such shipments to moderate levels, there is little likelihood of a repetition of such abnormal increases in exports of cotton textiles to the United States as occurred during the first 6 months of 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

TAXATION

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, in considering the proposed tax bill last night it suddenly occurred to me that there is a fundamental flaw in the proposal, so extraordinary that it seems the attention of the Congress should be called to it at the very threshold of our investigation or consideration

At the President's request the Ways and Means Committee is considering a tax proposal for the express purpose of raising sufficient revenue to meet the ordinary needs of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1937 and an extraordinary deficiency caused by circumstances over which we have no present control.

It is because the President has asked for sufficient revenue to fulfill his purpose and because I do not think that the present proposal fulfills the President's request that I am speaking now. It is my great fear that the present proposal will not only fail to meet the deficit from 1936 but that there is the greatest danger that the present proposal sacrifices a constant and certain source of revenue.

It has been estimated by advisers to the Treasury that the present corporate tax will produce a revenue in excess of $800,000,000 for the fiscal year 1937, earned during the year 1936. I may say that I am in sympathy with the general theory of the proposal to tax corporate surpluses unreasonably withheld beyond prudent need, but under the working out of the proposal as it is now framed, it affords the corporation the opportunity to escape the corporate income tax either entirely or in large part for the payments which would ordinarily be made during the fiscal year 1937. By distributing its earnings to its stockholders the corporation escapes this tax, the thought behind the tax proposal being that dividends thus distributed will produce increased revenue through taxation in the hands of the shareholders. But our important problem is to raise adequate revenue for the fiscal year 1937.

In order to escape the 1936 corporate tax it is not necessary for the corporations to make their distributions during the These excess distributions may be made, and probably will be made, during the first 21/2 months of 1937, and the corporate tax may still be wiped out, but-and this is the thing that I want to impress upon you most seriouslyif these distributions are made during the first 21/2 months of 1937, they are not subject to income-tax payment until 1938. Since the dividends would be received by the stockholders during their taxable year of 1937, they could not be taxed to the stockholders for the tax year 1936, and the postponement of this taxable income to the year 1937 means that the stockholders will pay their first tax thereon in the year 1938.

I submit that such a result is so foreign to the wishes of the President in respect to the yield expected from the tax proposal that all consideration at the present time will avail nothing unless we do securely provide for the revenue when the President wants it.

The point is this: It is proposed by the Treasury to tax to the corporation only its undistributed net earnings, earned on and after January 1, 1936-assuming also that that is the beginning of the corporation's fiscal year-in lieu of all present income corporation taxation. For the calendar year 1936 the corporation cannot balance its books and determine its net earnings for the year until after December 31, 1936. The proposal provides 21/2 months after December 31, 1936, to close its books and determine its earnings and make distribution to its stockholders.

If during the 21/2 months, that is, January 1, 1937, to March 15, 1937, the corporation distributes to its stockholders all of its net earnings earned during 1936, the corporation is then wholly exempt from Federal income taxation for the year 1936.

The earnings determined and distributed in the 21/2 months following the end of the year then, and not until then, become the property of its stockholders, and in their hands. for the first time, become subject to individual income tax. The receipt of dividends, however, takes place after January 1, 1937, and is income to the stockholder for the year 1937 rather than for the year 1936. The stockholder having received the dividend does not account for and pay taxes thereon until March 15, 1938, or after.

The collection into the Treasury of the United States of hundreds of millions of dollars, perhaps a billion dollars, is thus postponed for at least 12 months, and would throw the anticipated Budget of the Government out of balance by the amount of revenues thus postponed, if we abandon entirely, as has been proposed, the present corporation income tax. The effect of all this is to create a gap in the revenue from corporate income for an entire year, at the least, and leaves the Treasury holding an empty bag insofar as revenue from corporate income is concerned. In short, the proposal does not produce the income to the Government which was expected in 1937 until 1938. It therefore defeats the very purpose of the President, and unless this problem is solved, it does not seem possible that anyone can vote for the bill.

This defect in the proposal is so fundamental that we are losing time considering the details of the bill until this matter is met.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield. Mr. McFARLANE. I should like to know what the gentleman's suggestion is as to how we can correct the defect he has just mentioned.

Mr. PETTENGILL. This is a problem for the tax experts who are the advisers of the Congress, as well as our own

Mr. McFARLANE. Has the gentleman made this suggestion to the committee?

Mr. PETTENGILL. No; I have not.

ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein a letter addressed to me by Mr. Charles E. Bunnell, president of the University of Alaska, which is a land-grant college.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter addressed to me by Mr. Charles E. Bunnell, president of the University of Alaska:

COLLEGE, ALASKA January 30, 1936.

Delegate from Alaska, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR DELEGATE DIMOND: If the inquiries that come to my MY DEAR DELEGATE DIMOND: If the inquiries that come to my desk through the mail are a reliable guide, I must conclude that the public generally is making slow progress in becoming informed about Alaska. Although the "gold rush" days were over three decades ago, the average citizen of the United States is inclined to think of Alaska in terms of dog teams, glaciers, icebergs, polar bears, and other colorful features that have figured so prominently in the romance of the North. Difficult as it was to roll back the western frontier, that task is not to be compared with the difficulties encountered in rolling back the northern frontier. Even though the first thousand miles of the 1,800 miles of ocean travel that separate Seattle and Seward lead the traveler through the most fascinating scenery of North America, still 1,800 miles of ocean travel are going to require at least 5 days. How gladly one would trade them for 2,000 miles of auto travel from Seattle, via British Columbia and Yukon Territory, to Fairbanks, in the very heart of Alaska, but the map shows 1,000 miles of this wonderful project represented by broken lines.

It is impossible to know any country unless one knows its physi-

It is impossible to know any country unless one knows its physical geography. The coast of Alaska from Ketchikan to the most westerly of the Aleutian Islands is open for navigation during the entire year. Bering Sea and the Arctic Ocean are open to naviga-tion only for a few months during the summer. The heavily moistion only for a few months during the stimmer. The heavily moisture-laden clouds from the Japan current encounter cold-air currents from the coast range, with the result that the entire southern coast of Alaska receives heavy precipitation. Here are over 85,000,000,000, estimated, board-feet of unharvested commercial timber on the lowlands in striking contrast with the unestimated billions of tons of ice and snow that hold the highlands and supporting the first of the mountains in a friend coat of distances. summits of the mountains in a frigid coat of glistening white. On this coast in the Bering Sea are found the great fishing industries of Alaska, which produced for the year 1934 a value of approximately $42,000,000.

North of the coast range is the main Alaskan range with Mount McKinley supreme. This magnificent range, with enormous glaciers in the higher altitudes, precipitates most of the moisture from the Japan current not intercepted by the coast range, with the result that the great interior valleys of the Yukota Niver and the tributchies are semigiful. The southern coast of Alaska in the result that the great interior valleys of the Yukota Niver and its tributaries are semiarid. The southern coast of Alaska is cloudy, windy, rainy, and does not record low temperatures, while interior Alaska is clear, warm in summer, cold in winter, and for the most part without heavy winds.

In spite of all that the exact science of mathematics teaches, the tourist, irrespective of the latitude of his home, experiences great difficulty in reconciling himself to the fact that interior Alaska crowds into 100 summer days as many hours of sunshine as there are in the entire summer season of southern United States. To see the midnight sun is a thrill, but to be able to read the daily newspaper at midnight and outdoors for 60 nights each year must be experienced to be believed.

Naturally the people of Alaska have their greatest interest in Naturally the people of Alaska have their greatest interest in the major industries, fishing, mining, and furs, which produced in 1934, $42,000,000, $17,000,000, and $2,000,000, respectively. In this same connection it is interesting to note that during the period of 1880–1934, Alaska has produced over $1,004,000,000 in fisheries, $122,000,000 in furs, and over $680,000,000 in mineral industries.

Alaska need offer no apology for her failure to develop a more thriving agriculture industry. In the "gold rush" days, so "gold minded" were the stampeders that any program of agricultural activity would have received no more than casual consideration. During the period 1900–1930 the United States Department of Agriculture through its Bureau of Insular Stations made an agricultural survey of the Territory, and determined the areas suitable for agriculture and the kinds of crops that could be prown successfully grown successfully.

It takes at least a generation for people in a mining country to recognize agriculture as an industry worthy of consideration. There is no magnet like the lure of placer gold to hold the prospector in its embrace and focus his undivided attention upon the vision of his dreams.

Factors that have militated against agricultural development in the Territory are ocean travel from Seattle to the coast of Alaska, expense of travel, cost of developing a farm where prices are fixed largely by the wages paid in the mining camps, the ever-present fear of being a long ways from the old home in the States, and fear of cold in northern latitudes. Then, too, the Alaskan merchant has not found it convenient to nurse an infant industry chant has not found it convenient to nurse an infant industry when markets in the States offer merchandise with attractive trade names especially prepared for the Alaskan consumer. There is nothing strange or peculiar about this situation, for it is exactly what has happened in rolling back the western frontier.

In interior Alaska and at 64°51'21'' north latitude is located the University of Alaska, 3 miles distant from Fairbanks, the interior terminus of the Alaska Railroad, 470 miles from its ocean terminus at Seward. This institution opened in 1922 and is the last land-grant college to be established. Five years ago the United States agricultural experiment stations at Fairbanks and Matanuska were transferred to this institution.

Diversified farming on the university farm is telling the story of what Alaska can do to produce her own food supplies. Three tons per acre of dry oat and pea hay are not unusual. A 6-acre field produced 360 bushels of fully matured oats. Pigs 205 days old and dressing 175 pounds was the record a year ago. For the months of December and January the income of the farm was over $600 per month for milk at 15 cents per quart. All kinds of hardier vegetables are always a splendid crop. Oats, barley, wheat, and rye are dependable crops. Results obtained last year in experimental station work are typical; at the Matanuska station five different varieties of potatoes yielded an average of 19,000 pounds per acre; at the Fairbanks station a 3-acre field of potatoes yielded 37,000 pounds, and 3-acre fields of oat, pea, and vetch hay yielded 8,500, 9,600, and 9,700 pounds, respectively.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, Alaska imported farm products to the amount of $2,850,000. Of this amount, the value of milk, butter, and cheese totaled the sum of $725,000. Other interesting items are eggs, $346,000; potatoes, $121,500; canned vegetables, $275,000; and meats to the amount of $870,000. Alaska can and ought to produce at least three-fourths of the above-listed imports, but even if she produced only one-fourth it is apparent she needs several hundred farmers busily engaged in supplying her own market. supplying her own market.

When the President of the United States finally decided upon an agricultural project for Alaska it was because he could see the importance of developing a basic industry in Alaska capable of furnishing food for her people. The plan is fundamentally sound. Its measure of success depends largely upon the human equation, adequate transportation facilities, coordination between production and distribution, and efficient management. The University of Alaska is placing at the disposal of the colonists the benefits of years of research in its agricultural experiment stations, and to assist them in solving their farm and home problems trained Extension Service workers are providing an indispensable service. It has been stated time and time again, not only from the public platform but through the press, that Alaska is capable of supporting many, many times her present population. The President of the United States is fully justified in relying upon these statements. They are correct. They are correct.

Alaska possesses a vast domain in the Matanuska and Tanana Valleys suitable for agricultural development. She has not only a cash market, but a market by virtue of the long haul from the States and high freight rates marvelously protected. These factors operate most advantageously in favor of the farmer.

The great highway and the great airway to connect the United States and the Orient, will be through interior Alaska. Highways, railroads, and aviation are solving Alaska's transportation problems. The old Alaska yields to the new order of things. It is a matter of more than ordinary concern that this vast Northland be prepared to produce from her own fields the major part of her own food requirements.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES E. BUNNELL, President, University of Alaska.

JAPANESE EXPORTS OF COTTON CLOTH

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, of course, I shall not object to this request, but I trust no other requests will be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think Japan must be very much amused, very much pleased with our State Department. She enters into an agreement through the State Department with this country to curtail or limit her exports of cotton cloth to this country, and after this gentlemen's agreement she increases her exports of cotton cloth to our country.

Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House, and particularly our southern Members, to the fact that there was a decline of 65 percent in our exports of cotton bales in February 1936 compared to January 1936. Japan bought 65 percent fewer bales of cotton in February than it did in January of this year.

The following table shows the exports of cotton from the United States to Japan:

	1934	1935	1936
Total	Bales 1, 737, 000	Bales 1, 515, 000	Bales
JanuaryFebruary		149, 000 98, 000	156, 000 55, 000
Total for January and February		247, 000	211, 000

February 1936, compared with January 1936, decline of 65 percent; February 1936, compared with February 1935, decline of 44 percent; January 1936, compared with January 1935, increase of 4.7 percent; January and February 1936, compared with January and February 1935, decline of 15

The House will note that not only does Japan export and sell more cotton cloth to us, but it buys less raw cotton from us. The administration has said in effect we must be very careful not to limit Japan too much in her exports of cotton cloth to us for fear that she will not buy our raw cotton. What a joke Japan has played upon us.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time the House took action, as, obviously, the State Department will not take such action. I among other Members of Congress, have repeatedly literally begged the State Department to protect the great cotton industry. All we secure are vague promises. If the State Department is so weak and impotent, certainly Congress need not and must not be. The day of reckoning will surely come when Members must answer to their constituents for idly throwing away a great industry like the cotton textile industry which employs thousands of people in both the raw and finished product.

Mr. Speaker, I also should like you to know how extremely sorry I am, as a Member from New England, that Judge OLIVER, of Alabama, will not be able to return to the House due to illness.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Very gladly.

Mr. CONNERY. I gather from the remarks of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that she would be pleased to support the bill I have before the Ways and Means Committee, which provides that whenever the total landed cost of any article or commodity entering the United States is less than the cost of production, such article shall be barred from the United States.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall be very pleased to assist the gentleman, because we must protect our trade.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield for another question?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very sorry, but I only have 1 minute, and I wish to express my appreciation of Judge OLIVER.

Before his illness, Mr. Speaker, he was always tireless in his work in the development of trade, not only in his own southland, but in our northland, in the West and in foreign countries, and as a northerner, and as a Yankee, Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell you how much this means to us in New England.

SOIL CONSERVATION PROGRAM IN THE SOUTHERN REGION FOR 1936

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a portion of an informative series of questions and answers prepared by the Department of Agriculture relating to the soil-conservation program in the southern region.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a portion of an informative series of questions and answers compiled by the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of illustrating the operation of the new soil-conservation program in the southern region for 1936, as follows:

PURPOSES OF THE PROGRAM

1. Q. What are the objectives of the 1936 soil-conservation program?—A. The objectives stated in the act for 1936 are: (1) To preserve and improve soil fertility; (2) to promote the economic use and conservation of land; (3) to reduce the exploitation, wasteful, and unscientific use of soil resources; (4) to protect rivers and harbors against the results of soil erosion.

2. Q. How will the 1936 soil-conservation program bring about soil conservation and improvement?—A. By encouraging farmers to plant soil-building and soil-conserving crops and to adopt soil-conservation and improvement?—A. By encouraging farmers to plant soil-building and soil-conserving crops and to adopt soil-building and soil-conserving practices.

10. Q. Why was a new national program for agriculture formulated?—A. The provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which authorized production control were declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court on January 6, 1936. The Congress and farmers felt that another national program was necessary to maintain gains already made and to conserve and improve the soil.

11. Q. Will the Secretary of Agriculture enter into contracts with producers under the soil-conservation program?—A. No. Cooperation by producers must be purely voluntary.

tion by producers must be purely voluntary.

12. Q. Where can a producer obtain information about the program?—A. From county extension offices and the county and community committees.

PUTTING THE PROGRAM INTO OPERATION

14. Q. Do producers have any voice in the administration of the program—A. Yes. Through membership in the county association.

15. Q. Who are members of the county association?—A. Any person owning or operating a farm, the homestead or the farm-operating headquarters of which is situated in the county, is considered a member, but any person shall cease to be a member if he fails to file a work sheet within the period specified by the Secretary for filing such work sheet or fails to qualify for a grant.

16. Q. Who is entitled to you at meetings of the association?—

16. Q. Who is entitled to vote at meetings of the association?-

A. Only members of the association

17. Q. What is the county committee?—A. The county committee is composed of three members who must be members of the association and must have been previously elected chairmen of their respective community committees.

18. Q. What are the duties of the county committee?—A. The duties are as follows:

(1) Review all documents filed with them and make recommendations to the Secretary;

(2) Hold hearings and conduct such investigations as may be ecessary in the performance of its duties; and
(3) Perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

19. Q. What is the community committee?—A. The community committee is composed of three members elected from the members of the association living in the respective community. 20. Q. What are the duties of the community committee?-A.

The duties are as follows: (1) Assist in preparing, checking, receiving, and approving all

(2) Make recommendations for payments; and
(3) Ascertain and report when requested by the county committee the total acreage and production of soil-depleting crops and acreage utilization of land on farms, and obtain such other data acreage utilization of land on farms, and obtain such other data as may be necessary.

22. Q. What are the principal forms to be used in 1936 for the soil-conservation program by producers?—A. (1) A work sheet, giving the location of the farm and use of the land in 1935.

(2) An application for a grant at a later date, showing the use of the land in 1936, and a certificate of performance.

23. Q. What is the purpose of the work sheet?—A. The purpose of the work sheet is to obtain a survey of farming conditions and practices and to help the producer plan his farming operations so that he may participate in the soil-conservation program for 1936.

24. Q. Who may fill out the work sheet?—A. Any producer who is an owner, landlord, cash tenant, standing or fixed-rent tenant, or share tenant operating the entire farm.

25. Q. What is done with work sheets after the producers have submitted them?—A. They are turned over to the community and county committees.

county committees.

26. Q. Can an owner or landlord submit a work sheet covering a farm being operated by a cash tenant, or standing or fixed-rent tenant?-A. No

27. Q. Should a producer who owns, operates, or controls more than one farm in the same county submit a work sheet covering each of his farms?—A. Yes.

each of his farms?—A. Yes.

28. Q. May a share tenant who is renting land from two or more owners or landlords sign a work sheet covering all such land?—A. No; but if work sheets are filed a work sheet covering each tract of land must be filed.

29. Q. If the producer's farm is mortgaged, must the person holding the mortgage sign the work sheet or application?—A. No.

30. Q. If a farm has been purchased on installments for cash or fixed commodity payments should the seller of the farm sign the work sheet or application?—A. No.

31. Q. In the event the farm is located in more than one county, in which county should the work sheet and application be submitted?—A. They should be submitted in the county in which the farm-operating headquarters is located, or, in the absence of headquarters on the farm, in the county in which the major part of the farm is located.

DEFINITIONS

32. Q. What is meant by "crop land"?—A. "Crop land" means all land from which any crop (other than wild hay) was harvested in 1935, together with all other farm land which is tillable and from which at least one crop (other than wild hay) has been harvested since January 1, 1930.

33. Q. What is meant by the term "owner"?—A. With reference to the 1936 program, "owner" means a person who actually owns land which is not rented to another for cash or a fixed commodity payment; a person who rents land from another for cash or for a fixed commodity payment, or who is purchasing land on install-fixed commodity payment, or who is purchasing land on installments for cash or a fixed commodity payment.

34. Q. What is meant by the term "share tenant"?—A. A person other than the owner or sharecropper who is operating an entire farm without direct supervision of the owner and who is entitled to a portion of the crops produced on the farm or the proceeds thereof.

35. Q. What is meant by the term "sharecropper"?—A. "Sharecropper" means a person who works a farm in whole or in part and who received for his labor a proportionate share of the crops produced thereon or the proceeds thereof.

36. Q. What is meant by the term "farm"?—A. "Farm" means all tracts of farm land in the same county, under the same ownership, and operated in 1936 as all or a part of a single farming unit by the same operator.

37. Q. What is meant by "producer unit"?—A. The term "producer unit" means any tract of land (whether a whole farm or a subdivision thereof) on which one or more crops are planted and which is operated by (1) landowner, cash tenant, or standing-rent (or fixed-rent) tenant, with his own labor or with hired labor other than sharecroppers; or (2) a share tenant without the aid of any sharecropper; or (3) a sharecropper.

38. Q. What is meant by the term "grant"?—A. With reference to the 1936 program, "grant" means payment to farmers under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

CROP CLASSIFICATION

CROP CLASSIFICATION

39. Q. What are the soil-depleting crops on which payments may be made for acreage diversion?—A. The following crops are soil-depleting crops on which payments may be made for acreage diversion: (1) Corn (including broom corn and sweet corn); (2) cotton; (3) tobacco; (4) Irish potatoes; (5) sweet potatoes; (6) rice; (7) sugarcane; (8) commercial truck and canning crops, including melons and strawberries; (9) peanuts, if harvested as nuts; (10) grain sorghum, sweet sorghums, and millets; (11) small grains harvested for grain or hay (wheat, cats, barley, rye, and small-grain mixtures); (12) soybeans, if harvested for crushing.

40. Q. What are the approved soil-building crops?—A. The following crops?—A. The following crops?—A. The following crops are soil-depleting crop mixtures); (12) soybeans, if harvested for crushing.

40. Q. What are the approved soil-building crops?—A. The following crops are classified as soil-building: (1) Annual winter legumes, including vetch, winter peas, bur and crimson clover, turned under as a green manure crop; (2) biennial legumes, including sweet and alsike clover; perennial legumes, including alfalfa, kudzu, sericea, and annual varieties of lespedeza; (3) summer legumes, including soybeans, velvet beans, crotalaria, and cowpeas, if forage is left on the land; (4) winter cover crops, including rye, barley, oats, and small-grain mixtures turned as green manure and followed in the summer by an approved soil-conserving crop; (5) forest trees, when planted on crop land in 1936.

41. Q. What are the approved soil-conserving crops?—A. The following crops are classified as soil-conserving: (1) Annual winter legumes, including vetch, winter peas, bur and crimson clover; biennial legumes, including sweet and alsike clover; perennial legumes, including alfalfa. kudzu and sericea, with or without such nurse crops as rye, oats, wheat, barley, or grain mixtures, when such nurse crops are pastured or clipped green; summer legumes, including soybeans except when produced for seed for crushing, velvet beans, crotalaria, cowpeas, and annual varieties of lespedeza; (2) peanuts when pastured; (3) perennial grasses, including Dallis, redtop, orchard, Bermuda, carpet, or grass mixtures, and Sudan grass, with or without such nurse crops as rye, oats, wheat, barley, or grain mixtures, when such nurse crops as rye, oats, wheat, barley, or grain mixtures, when such nurse crops are pastured or clipped green; (4) winter cover crops, including rye, barley, oats, and small-grain mixtures, winter pastured or not, and turned as green manure; or if harvested and followed by summer legumes; (5) crop acreage planted to forest trees since January 1, 1934.

42. Q. What uses of land are classed as neither soil-depleting, soil-building, nor soil-conserving, and which cannot be counted in establishing bases?—A. (1) Vineyards, treefruits, small fruits, or nut trees (not interplanted; if interplanted, such acreage shall carry the classification and actual acreage of the intercrop grown); (2) it cares land (where due to unusual weather conditions) carry the classification and actual acreage of the intercrop grown); (2) idle crop land (where, due to unusual weather conditions, crop land was left idle in 1935, it may be reclassified upon the recommendation of the State committee and approval of the Secretary); (3) cultivated fallow land, including clean cultivated orchards and vineyards (cultured fallow land may be otherwise classified upon recommendation of the State committee and approval of the Secretary); (4) wasteland, roads, lanes, lots, yards, etc.; (5) woodland, other than that planted at owner's expense since January 1, 1934.

43. Q. What are the approved soil-building and soil-conserving practices?—A. A list of practices will be recommended by the State practices?—A. A list of practices will be recommended by the State committee and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

45. Q. How will the acreage of corn interplanted with legumes be regarded?—A. The acreage of corn which is interplanted with legumes will be regarded as 50 percent corn acreage and 50 percent legume acreage. Thus, 30 acres of corn interplanted with legumes will be classed as 15 acres of corn and 15 acres of legumes. This rule applies also to the acreage of other soil-depleting crops interplanted with legumes.

46. Q. Will the acreage classed as corn when corn is interplanted with legumes be classed as a soil-depleteing crop?—A. Yes. However, the producer will not be penalized for any increase in his corn acreage when corn is grown for food for carrying on the normal operation of the farm.

47. Q. Will there be any deduction for increases in food and feed crops?—A. No deduction will be made with respect to any food or feed crop unless they are grown in excess of the home-consumption needs for the farm.

ESTABLISHMENT OF BASES

48. Q. What is the first thing an individual farmer must do who intends to participate in the soil-conservation program for 1936?—A. He may, with the help of a committeeman, determine the soil-depleting base for his farm.

depleting base for his farm.

49. Q. How will the soil-depleting base be determined?—A. This base will be the acreage in soil-depleting crops (except for cotton, tobacco, rice, peanuts, and sugarcane) on the farm in 1935 unless it is determined that such acreage is not in accordance with the general farming practices in the locality, in which case adjustments may be made, and further adjustments will be made for rented acres used for soil-depleting crops in 1935.

50. Q. How is the base cotton acreage for a farm determined?—A. The base cotton acreage will be determined in accordance with instructions issued by the director of the southern region, and approved by the Secretary. Such determination will be arrived at in essentially the same manner as the base cotton acreage would have been under the proposed 1936 agricultural-adjustment program.

51. Q. How is the base tobacco acreage for a farm determined?—
A. The base tobacco acreage will be the base acreage which was provided for under the proposed 1936 agricultural-adjustment provided for under the proposed 1936 agricultural-adjustment program.

52. Q. How will the base peanut acreage for a farm be determined?—A. The base peanut acreage will be determined essentially in the same manner as it would have been determined under the proposed 1936 agricultural-adjustment program.

58. Q. Will the planting of lands in soil-building crops in the 1935 adjustment program be taken into account in determining the base acreage for a farm?—A. Yes.

59. Q. If a crop is planted in the fall of one calendar year for harvest in the succeeding calendar year, which year shall be used in designating the acreage planted to such crop?—A. The calendar year during which the crop is harvested should be used.

60. Q. What types of payments will be made to producers?—A.

(1) Soil-building payments; (2) soil-conserving payments.

(1) Soil-building payments; (2) soil-conserving payments.
61. Q. What provisions have been made concerning food and feed crops grown on the farm for home consumption?—A. No payment will be made in connection with shifting land out of food and feed crops unless such crops are produced in excess of home needs.

63. Q. For what are soil-conserving payments made?—A. These payments will be made for diverting acreage from soil-depleting crops to soil-building and soil-conserving crops and for approved soil-building and conserving practices.
64. Q. What is the rate of soil-conserving payments?—A. The rate of the soil-conserving payment for diversion from soil-depleting crops, other than cotton, tobacco, peanuts, rice, and sugarcane, varies among States, counties, and individual farms according to the productivity of the land, but the average for the United States will be around $10 per acre.
65. Q. Will a producer be required to have a minimum acreage

65. Q. Will a producer be required to have a minimum acreage of soil-conserving crops in order to receive payment?—A. Yes. No payment is to be made on any farm unless the total acreage of soil-conserving crops and soil-building crops on crop land on the farm in 1936 equals or exceeds either (a) 20 percent of the base acreages of all soil-depleting crops for the farm, or (b) the maximum acreage with respect to which soil-conserving payments may be made on the farm. be made on the farm.

66. Q. What is the rate of soil-conserving payment for diverting acreage from the production of cotton?—A. Payment will be at the rate of approximately 5 cents for each pound of the normal yield of lint cotton per acre.

67. Q. What is the maximum acreage diversion with respect to

67. Q. What is the maximum acreage diversion with respect to cotton on which payment may be made?—A. Thirty-five percent of the base cotton acreage for the farm, except that payment cannot be made in any county on more than 25 percent of the total of the base cotton acreages for all farms in the county.

68. Q. What is the rate of the soil-conserving payment for each acre diverted from the production of tobacco?—A. (1) Five cents per pound of the normal yield for flue cured or Burley, (2) six cents per pound of the normal yield for Georgia-Florida type 62, (3) three cents per pound of the normal yield for Georgia-Florida. (3) three cents per pound of the normal yield for Georgia-Florida type 45, or any other kind of tobacco.

69. Q. What is the maximum acreage with respect to which payment on tobacco will be made?—A. Thirty percent of the base

69. Q. What is the maximum acreage with respect to which payment on tobacco will be made?—A. Thirty percent of the base tobacco acreage of the farm.

70. Q. What is the rate of soil-conserving payment for acreage diversion on harvested peanuts?—A. One and one-fourth cents for each pound of the normal yield per acre for the farm.

71. Q. What is the maximum acreage diversion with respect to peanuts harvested as nuts for which payment will be made?—A. Twenty percent of the base peanut acreage for the farm.

75. Q. Why may the rate of the soil-conserving payment vary from the basic rate specified?—A. The rates specified are based upon an estimate of available funds and an estimate of approximately 80-percent participation by farmers. If participation in any region exceeds the estimate for that region, all the rates specified for such region may be reduced pro rata. If participation is less than the estimate for the region the rates may be increased pro rata. As has been stated, in no case will the rates be increased or decreased more than 10 percent.

76. Q. What are the approved uses which may be made of the land diverted from the production of soil-depleting crops?—A. The approved uses are as follows: (1) Planting soil-building crops, (2) planting soil-conserving crops, (3) following approved soil-building practices.

ing practices.

77. Q. For what are soil-building payments made?—A. These payments will be made for planting approved soil-building crops or carrying out approved soil-building practices.

78. Q. Will soil-building payments be made for planting approved soil-conserving crops?—A. No.

79. Q. What is the rate of the soil-building payment for planting approved soil-building crops?—A. The rate is determined by the State committee for each State and approved by the Secretary.

80. Q. What is the rate of the soil-building payment for putting into effect approved soil-building or soil-conserving practices?—A. The rate is determined by the State committee for each State and approved by the Secretary. State and approved by the Secretary.

81. Q. Is there a limit on the soil-building payment for a farm?—A. Yes. The total soil-building payment for each farm cannot exceed $1 for each acre of crop land on the farm used in 1936 for soil-building and soil-conserving crops; except that the soil-building payment to farms having less than 10 acres in such crops may exceed $1 for each such acre, but the total payment in such cases cannot exceed $10 for the farm.

82. Q. May the State committee recommend a soil-building payment at a rate in excess of $1 per acre of each acre planted to soil-building crops or devoted to soil-building practices?—A. Yes. But the total soil-building payment to the farm cannot exceed $1 for each acre of soil-building and soil-conserving crops, or $10 for the farm, whichever is greater.

83. Q. How does the acreage in soil-conserving crops affect the soil-building payment?—A. The acreage in soil-conserving crops plus the acreage of soil-building crops sets the limit of the total soil-building payment that may go to the individual farm.

84. Q. To whom will the soil-building payment be made?—A. To the producer who incurred the expense with reference to soil-building crops or practices. Where two or more producers incur the expense, the soil-building payment he divided equally between them.

the expense, the soil-building payment shall be divided equally between them.

85. Q. How will the soil-conserving payment be divided?—

A. The soil-conserving payment will be divided as follows:

(a) 37½ percent to the producer who furnishes the land; (b) 12½ percent to the producer who furnishes the work stock and equipment; (c) 50 percent to be divided among the producers who are parties to the lease or operating agreement in the proportion that such producers are entitled to share in 1936 in those soil-depleting crops, or the proceeds thereof, with respect to which the soil-conserving payment is made.

86. Q. Will there be any exception to this rule in the southern region?—A. Yes. The State committee may recommend a variation in the rule, and it will be followed if approved by the Secretary.

87. Q. If a producer increases his acreage planted to any soil-depleting crop above the base acreage established for such crop, may he still receive payments?—A. He may receive payments if he has qualified, but an amount will be subtracted from his total payment equal to the soil-conserving payment for the excess acreage, on the same basis that he would have received for diverting the same number of acres. This would not apply, however, if the excess acreage were used for the production of food and feed crops for home consumption.

excess acreage were used for the production of food and feed crops for home consumption.

83. Q. When will payments be made?—A. As soon as possible after the producer has made application and has established proof that he has met the conditions of the grant.

89. Q. In case there are two or more persons entitled to receive payment, will payment be made to each person?—A. Yes. Payment will be made by check drawn payable to each individual, owner, landlord, operator, or tenant.

92. Q. Can a producer pledge anticipated payments?—A. No. However, he will be permitted to designate a joint payee at the time the certificate of performance is executed. No document other than a properly executed certificate of performance in which a joint payee is indicated will be recognized. No agreement indicating pledge or assignment will be recognized.

93. Q. Can claims for payments be assigned?—A. No.

ADMINISTRATION

95. Q. What Federal agency will be in charge of the soil-conservation program for 1936?—A. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the United States Department of Agriculture.

96. Q. How is each producer's acreage and production determined?—A. From his own reports, which are checked by the community and county committees.

97. Q. Is any evidence of production required?—A. If there is any question as to the accuracy of the producer's figures, records may be called for as proof of production.

98. Q. What is the purpose of the county association?—A. Its purpose is to put the soil-conservation program into successful operation.

101. Q. Will a producer be given the privilege of appealing from the decision of the county committee?—A. Yes. Appeals from the decision of the county committee may be made in accordance with instructions to be issued by the Secretary.

SELF-RESPECT OF TEACHERS SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED; LIBERTIES PRESERVED

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TEACHERS HAVE RIGHT TO ORGANIZE-LIKE BANKERS

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, big business, bankers, industrialists have always been organized. Why not teachers? I believe that teachers should comply with the laws of the country; that they should obey rules and regulations-but that they should not be humiliated or persecuted and they should be free people and enjoy the same rights and immunities under the Constitution as other people do.

STUDENTS-THE CHILDREN MOST IMPORTANT IN EDUCATION

What is the most important factor in education? The students, of course. This makes it necessary that teachers have a right to teach. This, in turn, necessitates full liberty of speech; and that is what they call "academic liberty." should have self-respecting teachers for our children-teachers who are free, who are unfettered, and who will tell the truth.

And I make no bones about the fact that I believe that they should be well-organized to protect their interests.

Civil-service employees in the Government have their own organizations. Many of them are members of the American Federation of Labor and other labor organizations. At any rate, they enjoy protection in their employment, in the matter of social legislation, and pensions.

RIGHT TO TEACH TRUTH SHOULD BE PROTECTED

The teaching profession of this country should, therefore, vigorously defend its right to teach. At the same time they should protect their own jobs and their own future.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to proceed for about 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. After the announcement by the majority leader, if we are going to have any more speeches I think we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me say to the gentleman that I got permission from the majority leader.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman did not get permission from me. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, since the minority leader objects I ask unanimous consent for leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I do not want to throw any monkey wrenches into the proceedings.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, for fear there will be monkey wrenches thrown into the proceedings, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well, there will be no more unanimous consents for awhile on your side of the aisle.

BOARD OF VISITORS-UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and | mittee on Interstate Commerce.

10669. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Community | for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NONFEDERAL PROJECTS NOT FINALLY DISAPPROVED (S. DOC. NO. 193)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, submitting, in response to Senate Resolution 271 (by Mr. HAYDEN, agreed to Mar. 31, 1936), a list of pending non-Federal projects for which no allocations have been made by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and which have not been finally disapproved by such Administration as of March 31, 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was ordered to lie on the table:

A concurrent resolution expressing faith and confidence in Hon. J. J. McSwain, Congressman from the Fourth Congressional

Whereas it appears from various news items that during recent months there have been political attacks made upon the Honorable J. J. McSwain, Congressman from the Fourth Congressional District of this State, such attacks carrying insinuations and innuendoes to the effect that Congressman McSwain is of communistic endoes to the effect that Congressman McSwain is of communistic leanings and that his patriotism is questioned; and

Whereas the people of this State know that such attacks upon Congressman McSwain are absolutely without any foundation whatsoever, and that his patriotism is above reproach and that in his private and public life he has at all times demonstrated that he is a deep advocate of true Americanism in accordance with the plan of our form of government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring),
That the general assembly of this State condemns the attacks that have been made on Congressman McSwain and unequivocally state that he is a man of the highest type, reflecting the ideal of true that he is a man of the highest type, reflecting the ideal of true Americanism; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the presiding officers of the United States Senate and the National House of Representatives, and that a copy also be sent to the Secretary of War and to the Honorable J. J. McSwain.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the making of a $1,500,000,000 work-relief appropriation for the next fiscal year, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Hon. Quintin Paredes, Resident Commissioner of the Philippines, transmitting copies of radiograms addressed to the Secretary of War by the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, containing requests of the Philippine Coconut Planters Association and an assembly representing coconut producing Provinces in the Philippines, for the enactment of legislation to repeal the excise tax on importations of coconut oil from the Philippines used for soap-making purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of United States Department of Agriculture Post, No. 36, the American Legion, of Washington, D. C., endorsing the so-called Reynolds alien deportation bill, being the bill (S. 4011) to further reduce immigration, to authorize the exclusion of any alien whose entry into the United States is inimical to the public interest, to prohibit the separation of families through the entry of aliens leaving dependents abroad, and to provide for the prompt deportation of habitual criminals and all other undesirable aliens, and to provide for the registration of all aliens now in the United States or who shall hereafter be admitted, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Parliament of Community Councils of the City of New York, N. Y., endorsing the so-called Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented the petition of the Central Labor Union of Lowell, Mass., praying for the making of further appropriations for continuation of Federal relief projects, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Malden (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the excise tax on importations of coconut oil from the Philippines used for scapmaking purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Fall River (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Pettengill bill, to amend the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by District Lodge, No. 64, International Association of Machinists, of Fall River, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the manufacture of munitions of war by Government plants operated under civil-service laws and rules, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FLOOD CONTROL-CHEMUNG RIVER, N. Y.

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution of the board of directors of the Elmira (N. Y.) Association of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Elmira (N. Y.)
Association of Commerce Tuesday, March 31, 1936

Whereas the basis for justification of flood-control expenditure for the program as recommended by the Army Engineers for southern New York and northern Pennsylvania is that such cost shall be governed and limited by the amount of damages suffered over a period representing the frequency of a great flood and that such periodicity or frequency is expressed as approximately 70 years of time; and

Whereas the Chemung River, from source, the confluence of the Tioga, Canisteo, and Cohocton at Corning, N. Y., to its joining with the Susquehanna at Athens, Pa., has caused damage because of high water and overflow of $5,000,000 over a period of 70 years, which, distributed in yearly loss, would be nearly $72,000 annually;

Whereas the Army Engineers' research department reported damages from floods in southern New York and northern Pennsylvania prior to 1935 costing approximately $100,000,000, which damage statistics were not considered in the process of justification for expenditure for flood control in this region; and

Whereas the reported recommendation for flood protection car-

Whereas the reported recommendation for flood protection carries with it a damage survey of $28,000,000 as the total loss for the region in July 1935, with approximately one twenty-eighth of that sum representing the loss of Chemung Valley's inhabitants and government agencies, public and private utilities, etc.; and Whereas it is evident that the Chemung River will benefit to the extent of one twenty-eighth of the general expenditure for construction, while the damage done over 70 years would alone justify one-seventh of such cost of protection works, and this may be conceded as unfair to other communities so long as the expendi-one-seventh of such cost of protection works, and this may be conceded as unfair to other communities so long as the expenditure is recommended as given, to wit, $34,000,000:

Resolved, That in order to accord the Chemung River proper share in a correct outlay for flood control, as well as a general figure of expenditure for the entire region governed by the damages from floods over the whole period of 70 years on a basis reasonably justified both by past economic and life loss and also present advance and future development, the Federal Government be asked to more fully explain the process or basic method by which the Army Engineers' flood-control cost has been arrived at and justified; and

Resolved, That the Federal Government be requested to include in its basis of justification for flood-control cost the damages suffered by this area over the entire period of 70 years.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSING CONDITIONS

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Committee for Better Housing, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by Brooklyn Committee for Better Housing at a mass meeting March 26, 1936

In the face of the dire and extensive need for low-rent housing of adequate standards which is known to exist in Brooklyn, the administration has seen fit to undertake the construction of Ten Eyck Houses, a demonstration low-rental housing project designed to shelter approximately 2,000 families.

While we welcome this work as of immediate and lasting benefit our community we would noint out that it can represent only a beginning of what must be done if living conditions in Brooklyn are to be improved. To that great number of Brooklyn's citizens who now exist amid conditions of squalor and degradation the present low-rent housing program of the administration offers no

If the living conditions for vast numbers of Brooklyn families are to be improved the present demonstration program of low-rent housing must be vastly amplified, guaranteed continuation, and granted additional funds. To be effective such action must be taken during the present session of Congress.

Therefore we ask that the administration give its aid and sup-

DIRECT RELIEF GRANTS TO THE STATES

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a resolution unanimously adopted by the council of the city of St. Paul, Minn., urging continuance of direct relief grants by the Federal Government to States regardless of plans for work programs and other security measures. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and appropriately re-

I should also like to have printed in the RECORD, and likewise appropriately referred, a supporting letter by Mr. A. A. Heckman, of St. Paul, director of relief activities for that city.

There being no objection, the resolution and letter were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas in the President's message to Congress delivered March 18, $1,500,000,000 was requested for the continuation of the W.P.A.; and and

Whereas this would indicate that it is the present intention of the Federal Government to grant no direct relief to the States; and Whereas it is the opinion of the council of the city of St. Paul that the Federal Government should grant further direct relief to the States, and that this relief be granted regardless of plans for any work program or security measures, and unless a grant is given by the Federal Government the State of Minnesota will be unable to carry out its relief load for the year 1936: Therefore

Resolved, That the council of the city of St. Paul go on record urging the Federal Government to give further direct relief grants to the States; that direct relief be given regardless of plans for any work program or other security measures; and it is the opinion of the council of the city of St. Paul that unless the Federal Government does so act the direct relief needs for the State of Minnesota cannot be met; be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Representatives from Minnesota in Congress of the United States.

St. Paul, Minn., March 27, 1936.

Hon. Elmer Benson,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.
Honorable Sir: The President in his recent message to Congress HONORABLE SIR: The President in his recent message to Congress on March 18 did not mention the need for direct relief assistance from the Federal Government to States. I also note he requested approximately a billion and a half dollars for the continuance of W. P. A., with the implication that this sum, together with balances remaining from the present fiscal year, would be sufficient Federal assistance until June 30, 1937. It therefore appears that beginning July 1, 1936, there will be less Federal aid, even in the form of W. P. A. grants, than for the year just ending. This obviously means a reduction in W. P. A. employment and a heavier ously means a reduction in W. P. A. employment and a heavier direct relief burden on State and local governments. Private employment may take up some of the slack, but I believe it obvious that it will not take up as much as the President appears to expect. Past history indicates we can look for little increased employment by P. W. A., useful and desirable as that program may be. may be.

From close contact with our State and local public relief offi-cials, and from a careful analysis of relief figures of the past 5 years, I am quite sure Minnesota and its counties and cities can-years, I am quite sure Minnesota and its counties and cities cannot meet the present direct relief needs, to say nothing of the additional burden the President's plan, if carired out, would place upon them. Continued borrowing through bond issues is placing a burden upon real property to such an extent that our cities and counties will soon be bankrupt.

In addition to this burden there is great need for prompt action on the transient situation. Local governmental units are not meeting this big problem, nor is it likely they could meet it successfully because of varying legal settlement laws. Thousands of individuals, young and old, and families are roaming the country with little relief and suffering from lack of proper food, clothing, and medical care.

I sincerely hope you will give serious consideration to the need

I sincerely hope you will give serious consideration to the need for direct relief grants to States, regardless of plans for work programs or other security measures. If aid is not forthcoming from the Fedeal Government, I am sure Minnesota will not be able to meet its direct-relief needs.

Sincerely yours,

A. A. HECKMAN.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing and directing the Commodity Credit Corporation to facilitate the liquidation of loans to cotton producers, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4105) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission of Maryland for park purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 4430) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BYRNES:

A bill (S. 4431) for the relief of Lissie Maude Green; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4432) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease land on the Fort Moultrie (S. C.) Military Reservation to the owners of certain cottages thereon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4433) to provide for the extension of Prospect Street in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 4434) for the relief of Theresa Link, Wencel Link, Edward Block, and John Meyers; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4435) authorizing the President to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Harold R. Wood; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4436) for the relief of Llewellyn B. Griffith; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 4437) for the relief of certain employees and former employees of the post office at Helena, Mont.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BENSON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 246) requesting the President to proclaim October 9 as Leif Ericson Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOLIDGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to Governments and individuals an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Harvard University, which marked the first formal beginning of higher education in the United States; to the Committee on the Library.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE IN NAME OF DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR-AMENDMENT

Mr. LEWIS submitted an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2665) to change the name of the Department of the Interior and to coordinate certain governmental functions, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

They have been rescued from demoralization by idleness and at the same time from demoralization by receiving money without working for it. They have been taken out of competition for jobs in their home communities, leaving available jobs for others of the unemployed. They have by their school studies been preparing for the work of life. They have been doing this in the years when the work of life must be prepared for. INVESTIGATION OF WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, last Thursday, April 2, I made a short statement of about 600 words to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate relative to an investigation of the Works Progress Administration.

The committee listened attentively to my statement, but deferred action until a later date because of the absence of one of the leading members of the majority.

I ask unanimous consent at this point to have printed in the RECORD the statement made before the committee.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JAMES J. DAVIS TO THE COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE, APRIL 2,

When I first asked for an investigation of the Works Progress Administration, I had but one thought in mind. I desired to get the names and salaries of W. P. A. workers in the upper brackets, whose income was $100 a month or above. These would get the names and salaries of W. P. A. workers in the upper brackets, whose income was $100 a month or above. These would be primarily those who were doing administrative work. In order to get this information which I had asked for and which had not been obtained, I suggested an appropriation of $5,000. I realized, of course, that other Senate investigations were costing all the way from $50,000 to $100,000. But when I asked for $5,000, I had only in mind the expense which might attach to securing the list of names for which I had asked.

Since this first suggestion was made so many new developments have come to my attention that I now see that this investigation will cost far more than that. In the first place, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has asked that an investigation of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration be added to the investigation of the Works Progress Administration. This was not my request, but I agreed to it. When word went out over the country that there was prospect of an investigation, letters came to me from all over the country, telling of conditions in the W. P. A. which, if thoroughly examined, would mean an investigation of the Works Progress Administration in every State in the Union. Such an investigation, if once begun, would have to be completed. It would cost Administration in every state in the Union. Such an investiga-tion, if once begun, would have to be completed. It would cost all the way from $100,000 to $250,000. At least $50,000 would be necessary with which to begin. I wish to say emphatically that I desire to have no part in an investigation which is abortive. If a thoroughgoing investigation is to be made, I want to be sure that it is actually what it purports to be. The purpose of such an investigation should not be either to smear anyone or to whitewash anyone, but actually to discover conditions as they are so that information may be made available for the proper regulation of work-relief activities in the future.

We were plunged into work-relief activities in a hurry. administrative set-up was formed to meet an emergency. Very now see that what was said to be an emergency represents condition which promises to be with us for some time. Wo relief is now with us on more or less permanent basis. of these facts, we cannot afford to treat abuses as though they will disappear of their own accord in the near future. We do not know how long work relief will be necessary. We do know will disappear of their own accord in the near future. We do not know how long work relief will be necessary. We do know that at the present time more money is being spent in this way than in any other governmental agency. With the expenditure of so much money there comes an inevitable responsibility to safeguard the administration of these funds, no matter in whose hands they are entrusted.

in whose hands they are entrusted.

If work relief lasts for years to come, we cannot begin too soon to examine ways and means to discover how the tax-payers who foot this bill can get the most for their money. Obviously, we have come to the time when work relief can no longer be continued on an emergency or experimental basis. The Audit Committee will have to determine whether a thoroughgoing investigation is desired or something less searching. In the beginning I asked for $5,000, in order that the names and seleries of administrative officers in the upper brackets above salaries of administrative officers in the upper brackets, above $100 a month, might be secured and an investigation begun in the State of Pennsylvania, as was suggested by Senator Lewis, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

I am prepared to proceed with a thoroughgoing investigation if it is authorized by the Senate, but again I wish to make clear my belief that such an investigation will cost upward of $100,000, and I do not wish to begin an investigation and then later on be compelled to abandon it for lack of necessary funds. If a full and complete investigation of the W. P. A. and F. E. R. A. is to be made, I wish to be sure that it is conducted on a scale commensurate with its importance to American taxpayers. If only $5,000 is to be appropriated, I should like to have distinctly understood that this amount will be used only for the limited purpose for which it was asked.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA BEFORE OKLAHOMA STATE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on March 30 the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] delivered a very informative address before the Democratic State convention of Oklahoma. I ask that the address may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I bring to you greetings from each member of your delegation in Congress. The members of our delegation have a choice collection of legislative trophies and bacon to exhibit and to deliver; hence I am authorized to say that they will be calling on you very soon.

The Honorable James A. Farley, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, sends you the following message:

"Will you please express to the Democratic State convention as-

"Will you please express to the Democratic State convention as-sembled today my heartiest congratulations and best wishes. Oklasembled today my heartiest congratulations and best wishes. Oxfahoma supported President Roosevelt in splendid fashion in 1932, and I know full well your State will again give President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner the same substantial majority in 1936. To all who assisted in any way in 1932 and to those who will be found supporting the ticket in 1936 I extend my sincere thanks and appreciation."

I am authorized by the President to convey to you a message of good will and his appreciation of the loyal support of the Democracy of Oklahoma.

acy of Oklahoma.

Quite naturally I am delighted to be back in this great Democratic city in our great Democratic State. Oklahoma is what it is today because, since statehood, we have been under an unbroken line of Democratic Governors. The Democratic sons and daughters of Oklahoma, native and adopted, have builded here one of the leading Commonwealths of the American Union.

Through Democratic preferment, I have been privileged to participate in this development; and, for such preferment, I am profoundly grateful.

As I travel from State to State and learn of the burdens of debt resting upon our neighbors, in some instances bonded debts running into the hundreds of millions, I am gratified to reflect that our party has builded here a well-completed structure, and notwithstanding the deficits occasioned by the depression, our present State indebtedness totals less than $19,000,000.

As a citizen, I am proud of the record my party has made in the development and management of Oklahoma.

This State Democratic Convention is our official opening of the 1936 campaign. This campaign, soon to become national, will result in the election of the Members of the Seventy-fifth Congress and of a President of the United States.

The temporary chairman of a convention is presumed to state The temporary chairman of a convention is presumed to state the issue or issues to be considered and acted upon by such convention. Later this convention will set forth in resolution form its recommendations and demands and then will select delegates to represent the democracy of Oklahoma at the national convention, where the party platform will be shaped and where our standard bearer will be nominated.

In this convention our task has been made easy and our duty plain. The Democrats of Oklahoma, as well as the Democrats of the Nation, have their candidate already selected. For us, as well as for the Democrats of the Nation, our issue has already been defined. The paramount issue in this campaign will be the New Deal. The Democratic candidate will be Franklin D. Roosevelt. Upon this issue and behind our candidate, democracy will sweep the country, and Franklin D. Roosevelt will be reelected President of the United States.

Our candidate needs no eulogy at my hands. He is known to one and all. He is loved, supported, and followed by the masses of the people everywhere, and, when the history of this generation shall have been written, the name of Roosevelt, the second, will take first rank among the world's powerful and great.

The efforts made by President Roosevelt to rescue 125,000,000 of patriotic and long-suffering people from the ravages of the Hoover depression constitute the platform upon which we will go before the country. These efforts and accomplishments are the tenets of the New Deal, which we will ask the people to approve.

The "new deal" will be opposed by the "old deal." The voters will be called upon to approve the "new" or to reclaim the "old." Upon this issue we have no doubt about the decision in November. What is the "old deal" which we approve?

What is the "old deal" which we condemn?

Upon what do we base our confidence in the voters of the Nation?

Nation?

Such questions will be upon the lips of citizens from now until November. My task is to define the issue.

It is fair to assume that, in the campaign now being inaugurated, the Democratic Party will reassert the principles of government given to America and the world by Jefferson, Jackson, Wilson, and Roosevelt.

It is likewise fair to assume that the Republican Party will reassert the reactionary policies of President Hoover; the stand-pat policies of President Coolidge; and the "back to normalcy" policies of President Harding.

From its organization the Democratic Party has been the champion of the rights and interests of the common man—constituting the masses of the people. Since Lincoln's last day the Republican Party has been the champion of the interests of favored groups and classe

On last Monday Rollins College conferred upon President Roose On last Monday Rollins College conferred upon President Roosevelt the degree of Doctor of Literature. In accepting such honorary degree our President defined the difference between Democrats and Republicans and between the new and the old deal. He said that the problem of government is not to consider the interests of and to act for any one group, or for any few groups. "For the Federal Government," said President Roosevelt, "the problem is to adjust great groups in the interest of the largest group of all—125,000,000 people—in whom reposes the sovereignty of the United States of America."

From the Roosevelt definition of our governmental problem I of the United States of America."

From the Roosevelt definition of our governmental problem I am privileged to conclude that government of groups, by groups, and for groups, set forth the Republican standard, while government for "the largest group of all—125,000,000 people"—is the goal or standard of the Democratic Party.

Group government for groups is "old deal" government. Government for the masses is "new deal" government.

Am I justified in the conclusions just stated? Let me refer briefly to the record.

briefly to the record.

During the past quarter of a century each of the two major During the past quarter of a century each of the two major parties has been in power one-half the time. From 1913 to 1921 Woodrow Wilson was our leader and President. During those historic years all the progressive policies demanded by the people were enacted into law. At the end of those 8 years times were good; the general price level was high; wage earners were employed; banks were making loans; money was plentiful; and credit was shundant credit was abundant.

It was during the Wilson administration that the United States "grew up" and became the strongest, richest, and most influential Nation of the earth. History will record that the years 1912 to 1920, under Woodrow Wilson, constituted "America's Golden Age."

Then in 1920 the people, tired of work and with a surplus accumulated, decided to take a rest and voted the Republican ticket. Many of them have been resting ever since. Many are now tired of resting and want to return to work again.

After Wilson came Harding, and the near panic of 1921 and 1922. After Harding came Coolidge and Hoover and the "panic of all panics" of 1929.

panics" of 1929.

Time will not permit me to dwell upon the economic conditions

Time will not permit me to dwell upon the economic conditions existing at the end of 12 years of Republican rule. They are all too fresh in your memory to need repeating.

In addition to the responsibility of government having been divided equally between the two major parties during the past six administrations, let me call your attention to the fact that during the past 8 years each party has been in power likewise one-half the time. This fact gives the people a perfect chance to judge of the records and accomplishments of the Republican and Democratic Parties.

By reflecting just a moment the voters may recall the deeds.

By reflecting just a moment the voters may recall the deeds,

By reflecting just a moment the voters may recall the deeds, records, and results of the two last administrations. The records of the two great parties stand out in bold relief.

The principles and policies of the Republican Party, as administered by its agents, have been uniformly in favor of the socalled big interests of the Nation. To demonstrate the truth of this statement I have only to refer to a few of the policies enacted into law by the Republican Party.

It was under the Hoover administration that the highest tariff taxes in history were enacted into law. As a member of the Senate Finance Committee I listened to the representations and appeals of selfish monopoly for higher tariff duties. President Hoover endorsed the higher rates and a Republican House and Senate enacted the law. Senate enacted the law.

The tariff rates and schedules of the Hawley-Smoot tariff law erected a wall around our country so high that foreign trade was curtailed and practically destroyed.

Foreign countries and peoples had but little gold; their silver was all but worthless, and our tariff rates were so high they could not possibly sell their goods in the markets of the States. The inevitable result was the closing of our markets to the world, and when our former trading neighbors could no longer sell, they ceased to buy. The result was economic stagnation in America America

The Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act was group, hence "old deal" legislation. Under President Roosevelt and New Deal policies we are reducing these excessive tariff rates through reciprocal-trade agreements and our world trade is increasing.

ments and our world trade is increasing.

When the depression struck in October 1929 the first relief measure proposed and passed by the Republican Congress and signed by President Hoover on December 16, 1929, was a bill reducing the tax rates upon incomes, applicable to the large tax-payers, such as personal incomes, corporations, insurance companies, and nonresident allens. The amount of this rebate to the big taxpayers of the country totaled $160,000,000. Again legislation for a small group of the largest income-tax payers of the country.

This was the first dole granted by the Republican Congress. It was recommended by President Hoover. It was passed within 60 days after the panic broke upon the country. It was made retroactive and thereby the act reached back and made such rebates effective for a year before the bill became the law.

rebates effective for a year before the bill became the law.

The second relief measure recommended by President Hoover and passed by a Republican Congress was the moratorium granted to foreign nations owing our Government some $11,000,000,000 of war debts. This moratory law was supported by American interests having vast holdings and credits abroad. These shrewd internationalists knew that our foreign debtors, without gold or silver, and unable to pay our high tariffs and sell us goods, could not possibly pay both their private debts and, at the same time, pay the interest and installments due our Government. our Government.

The plan developed was to have our Government extend to such debtor nations a gratuitous permissive delay in making payments.
The Hoover moratorium was what the internationalist wanted.
It was the excuse the debtors were looking for. It was the practical cancelation of the war debts due the United States.
This moratory law recommended by President Hoover and en-

This moratory law recommended by President Hoover and enacted by a Republican Congress in December 1931 transferred debts of some $11,000,000,000 from the borrowers abroad to the overburdened taxpayers of the United States.

Under Republican administrations, when a favored group or groups forming the so-called big interests of the country want special legislation, such as higher tariffs for protected interests; lower taxes on large personal and corporate incomes; or when even a moratorium is sought to assist a special group to collect their private foreign debts, the House and the Senate are often kept in session into the nighttime to hasten action upon their bills.

Over the dome of the Capitol at Washington is a large glassed-in session into the nightlime to hasten action upon their bills.

Over the dome of the Capitol at Washington is a large glassed-in room resembling an ocean lighthouse. When either the House or Senate is in session after nightfall a large lamp burns in this elevated tower. The light may be seen from all parts of the city and from afar. When this light burns it is often asked, "What big interest is robbing the Treasury tonight?"

This moratory law was passed near midnight on December 22, 1821

But the "old deal" cherished policies of the Republican Party failed utterly even when administered by their superexecutive, President Hoover. As just stated, when the depression came the very first to ask for direct relief were the agents of monopoly. The second demand for aid came from the largest industries of the country

Acting upon such demand President Hoover recommended the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of loaning public funds to banks, trust companies, life-insurance companies, and the railways of the country.

The laws just mentioned are samples of Republican or "old deal" policies of government. Likewise such laws typify the Hoover or "old deal" plan of relief.

Time and disinclination forbid that I should longer dwell on the failures of the "old deal" policies of the Hoover administration.

At this point permit me to call your attention, very briefly, to the conditions confronting Governor Roosevelt when on March 4, 1933, he was inaugurated President of the United States. On that cloudy, gloomy day all banks were closed. Factories were still.

Millions were walking the streets and highways begging for bread, clothing, and shelter.

At that time money was the scarcest and prices the lowest in generations. Cotton sold in Oklahoma for 5 cents per pound, wheat sold for 19 cents per bushel, hogs and cattle sold for less than $3 per hundredweight, and oil sold for less than 20 cents per barrel.

At that time the total massed annual tax burden resting upon the people amounted to some $10,000,000,000, the total massed annual interest item amounted to another $10,000,000,000,000, and the total massed debts of all the people was estimated to be $250,000,000,000.

At that time the total annual income was scarcely enough to meet the two items of taxes and interest. Such was the inevitable result of "old deal" policies placed in operation by the Republican Party. Such was the picture confronting President Roosevelt on his inaugural day.

No time was lost or wasted by the incoming administration nder the "new deal" administrator. The banks had to be opened. Prices had to be raised. The unemployed had to be given work. Business had to be stimulated and kept going.

The first problem for solution was the money problem. On May 7, 1933, President Roosevelt addressed the people of the Nation. On that occasion he said:

Nation. On that occasion he said:

"The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed."

At this point let me remind you, my fellow Oklahomans, that our State is, in the main, a producer of commodities. We grow cotton, wheat, and corn. We produce oil and lead and zinc. We produce lumber, coal, and livestock. To pay our taxes, interest, and debts we must have money, and the only thing we have to exchange for money are services and the products of our fields, our mines, our ranches, and our factories.

our mines, our ranches, and our factories.

The question that always has been and always will be of supreme interest to Oklahomans is how much of our commodities will we have to produce and deliver to get a dollar.

Prices had to be increased. To raise prices the dollar had to be cheapened.

One of the first acts of the new administration was the pa One of the first acts of the new administration was the passage of a law providing for the devaluation of the dollar. President Roosevelt acted under the law and reduced the size and weight of the gold dollar 40 percent. This act has had the effect of cheapening the dollar. To the extent that the dollar has been cheapened prices have been increased, and in proportion that the general price level has been raised prosperity has returned.

In rapid succession we enacted laws in an effort to check the ravages of the worst depression in history. We passed a law seeking to increase the purchasing power of our farmers. We passed an act seeking to protect the farmers against foreclosures at a time when they could neither refinance nor meet their maturing an act seeking to protect the farmers against foreclosures at a time when they could neither refinance nor meet their maturing obligations. We passed a law providing a plan for the conservation and improvement of our farm lands to the end that such lands may be made to feed and support not only the present generation but the generations yet to come. It must be admitted that the fertility of our farms is being rapidly depleted. Likewise, it is obvious that our farm lands suffer depreciation from the production of unusable and unsalable crops as well as from soil erosion. In brief, the Democratic farm-relief program provides a plan for keeping the soil on the farm.

We passed a law seeking to divide such work and labor as was demanded among as many workers as possible to the end that hours might be shortened, wages might be raised, and distress might be relieved.

We passed a law undertaking to guarantee the safekeeping and

We passed a law undertaking to guarantee the safekeeping and return of deposits in both State and National banks. We passed a law making available public credit to the home owners of the country. We passed a law seeking to stimulate and promote the construction of homes by the people. We passed a law seeking to protect investors in the purchase and ownership of securities of corporations.

We passed laws making available public funds for the relief of citizens in distress. We passed a law which has resulted in taking some 500,000 boys from idleness in the streets, on the roads, and in public places, and enrolling them in the Civilian Conservation

The public places, and enforming them in the Civital Conservation Corps camps located in every State in the Union.

We passed laws providing pensions for those no longer able to work, insurance for those temporarily out of employment, and laws providing aid and assistance to the mothers and children of the land. We passed a law against the employment of child labor.

We passed laws providing public funds for loans and grants to States and subdivisions for the employment of idle labor and for public-improvement purposes.

Again let me remind you that the Federal program for public works originated right here in Oklahoma. Early in 1931 a general mass meeting was held in the labor temple of this city for the purpose of trying to devise some plan for providing work for the purpose of trying to devise some plan for providing work for the unemployed of the country.

E. W. Marland, of Ponca City, now Governor Marland of Oklahoma, served as chairman of the meeting. A few days later William H. Murray, then Governor of the State, issued a call for a State-wide mass meeting to be held in Oklahoma City. The meeting was a success. A program was adopted. The program gained such support that Governor Murray called a national conference to meet at Memphis, Tenn. The Memphis meeting resulted in the calling of a national convention of unemployment relief through a broad program of public improvements at Kansas City, Mo.

The "new deal" public-works relief program follows very closely

The "new deal" public-works relief program follows very closely the plan initiated in Oklahoma and sold to the Nation through the Memphis and Kansas City conventions.

What party, what group, or what "old deal" orator dares to attack the "new deal" policy of credit relief, its policy of social security, its policy of bank-deposit insurance, or its policy of boys' conservation

An attempted attack by indirection was reported to have been made against President Roosevelt in this city only a few days ago. The "old deal" orator, in extolling the virtues of his "old deal"

"Alf has both feet on the ground."

That flight of "old deal" oratory should remind us that only recently a former President had his whole anatomy on the ground. I am wondering just what kind of a race Governor Alf will run with both feet on the ground.

I am perfectly willing to concede that a "both feet on the ground" governmental policy correctly interprets the wishes of those who are opposing the reelection of President Roosevelt. "Both feet on the ground" means inaction, means reaction, and means standpatism. Such a policy is not for either the democracy of Oklahoma or of the American Nation.

of Oklahoma or of the American Nation.

Oklahoma from birth has been known as the "new deal" State.

Our Constitution was a "new deal" organic law, The first political slogan in Oklahoma was, "Let the people rule."

In conclusion: We have gone a long way since 1933. Instead of 5-cent cotton we now have 12-cent cotton. Instead of less than 30-cent wheat we have $1 wheat. Instead of 20-cent oil we have $1 oil. Insofar as price is concerned, oil and wheat are the Siamese twins of Oklahoma.

With conditions infinitely better with prices already doubled.

With conditions infinitely better, with prices already doubled and trebled, yet we are not wholly satisfied. For Oklahoma to have the prosperity to which our people are entitled, cotton must sell for some 20 cents per pound, wheat must sell for some $1.50 per bushel, and when wheat sells for $1.50 per bushel, oil will be selling for a comparable price per barrel.

With commodity prices up, employment will increase and wages will be raised accordingly.

Business conditions are improving. Under the Roosevelt administration only one large institution has failed. This institution was the red-ink industry developed under the Hoover administration.

With the price trend upward, with purchasing power increasing, with business improving, and with the masses united, Oklahoma will give President Roosevelt an unprecedented "new deal" majority.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a letter from former Attorney General Mitchell in reply to a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the compulsory military training law, which was discussed here a few days ago when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration.

I also have three clippings from newspapers, one from the New York Evening Post, being an article by Ernest L. Meyer on this subject, one from the Baltimore Sun, and one from the Washington Post. I ask unanimous consent that they may also be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter and newspaper articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, June 20, 1930.

To the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 23, 1930, requesting my opinion as to whether agricultural colleges having grants under the act of July 2, 1862 (c. 130, 12 Stat. 503), and amendatory acts, are required to include military tactics among the compulsory courses of study or whether they may simply offer this subject as an elective course.

The pertinent provision of the statute is contained in section 4, which reads as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the State, or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than 5 percent upon the par value of said stocks; and that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forconstitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain for-ever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably apever unaiminished (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life." (Italics supplied.)

Amendments of this section by the act of March 3, 1883 (c. 102, 22 Stat. 484 (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 304)), and by the act of April 13, 1926 (c. 130, 44 Stat. 247 (U. S. C., Supp. III, title 7, sec. 304)), reenacted the language printed in italics above, without change. By the act of August 30, 1890 (c. 841, 26 Stat. 417), annual appropriation is made "for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts now established, or which may be hereafter established. In accordance with an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862. * * *" By section 4 of this act the Secretary of the Interior is charged with its administration, and he is directed to ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury annually as the cash State and Tarritory weether it is entitled to receive its.

There is no requirement that the moneys appropriated under this act shall be devoted by the the moneys appropriated under this act shall be devoted by the State to an institution then teaching military tactics, but only to an institution which had been or should be established under the act of July 2, 1862. The act of August 30, 1890, provides that the money shall "be applied only to instruction in agriculture, the mechanic arts, the English language, and various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and to the facilities for such instruction • • •"."

But by the act of March 4, 1907, chapter 2907, Thirty-fourth Statute, 1256, 1281, which appropriated additional money "for the more complete endowment and maintenance of agricultural the more complete endowment and maintenance of agricultural colleges now established, or which may hereafter be established, in accordance with the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, * * *", it is provided that the money so appropriated is to "be applied only for the purposes of the agricultural colleges as defined and limited in the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890." Another paragraph of this statute provides that the payment of the money appropriated shall be governed by the provisions of the act of 1890.

Under these statutes you and your predecessors have recognized the duty, so far as the appropriations made by the act of March 4, 1907, are concerned, to withhold a certificate as to any State which has not one or more colleges which are conducted in compliance with the provisions of the act of July 2, 1862. In determining whether such a certificate should be issued, you are consequently confronted with the problem whether an institution, in order that it may comply with the act of July 2, 1862, must include military tactics as a compulsory course of study.

The statutes nowhere specifically require that the offered course in military tactics must be compulsory. My attention has been called to the fact that at the time when the original statute was passed in 1862, it appears that all or almost all courses offered in universities were compulsory; but, of course, this is not conclusive of the intention of Congress. The association of the words "military tactics" in the statute with the words "such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts" shows that there was no intention to require instruction in military tactics to be compulsory upon the students any more than those branches of learning related to agriculture and mechanic arts. If one branch is compulsory, all must be; and when we consider the great variety of branches which are related to agriculture and mechanic arts. It is generally recognized that there is no obligation on agricultural colleges having land grants under the act of July 2, 1862, to compel their students to take any course related to agriculture or mechanic arts.

The use of the words "leading object" in the statute indicates that Congress must have intended to repose some discretion in the mechanic arts.

The use of the words "leading object" in the statute indicates that Congress must have intended to repose some discretion in the State or in the college to determine to what extent agriculture and mechanic arts, scientific and classical studies, and military tactics should be taught or required. The additional provision of the statute that these branches of learning should be taught "in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe", also suggests that it was the purpose of Congress to leave to the States a wide measure of control in the administration of the statute tion of the statute.

I have given consideration to the legislative history of the act of 1862. The manner in which the language in question came to be inserted in the bill does not convince me that Congress intended the course in military tactics to be compulsory. If it had had such an intention, it seems fair to assume that it would have expressed that intention in clear language. An examination of the report of the speech of Mr. Morrill, of Vermont (Congressional Globe, 37th Cong., 2d sess., pt. 4, Appendix, p. 256), who had charge of this bill in the House, reveals no clear statement to the effect that it was contemplated that military training would be compulsory on all students.

I have also considered what was done after the passage of the act of 1862. From a memorandum submitted to me, it appears that in several of the States at least courses in military tactics act of 1862. From a memorandum submitted to me, it appears that in several of the States at least courses in military tactics were compulsory in the years immediately following the passage of the act. But in a letter to the Secretary of War, under date of July 19, 1923, the Acting Secretary of the Interior informed the Secretary of War that "the policy of the Department of the Interior has been that a State fulfills its obligation under the law when it offers instruction and provides facilities for instruction. when it offers instruction and provides facilities for instruction in the branches of learning specified in the land-grant college legislation."

This ruling was published in 1925 by the Bureau of Education of your Department in a bulletin entitled "Federal Laws and Rulings Affecting Land-Grant Colleges. I understand that this policy has been consistently followed, and that cases presenting the precise question under consideration have arisen. The problem has in particular been presented with respect to the State of Wisconsin since 1923, for in that year the legislature of that State provided by statute that the study of military training at the State university should be optional (Wisconsin Laws, 1928, c. 226). It is significant that in 1926 Congress, in amending the act of July 2, 1862, reenacted the precise language of the act of July 2, 1862, italicized at the outset of this opinion.

The Supreme Court has held in National Lead Co. v. United

The Supreme Court has held in National Lead Co. v. United The Supreme Court has held in National Lead Co. v. United States (252 U. S. 140, 146-147) that the reenactment of a statute while an administrative interpretation of the statute in effect "amounts to an implied legislative recognition and approval of the executive construction of the statute * * *; for Congress is presumed to have legislated with knowledge of such an established usage of an executive department of the Government (United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. 238, 256).

To the same effect are United States v. Cerecedo Hermanos y Compania (209 U. S. 337, 339); United States v. Falk & Bro. (204 U. S. 143, 149).

I am of the opinion that the construction of the statute adopted by your Department is a reasonable one, and that it was in effect approved by Congress by the reenactment of the language in question after the adoption and publication of that construction by your Department. Added force is given to the reenactment of this language by the act that it occurred after the legislation in Wissenstein of the colors of the colors of the colors of the colors. consin referred to above.

I therefore advise you that you are justified in considering that an agricultural college which offers a proper, substantial course in military tactics complies sufficiently with the requirements as to military tactics in the act of July 2, 1862, and the other acts above-mentioned, even though the students at that institution are not compelled to take that course.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM D. MITCHELL.

[From the New York Evening Post of Mar. 21, 1936] As the Crow Flies—The Campus Goose Step, Expensive and Worthless Gesture

By Ernest L. Mever

Thursday's newspapers reported that the United States Senate by a vote of 59 to 18 rejected an amendment to the War Department supply bill to withhold Reserve Officer Training Corps funds from colleges requiring military training. Senator Lynn J. Frazier, Republican, North Dakota, author of the amendment, said he was "opposed to Prussianizing these schools."

"opposed to Prussianizing these schools."

Everyone interested in saving America from the sword-clanking mania of Europe will lament the bill's defeat. Senator Frazier's arguments were dismissed by the militarists as pink and pacifistic. Yet from a practical standpoint, compulsory military training in our colleges is a silly and expensive gesture. I speak from personal experience. I had 2 years of goose stepping at the university.

The drill periods were three times a week. Each period was, after a tedious roll call, slightly more than half an hour long. Two periods were devoted to military tactics, the third was classroom work in military theory. In the first year students learned the momentous secrets of the manual of arms, of marching movements on the parade ground, of military etiquette, and how properly to salute a sophomore "noncom" with two stripes and a strut.

THE HYPNOTIC LECTURES

During the second year various companies in our outfit specialized in divers military operations. The company I was in specialized in setting up pup tents. Week after week we sweated and fumbled for silly hours in squad competitions, and when our squad in the June review succeeded in putting up pup tents in 6½ minutes there was great jubilation and we were presented with bronze medals.

As for the weekly lecture periods, they gave the cadets a chance furtively to con engineering textbooks or snooze hynotically with their eyes open. For the life of me I can honestly recall not a thing I learned during those comatose hours except, for some reason, how to construct latrines for an army on the march. I have the unhappy notion that my genius in this direction will remain forever hidden under a bushel.

During the World War I talked as a conscript with a Regular Army drill sergeant at a cantonment in Kentucky. I asked him what he thought of the rookies in his outfit who had had drill at college. In his reply he was, I regret, singularly explosive and eloquent, yet I can give the gist of his answer by using proper elisions.

"Why, those —— conceited apes", he roared. "I tell you I could take any fathead off the street and in 1 week on the parade ground teach him more than all the sloppy work he could learn in 2 years as a college cadet. Honest, it takes me a whole week to have the country of those groups colonels."

trate on his studies or discipline his emotions to control his

CAT OUT OF THE BAG

Once I taught a class of "disciplined" soldiers in an army barracks and found them hopelessly uninteresting and uninterested, slack, disorderly, and dull. As for the discipline of emotions, one can hardly call a soldier on leave a model for St. Anthony. I recall a line of soldiers a block long in front of a prophylaxis tent after a barroom and bawdyhouse brawl.

From the practical viewpoint, then, college drill is wasteful; it is a triweekly interruption in the normal curriculum; it is expensive in the mere matter of uniforms guas and trappings.

sive in the mere matter of uniforms, guns and trappings, and paid instructors.

What is one of the real reasons that our Washington militarists are putting on such a valiant fight to retain the R. O. T. C. in the colleges?

The cat was let out of the bag only a few weeks ago by Lt. Col. Orvel Johnson, director general of the R. O. T. C. Association of the United States.

In an address before a National Defense Week meeting in New York City, Colonel Johnson asserted that the R. O. T. C. has a vital peacetime function—that of guarding against "subversive activities" in schools, colleges, and throughout the country in general.

Our student cadets, then, are the uniformed bully boys and bouncers of Hearst, the American Liberty League, and all the other backers and fraternities of jingoes.

[From the Baltimore Sun of Mar. 20, 1936] FALSE PRETENSES

Although Senator Frazier was unsuccessful in persuading the Senate to deny Federal funds to State universities which make military training compulsory, the debate on the subject did expose certain facts concerning the methods by which compulsory training has been imposed upon the States. As was stated repeatedly by Senators during the debate, there is a widespread belief that the Morrell Act, by which land-grant money was set aside for State agricultural schools, required military education to be compulsory. The Maryland Court of Appeals, in the Coale case, evidently took this view, for its opinion stated that neither the Morrell Act nor the State laws implementing it for Maryland, contained any provision "exempting any sincere religious conscientious objector from military training." military training.

The supposition, which has never been discouraged by emissaries of the War Department, has been that the Morrell Act required that military training in institutions receiving land-grant aid must be compulsory be compulsory.

The fact is that the Morrell Act required that "military tactics" be included in the curricula of land-grant beneficiaries, but said nothing at all about making military training compulsory for individual students. Senators on both sides of Wednesday's argument agreed to that, but in all but two institutions receiving money under the Morrell Act military training is compulsory. The fact that those two colleges (in Wisconsin and Minnesota) which offer military training but do not make it compulsory are still receiving their land-grant money ought to dispose of the fraudulent insistence, often worked on State boards of trustees, that they must institute compulsory military training to be eligible for land-grant money. land-grant money.

Furthermore, the Senate heard impressive evidence as to the extent to which instructors in "military tactics" are invading other fields and spreading propaganda upon subjects in no way related to military tactics—such as public utility ownership, international peace movements, and "citizenship." The extraordinary audacity of some of this propaganda makes even more striking the irony that thousands of young men with other things on their minds should be required to take such courses, when no law makes compulsory military training necessary.

STUDENT HAZING OVER R. O. T. C. GRADES BARED—DERN ORDERS IN-QUIRY WHEN TOLD PENN STATE BOYS WERE STRAPPED

Charges that Pennsylvania State College R. O. T. C. students making the lowest scores in rifle practice were forced to "run the gantlet", in which they were whipped by other students armed with brass reinforced cartridge belts, at the order of Maj. Arthur F. Bowen, of the R. O. T. C. staff at the college, were being investigated last night at the order of Secretary of War George H. Dern.

Dern.

The matter was brought to Secretary Dern's attention in a letter from the committee on military education of New York City, signed by Edwin C. Johnson, committee secretary.

The letter said that on December 17, 1935, Major Bowen, second in command of the unit at the college, ordered low-score students in several rifle-practice sections to run the gantlet of other students armed with cartridge belts.

Reports of the incident were published in the Penn State student newspaper, the Collegian, on January 7, 1936, and an editorial in that paper on that day called the incident "shocking, disgraceful, storm-trooper sadism", and referred to the personnel of the military science and tactics department of the school as "feeble-minded jingoes" and as "thick-headed."

STUDENT TONGUE-LASHED

One student, according to that report, refused to "participate in the mauling" and was "tongue-lashed" by an unnamed sergeant on duty with the R. O. T. C., who "proceeded to give him a lecture on the inadvisability of being a slacker in the Army."

An Associated Press dispatch from State College, Pa., the seat of the school, quoted Major Bowen as stating that a "paddle line" for low scorers in rifle practice was a voluntary proposition and had no connection with military discipline. He said that the "paddle line" was "just for fun" and that no student complained later, and added that most of the statements in the Collegian's article were "incorrect."

The letter called on Secretary Dern "publicly to repudiate as contrary to approved War Department policy the outrageous conduct of Major Bowen and his War Department associates" at the college.

It also demanded that the War Department investigate the incident thoroughly, "particularly to determine whether Major Bowen, on other occasions, has resorted to similarly brutal tactics for punishing students having low scores in rifle practice, and, further, to ascertain the identity of the unnamed student who maligned the patriotism and courage of the student who quite properly refused to respond to Major Bowen's command."

CHARGES ARE URGED

In addition, the committee's letter urged that charges be preferred against Major Bowen for conduct unbecoming an officer and to discipline any others connected with the incident with penalties inflicted by court martial "upon those found guilty of the flagrant breach of military discipline which has been committed."

Well-known names on the committee's letterhead include those of Oswald Garrison Villard, formerly editor of the Nation, and Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President in 1932.

Secretary Dern, not commenting on the letter, referred the investigation in routine form to Maj. Gen. Albert J. Bowley, commander of the Third Corps Area, at Baltimore. The routine investigation will require a report from Col. J. F. Venable, head of the R. O. T. C. staff at Penn State. If Colonel Venable's report warrants, a special investigator will then be sent to the town of State College, Pa., to gather further facts.

ARTICLE COPY ENCLOSED

A copy of the report in the Penn State Collegian, enclosed with the letter to the War Department, said, in part:

"At the beginning of one of the classes the students were enlightened to the fact that the two having the lowest score in the target practice would have to run the gantlet. After the barrage had subsided and the scores were tallied Major Bowen * * commanded: "These two men were low. Take off your belts, gentle-

"The rest of the section, which numbered 75 or more, formed a line around the armory floor, and the low scorers' part of the ceremony was to run along that line while those forming the gantlet helped along with swinging belts. The staccato of the belts that found their mark resounded most loudly when the punished slowed down to round the corners.

"One student, a conscientious objector to this particular phase "One student, a conscientious objector to this particular phase of M. S. & T., refused to participate in the mauling. When it was observed that he was not helping, a sergeant of the military department proceeded to give him a lecture on the inadvisability of being a slacker in the Army.

"* * Although the practice was continued throughout most of the classes that day, Maj. G. M. McMullin told his students it would not take place in his classes, since it did not seem to him a fitting military action.

"One objector pointed out that although his eyes were not fitted to perfect marksmanship, they still were good enough to read page 87 of the R. O. T. C. manual, which states: "The true method of establishing military discipline is by reliance upon the pride of the establishing military discipline is by reliance upon the pride of the soldier; by appeals to his common sense; by treating him as a human being and not as a machine, and by force of example."

Pennsylvania State College is a land-grant college, and thus R. O. T. C. training is compulsory. A total of 2,496 students are enrolled in the R. O. T. C. department, with nine other officers ranked below Colonel Venable and Major Bowen, according to War Department records.

Mr. Johnson, signer of the committee's letter to Major Bowen, said in a statement to the press:

"By an odd coincidence, Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood was testifyby an out contractive, Maj. Creit. Johnson Hagood was testifying before a congressional committee on December 17, 1935, the very day that Maj. Arthur F. Bowen, of the Pennsylvania State College R. O. T. C., was ordering students having low scores in rifle practice to run the gantlet composed of other students equipped with their brass-reinforced cartridge belts.

It will be of interest to many citizens to learn what action, if any, the War Department will take with reference to the obviously more flagrant breach of military discipline committed by Major

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] had the floor yesterday when the Senate recessed, and gave notice that he would like to have the floor this morning. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am indeed very happy to have the opportunity of continuing my address in regard to a question which holds the interest of the people of every one of the 48 States of the Union. In view of the fact that it is a subject commanding the interest of the great masses of the people in all the 48 States, I unhesitatingly assume that the subject under discussion is of vital interest to the Members of this body.

The question of immigration is one which has concerned us since George Washington, the first President of the United States, in an inaugural message made mention of the question of immigration as it related particularly to the character and the blood strains of the people who eventually were to constitute, as I have no doubt he had in mind, the 125,000,000 or 130,000,000 people who live in our country today.

In order that those Members of the Senate who were not here yesterday may understand at the outset that I am not only expressing my personal opinion in reference to my opposition to what is known as the Kerr-Coolidge bill, but that my opinion is shared by millions upon millions of men and women, young and old, in every section of the United States, many millions of whom are affiliated with leading patriotic organizations that are interested in America, I wish to say that my opinion of and my opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill are shared by the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled Veterans of the World War, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America, the Daughters of the American Revolution. the Sons of the American Revolution, and 110 other different patriotic organizations and societies of America.

I go further and state that every single patriotic organization in America, without exception, stands in vigorous opposition to the passage of the Kerr-Coolidge bill because they know that it is an un-American measure, because they know that the bill before the Senate for consideration is actuated by sympathy and consideration only for the aliens who are in our country today and the hordes which will be constituted by the million beyond the shores of our fair land who legally will be entitled to enter my country and your country if the bill shall be passed.

Yesterday I was particularly anxious that the country at large might understand my attitude on this question. knew they could not possibly fathom or understand my attitude unless my position were correctly stated through the columns of the press. However, it seems that I did not express myself sufficiently clearly to the members of the press. for whom I have a great affection and admiration, having myself been a member of the fourth estate once upon a time. I make mention of this because a friend of mine, as I was entering the Chamber a few moments ago to answer to the roll call, preparing to continue to speak upon this all-important subject, handed me a copy of today's Washington Daily News.

In order that Senators may know that, despite the fact that I have endeavored to make myself absolutely plain and clear as to my position, it appears from a report in the Washington Daily News that as yet I have not made my position clear. In order that I may go further in that direction by which I hope to reach my point, I wish to read the article, eliminating the first two paragraphs. The article is entitled:

Senate filibuster threatens passage of immigration law. Rev-NOLDS trying to talk measure to death.

That is right! Mr. President, I am going to talk this bill to death if I can, because I know that if it should be passed it would permit the entrance into this country of thousands upon thousands of people who would be entitled to come into the country legally under sections 3, 4, and 5 of the Kerr-Coolidge bill. So the News is correct. I wish to state to my distinguished friends in the Senate that it is correct because it states I am trying to talk the bill to death. I want to endeavor to aid my colleagues, who are interested in the welfare of the American people, in killing the bill, if I can, because if we shall succeed in doing that we will have succeeded gloriously in serving admirably the interests of the great masses of the American people and the very fundamental principle of the American Government.

I read from the article:

A filibuster usually is futile this far from the end of a session, but the Senate convenes Monday as a Court of Impeachment and may spend several weeks hearing charges against Judge Halsted L. Ritter, of Florida. Unless congressional action can be had before then it may be too late-

"It may be too late!" It cannot be too early.

It may be too late to prevent deportation of 2,862 aliens of good naracter for whom the Immigration Service has recommended leniency.

Senators, yesterday afternoon, during a period of more than an hour, having been advised that officials of the Immigration Service would claim to the Members of the Senate and to the Members of the lower House of Congress that those 2,862 persons were persons of good character, I brought to the attention of the Senate transcripts of the records filed in the office of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and I showed by the Department's own records that the aliens whom the officials would not deport, whom they themselves have violated the law in not deporting, were persons of bad character.

Why, there was a fellow by the name of George Gaston Grenier. I remember his initials were "G. G. G." He was listed in the Department's files as being a man of good character. According to today's News, he evidently was one of the good characters whom the Department officials desire to keep in this country.

Let us review in our respective minds the records as transmitted from the Department of Labor, and let us see for ourselves whether or not we want that man of "good character", George Gaston Grenier, to remain in this country to contribute to the blood strain of future generations, to contribute to the inspiration of the youth of our land. I am going to read this man's record again in just a minute for the benefit of Senators who were not here on yesterday, and in answer to the article published in the News to the effect that the persons whom we are trying to get out of our country are persons of good character.

Grenier's record in the transcript which I personally made at the Department of Labor, where I worked for several days, appears in my digest to be on page 89; so, therefore, I shall turn to page 89.

My friend who wrote the article which appeared in today's News evidently did not read through the records in the Department of Labor, but he evidently read the record sent to the United States Congress as the result of a resolution passed in the House of Representatives. He evidently read the record which was prepared by Colonel MacCormack, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and sent here.

The records that we demanded of the Department of Labor-by way, I may add, of a respectful request-were supposed to give us the whole facts, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. On the contrary, however, those records were misleading; and I am a bit peeved about it, because those records have deceived my friend in the press gallery who wrote the article in today's News. What does he say? He says:

Unless congressional action can be had before then, it may be too late to prevent deportation of 2,862 aliens of good character for whom the Immigration Service has recommended leniency.

I myself am about to cry. [Laughter.]

Let us see. Let us see how badly these aliens have been treated.

I am glad to see the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] pull out his handkerchief and weep. [Laughter.] I myself feel like weeping. In fact, I am weeping so much as a result of this unfortunate condition that my tears have clogged up my glasses, and I shall have to cleanse them and dry them before I can read the record of this man of "good character." God bless him right now, but let us see what we shall say about him as soon as we read the record.

Mr. George Gaston Grenier! Let us see on what page he is referred to in the record sent down here by Colonel MacCormack. His record appears to be on page 23.

Senators, in reference to the tears we are losing over these aliens of "good character", I wish to read the information, in the form of a summary, which was sent down here by Colonel MacCormack, of the Immigration Service, which service says to us, "For God's sake, do not deport these good people! For God's sake, do not wreck their lives! For God's sake, do not send them out of this country! Because if you do, all inspiration for the children of our land today will have been destroyed. Leave George Gaston Grenier here. He is a great contribution to our country. He comes from sunny France, across the blue waters of the Atlantic. He is a greater contribution to America than ever the great Lafayette was when he came here during the trying days of history."

You would think, on reading this man's record, that he was a great war hero; that he had contributed largely to the culture, to the blood strain, to the inspiration, to the material things of life in America. So, my friends, I shall read to you what Colonel MacCormack says about George Gaston Grenier, and you will find that he is all I have just described him as being.

George Gaston Grenier. He last entered the United States

On inquiry as to whether or not he had previously been in the United States he said, "Yes, gentlemen; I have been here."

On inquiry as to how long he had been here he said, "A period of 9 years and 3 months, gentlemen."

Very satisfactory! One good thing that I see about this fellow is that once upon a time he did have enough sense to go to Chicago, Ill.—a great metropolitan section of America, from which hails our distinguished colleague and beloved friend, the senior Senator from that State [Mr. Lewis]. Mr. Grenier resided there at 1213 East Fifty-third Street.

Mr. Grenier, have you any dependents in the United States? Yes, indeed, gentlemen; I have a wife and a son.

Perfectly fine! A home-loving man, I presume; one of the fireside boys.

Have you any other relatives in the United States? No; I have no other relatives in the United States. What is your occupation, Mr. Grenier? Why, gentlemen, I am a painting contractor.

It strikes me that our friend the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and his assistants must have taken some lessons under Mr. Grenier, because they can paint these records better than anybody else I ever saw could paint

Are you self-supporting, Mr. Grenier?
Why, I certainly am self-supporting, gentlemen.
Have you ever been on relief?
Why, of course not! Certainly I have never been on relief. Have you ever been a public charge? Why, certainly I have never been a public charge.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Madam President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARAWAY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my friend. Mr. COOLIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if this is not the same case he brought up and discussed yesterday. Is not this a repetition?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely. Mr. COOLIDGE. There are 2,862 of these cases. Why does not the Senator take up some of the others?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I will tell the Senator why I am taking up this man's case: It is because there are Senators here today who were not here yesterday; and I have always found, in the trial of cases before a jury, that particularly in trying a criminal case before a jury the best thing is to know your jurymen well. If you know them well enough to go right up to the jury box and pat them on the knee, that personal contact is the best thing on earth. It has won more cases than law ever won. I found that the next best thing to personal contact with juries in trying cases is to repeat some of the strong points of your case. The old saying is, as is known by some of my brothers here who have practiced law out in the sticks, as I have done, "If you have the facts, talk about the facts. If you have the law, talk about the law. If you have neither the law nor the facts, then go to the woods."

I always used to know whether or not I had the law or the facts. I will confess that I never knew much about law. That reminds me that after I had been prosecuting attorney in a number of mountain counties in North Carolina for a number of years I began private practice in my home town of Asheville, N. C. I was stopped on the street one day by a good friend of mine, one of the ablest members of the bar, Judge Jones, who, I am sorry to say, has now passed to the Great Beyond. He was an old man, for whom I had great affection and admiration. He stopped me on the street one day and said, "Bob, I have been noticing you in the courtroom. You would make a wonderful lawyer. Study law." I said, "Hell, Judge, I am too busy practicing." [Laughter.]

Now I wish to return to the matter about which I was talking, and answer the inquiry directed to me by my friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolings], for whom I have actual, genuine admiration and affection; and I mean that, because I know the Senator is interested not only in his constituents in the great, historic Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to which we often refer as the "cradle of liberty", but because I know he is interested in the people of the 48 States of the Union, in whom every Senator who takes the oath and obligation as a Member of this body is interested.

I wish to say that I have brought this matter to the attention of the Senate for two reasons. The first reason is that my good friend who reported this measure stated that we were trying to deport 2,862 people of good character, and I am bringing the matter before the Senate to show him the facts about the character of one of these 2,862 cases. I today stand upon the floor of the Senate and lay down again unhesitatingly, unblushingly, and unafraid, the challenge I made on yesterday when I said that any man in this body is at liberty to take from the files of the Commissioner of Immigration and bring one case or a hundred cases to the floor of the Senate, and at the same time bring the briefs that were prepared by the Immigration and Naturalization Service which have deceived Senators. I make this challenge because I know that if it is met I shall not have to make expenditure of my energy in trying the case before this duly constituted body. The colleagues of mine who are here, who are just as much interested in protecting America for Americans as am I, will try the case upon this floor.

Secondly, I bring the matter to the attention of the Senate because, as I said to my good friend from the great historic State of Massachusetts, the cradle of American liberty, strength is to be found in repetition. I can very readily understand-and other Senators can readily understandthat the Senator from Massachusetts objected to my bringing to the attention of this honorable body the case of Mr. Gaston Grenier because it hurts. If I were in the position in which my distinguished friend is now, I likewise would have raised an objection. I would have objected to repetition, would have objected to bringing to the attention of this honorable body the name of this angelic person, the name of this man, who, from the description provided by Colonel MacCormack, we could readily fashion, in our minds, as one who had never feasted his eyes upon the golden shores of America, on the Atlantic or the Pacific, but, according to the description given by Colonel MacCormack and by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, had floated serenely from the blue skies above and set foot quietly upon the fertile soil of America.

To those who were not here yesterday, those who have not had an opportunity to read the Record, I shall continue to refer to the remainder of the description that was recited of Mr. Gaston Grenier by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization:

Question no. 10. Public charge?

I can just read into the RECORD his answer. He takes offense:

No

Of course not. In connection with question no. 11 they state the grounds for deportation. The laws of the United States provide that this man must be deported; that is mandatory. But he has not been deported. He is here now in violation of the law of our country, and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization has virtually said, by his action, "What do I care about the laws of the United States? I am bigger than the law itself. I am bigger than the men who made the law."

Grounds for deportation: That he is in the United States in violation of the Immigration Act of 1924, in that at the time of his entry he was not in possession of an unexpired immigration visa.

It appears in the record that the only thing Gaston Grenier had ever done for which he could be deported legally was that he happened to be here in violation of the Immigration Act.

In connection with question no. 12 they recite the "unfavorable factors or reports." Listen to this. This is in answer to the article in the morning paper of today in which it is stated that this man Grenier is a man of good character. They do not name him specifically, but they refer to the 2,862, and I repeat that I am ready at any time to debate on the floor of the Senate any single case which any Senator will get from the Immigration and Naturalization Service and bring into the Senate Chamber. When he brings the records here I shall bring here the summary as provided by Colonel MacCormack, which was supposed to reveal to us the facts.

Under the caption Unfavorable Factors or Reports, Colonel MacCormack's report says:

Allen has a bad moral record. He admitted that he is the father of an illegitimate child, whom he later adopted.

As I stated on yesterday, the only thing I can see that is redeeming about the man is that he had manhood enough, that he had courage enough, that he had decency enough to adopt the child whose mother he deceived and debauched.

His statements as to birth and military service are ridiculous. Favorable factors or reports.

Here we have the reason why they say he ought to be kept in the United States.

United States citizenship of wife and child. Reason for stay.

The reason why they permitted him to stay here, the reason why they are keeping him here now in violation of the law which Congress passed, is that they wanted to permit voluntary departure, to prevent the separation of the family. He wanted to go out of the country, evidently, but Colonel MacCormack would not let him go. He wanted him to stay here.

Date of last investigation, 31st of October 1935.

On that record, I being a big-hearted man, my heart would beat in sympathetic accord for this man, because I realize that none of us is perfect; because I have enough sense to realize and unhesitatingly admit that I have sinned a thousand times; but I hope the great God above will forgive me. None of us is perfect. This man has erred, and with only this before me I should dislike to rob him of opportunities provided for Americans who are deserving.

This is the record provided by the Commissioner of Immigration for our attention and our consideration. It is the record upon which he asks us to change the present immigration laws so that Gaston Grenier may remain in the United States.

At this point I wish to remind the Members of this body that we are under no obligation to let anyone into this country, that the only reason why we have ever permitted any immigrants at all to come into this country was that they might be a benefit to the country. Our immigration laws are not made for the purpose of benefiting immigrants, but they are designed and passed for the purpose of benefiting our own country.

I now ask Senators, as a jury of 96, is this man beneficially contributing to the blood strain, to the upbuilding, to the development of their beloved America? I say "no"; I am in sympathy with him. I am in sympathy with every man who is in trouble. I am in sympathy with every person whose tears reach his cheeks; but, Senators, I am personally—I have greater sympathy—for those of my own fireside, and those of my own home, and those of my beloved America. I am for America first and last and all the time, after which I can permit my heart to beat faster and my tears to flow for those of different nations who are beyond the seas.

I address myself to the coauthor of the Reynolds-Starnes bill. Will Representative Joe Starnes be good enough to let me have the book at which he is looking? I am delighted to see in the Chamber this morning Hon. Joe Starnes, Representative from the State of Alabama, coauthor of the Reynolds-Starnes bill. I am glad to find that he is just as much interested in the American people as I am. I take this opportunity publicly to congratulate him upon the time | and the energy he has given to the American people; and I desire further to say that I hope his interest will never wane nor weaken, and that he will in all cases, as he has in this case, give sympathy first to those of his fireside, to those of his household, to those of his congressional district, to those of his State, and to those of the Nation, before he gives sympathy to and sheds tears over those who are from shores beyond.

I again congratulate Representative Starnes. I know he is worthy of his constituency, and from all I have heard from his State, I believe his constituents appreciate his efforts.

Mr. President, according to the record from which I have read and from which I shall continue to read, Senators' hearts would go out to some of those whose cases are mentioned in it. My heart has gone out to some of them. In the case I just mentioned, the man did one courageous thing. He did the only manly thing, and that was to adopt the unfortunate child. So, according to Colonel MacCormack's record, we have concluded to let him stay in the United States. This is merely an assumption for the purpose of argument. "But," say other Senators and I, "let us go a little further into this case."

The question may be asked, "Why does anyone wish to go any further into the case? You do not mean to insinuate, Mr. Senator, that you would go back on the records which were filed here as the result of a resolution directed to the Department of Labor? You do not mean to say that you would have the audacity to insinuate that the record does not fully embody the truth?" Why certainly not! Certainly not! I know that none of our high officials, after having been called upon to provide this body with the information upon which we could proceed in this case and change the law would intentionally deceive the Senate. Certainly I do not insinuate that any such official or anybody else would intentionally deceive the Senate. At the same time, we are all liable to make mistakes. None of us is perfect. At the same time, so far as I am concerned, Senators, I personally should like to see if that is all there is concerning Mr. Gaston Grenier-de la Paris. So I read further in reference to him.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to something which corroborates his impression that Colonel MacCormack did not willfully misstate about these cases. I read from page 203 of part IV of the

I do not suppose that I personally have passed on more than 20 or 30 of them-

Meaning these 2,862 cases-and every one which they have put up to me I rejected with one exception. They were all border-line cases.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to mark the portion he read, and give it to a page, so that I may see it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I should like to call attention also to something else testified to by Colonel MacCormack which appears on page 201 of the same hearings:

Senator King. Those 2,800 deported are not habitual criminals, and are not tainted with any acts of conduct which would make them unfit for citizenship?
Mr. MacCormack. Absolutely not.

Again, on page 202, Mr. MacCormack, testifying, says:

Every stayed case has been repeatedly reviewed. In the first

2,000 about a dozen bad ones were found.

They came in to us from the field and had all the superficial evidences of being within the class which we are proposing to stay, but when they were reviewed we found a number of bad ones.

Senator Austin. Just what do you mean by "bad ones", Colonel?

Mr. MacCormack. Criminals. Each case, however, has been reviewed several times. In the first 2,000, we found a dozen really bad ones, including criminals. These and hundreds of others have since been rejected because they did not meet the conditions stated in the bill, or even if they met the conditions stated in the bill, because it did not appear in the public interest that the stay be granted. For example, a man might be of good character, no criminal record, have lived here a long time, with his wife and children, but not be because to his families of support them. but yet be no use to his family, not support them. A case like that is rejected.

Senator King. He would be deportable? Mr. MacCormack. We have done that in hundreds of cases. have only stayed cases that to a careful administrator, looking out for the interests of the United States, seemed to warrant a stay. There has been no sentiment about it. The cases have been scrutinized by Shaughnessy here and his hard-boiled board of review, and there is darned little sentiment entering into the decisions.

I ask the Senator to consider that testimony with reference to the facts he has already disclosed and is about to disclose regarding these cases.

Mr. REYNOLDS. With the Senator's permission, I will underline the words "hard-boiled board of review"; and I wish to take this opportunity to thank my distinguished colleague from the State of Vermont for his worthy and commendable contribution to this argument. As soon as I shall have finished with Mr. Grenier-Gaston Grenier-whose case was passed upon by that harsh, "hard-boiled" board, I shall return to the evidence of our delightful friend, Colonel MacCormack.

Senators, I have read the record as provided by Colonel MacCormack; and my good friend the Senator from Vermont has brought to my attention the fact that Senators must believe the record which was sent here by Colonel Mac-Cormack, because Colonel MacCormack said, "We went over those cases time after time." I can see the colonel right now sitting over there with all his aides gathered around him, like an old hen surrounded by her little chickens, acackling and apuffing and ablowing-I can see them all straining and sweating in an effort to get these records correct—the old hen just straining and puffing and blowing to see that everything is right. [Laughter.] These records are right, because Colonel MacCormack knows that he has been called upon to give "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" about these cases, and he wants to provide the Senate and Representative STARNES, of Alabama, and his colleagues in the House with the facts so that the Congress may pass upon the question intelligently and conscientiously.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. COOLIDGE. This George Grenier is the same George" the Senator has been talking about?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; it is the same "George." I will never forget George as long as I live. I believe after I had read the first description of him, depicting him as a fine, kindly, manly character, that if I had gone to heaven and entered the pearly gates the first man I would have recognized would have been George, because of Colonel Mac-Cormack's description.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Has he transgressed any laws of the United States, except that he came here illegally?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am going to read the record. I do not want the Senator to take my word for it. I want to read the record. I have the facts in this case, and I want to try this case by the facts.

Mr. COOLIDGE. It is evident from the facts that if he had been deported the Government would have been compelled to take care of his dependents-some children and his wife-I imagine; also, if he had been deported he would have been brought before a court martial, and I think we will agree that that might have resulted in his being stood before a firing squad. I do not know how far the Senator's reports go in that respect, and I myself have never looked into any of the 2,862 cases. I am hoping the Senator is not picking out the worst one of the whole 2,862?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I am glad the Senator mentioned that, because this is but one case as to which I am overanxious to be fair with my opponents, because in this case I have got the goods; I have the facts, I have the evidence, and I want to reveal all the facts and all the evidence. That is the reason why I flung down the gauntlet; why I threw down the challenge to any Member of this body to go to the Labor Department and pick out at random or have Colonel MacCormack or anybody else pick out cases-a hundred of them—and bring them here and try them; and if this body thinks the persons involved in those cases ought to remain in this country, of course, they are going to stay; but I know that the Members of this body are interested in American citizens first and then their sympathies can extend to the

Before I leave the point in regard to which my good friend asked me, namely, if I picked out just the good ones, I want to say, as I stated yesterday, that I went to the Department with a stenographer. There were two or three cases that I wanted to examine. The only reason I wanted to see them was because each morning when I arrived at my office at 7 o'clock, as I usually do-and I will make the confession now that I am saying that for the benefit of my constituents in North Carolina; I want to be fair about everything, so I am going to be fair about everything in this argument-I found a little paper there called the American Citizen, and it had the names of two foreigners, aliens, anarchists, revolutionists, on the front page. So when I was conversing with Colonel MacCormack I asked him kindly to give me a report upon those two men. Finally he condescendingly sent me a letter, and I am going to take that up when I review all these cases. After looking at those cases, I was working on some other cases in the library, and asked a gentleman, whose name I have forgotten-and I do not see him in the gallery today, though he has been here virtually every day, I assume looking after the interests of the Department of Labor-kindly to go in and pick out 20 or 30 cases and bring them in. He said, "Certainly; what kind of cases do you want?" I said, "Bring in the lily-white cases." That is classification no. 1. It represents the perfumed ones, the best they have. So he brought them in: I have them here, and I am going to read them; and as soon as I read them I am going to ask Representative STARNES to pick me out a number one case.

Let us see whether the case I have been referring to is that of a lily-white fellow. George Gaston is in classification no. 4. There are four classifications. I read yesterday a case from no. 2. I will refer to other cases today or tomorrow or sometime next week, as I hope to be able to speak on this subject for several days more and to discuss these cases fully in order that my friends in the Senate may know just what is presented to them for dissection and decision.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, should not the record be corrected a bit there, because the Senator says that the "George", to whom he has referred and whose case he picked out, was one of the best ones? Is not that one of the worst

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I say that from reading the report sent here by Colonel MacCormack I would have imagined that that fellow dropped down from the heavens, he is pictured as being so angelic. He is depicted as a man of courage; he is very frank and open about his remarks; he is industrious; he has never been on relief; his wife and child are self-supporting, and he had the courage and manhood to adopt his illegitimate child. According to that report, the man deserves consideration, and I do not hesitate to say so. I say, according to the report, George Gaston Grenier is not a bad fellow at all; that is, according to what Colonel Mac-Cormack reported about him in the statement which he sent here asking us to pass upon the information given by him.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield. Mr. COOLIDGE. The Senator ought to know something about Massachusetts. He paid a visit to my State, which was a great compliment, and he saw many historical places and points of interest there. Perhaps about the only thing he did not see were the citizens of Massachusetts dressed in Indian uniforms tipping tea over into the ocean. However, as the Senator visited Massachusetts, he can realize the cosmopolitan character of the population we have there. In Massachusetts there are many Italians, Germans, Jews, and other nationalities, and the information I get from practically every source in Massachusetts indicates that they are hoping that this bill will pass. There are many aliens in Massachusetts. I do not know how many deportable aliens we have. but I understand that we have quite a good many, and that in the State of the Senator from North Carolina there are five aliens who are deportable.

Mr. REYNOLDS. We have, I suppose, several thousand aliens there, but we have fewer in North Carolina than there are in any State in the Union, I believe. I think the next State in that respect is Tennessee, and there are very few aliens in Alabama; there are some in Florida; but in Arkansas and Mississippi the number is limited, and, as a matter of fact, in Louisiana there are not a great many. There are only a few States in which there are a great many aliens.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I am hoping that the Senator picked a fair sample out of the 2,862 cases.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I did. The Senator certainly knows that I want to be fair, and I have been fair, because I took more lily-white cases than any other kind. I want to be fair; otherwise I would not make the challenge to any Senator to get any case in the Department files or any batch of a hundred cases and bring them here and let the Senate survey them on their individual merits.

I wish to repeat publicly what I said a while ago. I do not know, Mr. President, any man in this body for whom I have a greater affection or greater admiration and respect than I have for the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge]. I do not know of any and do not believe there is any Member of this body who is more conscientious than is the Senator from Massachusetts. I have his interest at heart; I am fond of him, as is everyone else; but this matter is just one of those as to which our opinions differ. Insofar as I am concerned I am exceedingly regretful that the difference is along this score, because I know of the high esteem that my colleague from Massachusetts is held by the Senate and the extremely high esteem in which he is held in the State of Massachusetts. I do not believe that Massachusetts could be any better represented by anybody than by my colleague from Massachusetts. It is well that Massachusetts has such a representative, because Massachusetts is the cradle of liberty. It was there, I believe, that Paul Revere, about whom I was reading last night, galloped from the center of the then small municipality of Boston down the road by Harvard University to Concord. Some time ago I made a statement upon the floor of the Senate about the Harvard campus, and a gentleman, writing to the Boston Globe, said, "The Senator is wrong; we have no campus." We hear very much about the Harvard campus; a street or, for that matter, an alley may be a campus with a greensward, whether like the campus we have at the University of North Carolina or not. At the University of North Carolina we have an immense campus covering acres and acres of land. The University of North Carolina has made tremendous progress in the last several

I also made mention in that article concerning my trip about having been to Concord, where the first shot fired in the revolutionary days "was heard round the world." criticized by some historian for that. As a matter of fact, I remember when I was a boy in school I learned that little poem about the boy standing on the burning deck; and I learned another one about Concord and the first shot heard round the world; I studied it in my barefooted, knicker-bocker-trouser days; and I recited that little poem about the Village Blacksmith, which begins-

Under a spreading chestnut tree The village smithy stands.

I was looking at an American flag; and when I recited that little piece of poetry which I had studied night after night while sitting by the old fireside, I actually thought that the shot heard round the world was the shot fired there at Concord. So I was amazed at my mistake in history; and I called my most able and efficient secretary, Mr. Wesley E. McDonald, and asked him to communicate with the Library of Congress and have them send me a book that would reveal the truth about the matter. I discovered that some historian stated that the first shot was not fired there; that it was just a legend. I was sorry to hear that, because I had just built my whole world about that little poem which I learned when I was a boy.

I know that the Senator feels about the matter under consideration exactly as I do. If there are worthy cases in the 2,862, I am going to say to the Senator that I want the persons involved in such cases to stay in this country. Knowing the Senator as I do, I know deep down in my heart—and nobody can tell me otherwise—that the Senator does not want to keep any criminal aliens in this country; I know the Senator does not want to keep anybody in this country who is going to destroy the fine, pure blood stream of our stock. I know that the Senator does not want to keep in the country any alien who will smother the inspiration of oncoming generations or those of their offspring.

I may say to the Senator who so ably represents the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts that I am with him. We are in accord. We are together 100 percent. How? Because I believe the Senator from Massachusetts wants to expel from this country the criminals, and he wants to keep here the good people. We will go through all these matters from time to time, and then let us introduce private bills. In that connection, as I am sure the Senator knows, and I state it for the benefit of others who may not know, private bills have been introduced to permit aliens in those classifications to remain here, to permit those who are worthy of being here to remain. One such bill has already been passed by the Congress and signed by the President, and there are three more on the list. I shall give the names of those a little later.

I am with the Senator 100 percent because I know the Senator is in accord with me about letting the best people remain. We do not want to break any hearts where a heart is deserving of being spared or destroy any lives where life is worth while saving. I know the Senator from Massachusetts wants to expel from this country criminal aliens, those who have not observed our laws and customs and principles, and who do not deserve our consideration or the protection of our great flag.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield gladly. Mr. COOLIDGE. I know the Senator is interested in immigration because, though not being a member of the committee, as an interested listener he has been in attendance at the hearings every day. During some of those hearings the Senator must have observed that some of the social workers testified. I have in mind particularly a lady from Buffalo who testified before the committee, who had been to see some of the alien families who, with all the vigor of her being, appealed to the committee in behalf of those who were deportable under the present law, but whose deportation would mean a separation of families. She went to see them, and, having seen them, said none of those families ought to be deported.

The minute we adopt the course suggested in the "George" affair about which the Senator is talking, we establish a precedent, because it is only one sample case. George came in here illegally, but that is his only offense. If we send him out of the country, we will have to support his offspring and probably his wife. If the Senator has a big heart, which I know he has-I am sure he has-I cannot see how in this particular case he can ask that the man be deported. I doubt if there is another such case among the 2,862. I think the Senator must have picked out the worst ones. If this man should be deported and sent back to his native land, he would probably go before a court martial and probably meet his doom before a firing squad.

The Senator from North Carolina and I have had several talks on immigration. I thought we were in perfect accord. I had never seen his bill until yesterday, although it is before the committee. We agreed that he might have a hearing on any bill at any time he might desire.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator has been very kind and

Mr. COOLIDGE. I thought there were three essentials to which he referred in his bill, including cutting down the quota 90 percent.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina kindly yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. May I be pardoned for giving some information in connection with the tribute the Senator from North Carolina has paid to one of the name of Paul Revere. While adding my tribute to that of both the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and the eminent Senator from North Carolina, I must inform the Senator from North Carolina that in my great metropolitan city has just been organized a society, something of an organization, whose purpose is to defeat the President of the United States, discredit his measures, hold them up to contempt as unworthy and unconstitutional, and which has adopted for its name "The Paul Revere Society." That organization was addressed by Hon. Silas Strawn, of the Liberty League, night before last. The basis of his speech was to demonstrate how Roosevelt is unworthy of the people's confidence and that all who uphold him should be confined somewhere as either lunatics or criminals.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President— Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the able Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest that the choosing of that name may not be altogether unfortunate, because it will be remembered that the record discloses that Paul Revere never did complete his ride. He never reached Lexington or Concord.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And the first shot was not fired there! Mr. LEWIS. I was commenting on how a great name had been misinterpreted and misapplied.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator further-

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. Mr. CONNALLY. I have enjoyed the very splendid oration of the Senator from North Carolina, who is seeking to preserve the ideals of historical events of America, but I was a little bit shocked at his attack on the great State of Massachusetts, represented so ably by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge], when he said no shot was fired at Concord. As I recall, and if the Senator visited Lexington and Concord he will remember, at the stream, not at Concord, but before one gets to Concord, stands a monument upon which the lines of Emerson are inscribed:

> By the rude bridge that arched the flood, Their flag to April's breeze unfurled, Here once the embattled farmers stood, And fired the shot heard round the world.

It is not suggested that that was the first shot. As I now recall, without reference to the Library of Congress for confirmation of my recollection, the first shot was fired on the village green at Lexington. The British troops then proceeded on to Concord to capture the arms and munitions which were stored at Concord, and the farmers met the British again and another engagement ensued. It was that engagement which Emerson immortalized in his poem.

I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not make any further assaults on the fictions, even though they be fictions, the beautiful, poetical, and historical allusions which make New England what she was-not what she is, but what she was-in the days of old. I hope he will not cast any more opprobrium upon the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas evidently was not here to listen to what I have been saving about the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I believe that I have never in all my life expressed a more friendly feeling, a more genuinely friendly feeling, than I have expressed for the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas or the Senator from North Carolina or the Senator from Massachusetts if either of them knows who it was that decided which one of those shots it was that was heard around the world. Someone had to decide that; because if the one that was fired at Lexington was not heard around the world, then it must have been the one fired at the Concord Bridge; but who decided that question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is a matter I shall be very glad to take up later and discuss at length upon the floor of the Senate, with the permission of my fellow Senators.

I am surprised that the Senator from Texas [Mr. Con-NALLY] did not take advantage of the opportunity to mention something about the celebration which is to take place in his State this year.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I say to the Senator from North Carolina that, knowing the high level of intelligence of the Senator from North Carolina and of all others with respect to the great and historic traditions of my own State, which are to be so handsomely observed in this good year 1936, I assumed that it would serve no purpose of the humble junior Senator from Texas to call their attention again to those matters.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It would serve a very good purpose, because we are all delighted to listen to anything said by the able junior Senator from Texas. I made that suggestion because I thought it might present an opportunity to the Senator from Texas to advise many more people by way of his remarks, which would be published in the Congressional Record.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Outside of the bill we are discussing there are three items in which the Senator from North Carolina is interested. The first one is a lower quota of 15,300 immigrants, instead of 153,000. The second one is provision for keeping a better record of the immigrants who land here. The third is fingerprinting those who have come over here as immigrants.

On principle, I am in perfect accord with the Senator, as he understands.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I had hoped there would be a separation, whereby the pending bill would be acted on and then the Senator would bring in his bill dealing with the other matters.

Personally, as one of the members of the Immigration Committee, I am quite in accord with those three suggestions; and I am wondering if we possibly have not arrived at a point where the Senator can permit us to proceed with the pending bill, and then we will take up those three phases of the Senator's bill and get all this proposed legislation out of the Senate and over to the House and have it enacted.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I could never agree to permit the passage of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the pending bill, because those three sections really make this an importation bill and not a deportation bill. I made that statement yesterday on the floor of the Senate; and, since the Senator has been good enough to mention that aspect of the matter. I wish to go further in explanation and state to the Members of this body that if sections 3, 4, and 5 of the bill are enacted into law they will make the bill an importation bill instead of a deportation bill. Those sections really provide for bringing in aliens instead of deporting them. If this bill is passed as now proposed, it will keep here all those who are here; and all those whose stay is legalized under sections 3, 4, and 5-and the bill legalizes their stay here-will have the right and privilege, under the immigration laws of the country, of bringing in the members of their families who now are abroad. So, instead of closing the floodgates of immigration, we shall be opening them up; and if we pass the bill there will be such a flood of immigrants that the recent physical floods cannot be compared with the thousands upon thousands who will be permitted legally to come into this country.

Unfortunately, very few persons understand anything about the Kerr-Coolidge bill. Most persons think it is an immigration bill. A great many persons think that all the individuals we are talking about here are persons of excellent character, as stated in the report in today's newspaper.

If the Senator now will permit me to proceed—because I do not wish to lose the thought—

Mr. COOLIDGE. I would not interfere with the Senator's line of thought; but, in regard to aliens coming into this country, I think the matter is very well guarded at the present time. I am sure the Senator knows that the officials of the Department of Labor have certain discretionary powers; and if they feel that a person coming into this country is liable to become a public charge in any way, shape, or manner, no matter if he does have relatives here, they make him give a good-sized bond, a bond that appears to be ample protection to guarantee that he shall not become a public charge on either the State or the Nation, and that he shall not become a charge on his relatives.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may state for the Senator's information that the records show that because of a strict construction and interpretation of the public-charge clause, the State Department, through its various representatives in foreign ports, has been successful in keeping from this country within the past several years more than 1,000,000 immigrants who sought to come to this country. I think the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, and the other officials of his Department, are to be congratulated upon that strict construction and interpretation of the public-charge clause.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, is there not a dividing line which will enable us to proceed with this bill and then take up those three essentials of the Senator's bill? Can we not separate the two measures so that we may enact the Senator's bill as well as ours? I know that the other members of the committee, like myself, are entirely in sympathy with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator from Massachusetts. We are both working toward the same goal; but one goal is for America—

Mr. COOLIDGE. I cannot understand why two professional men cannot get together.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I believe we can get together and agree, with the consent of the other Members of this body, upon perhaps a commission to pass upon these 2,862 cases and see which ones really ought to remain here. I think we can get together on the matter. I thank the Senator for that statement; and I shall be very happy indeed, sometime at the Senator's leisure, to talk about the subject with him, because we are both interested solely in doing that which is best for the American people.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Then, why does not the Senator bring before the Senate, as amendments to the committee bill, any amendments he would like to present before the Senate and see whether or not the Senate will agree with him in regard to them? Why not first square away with this bill and then take up the Senator's bill?

The Senator from North Carolina is a professional man and a lawyer. There are eight other lawyers on the committee. Six of them have been sitting continuously in the hearings and in the executive sessions of the committee which framed the bill. The only fault that seems to be found with the bill is that one Senator, a member of the committee, has an amendment to offer to it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I assure the Senator that I am not going to criticize the members of the Senate Committee on Immigration. I should not think of doing that; and if, at any time during the course of my argument, I should drop the slightest hint of criticism, I wish to be pardoned for it, because it would be far beyond me to criticize the members of the committee. But, like millions of other persons in the country, I feel that the Members of this body are entitled to know what the Kerr-Coolidge bill represents and what it really is designed to do. I feel it my honor-bound duty to oppose its passage with every ounce of strength I can command; and therefore I do not see how in the world we could ever agree to the Senator's proposal. Perhaps we can talk about it a little later, however. I am glad the Senator has suggested a compromise.

Mr. COOLIDGE. We may have a respite of a week or so while the impeachment proceeding is going on.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; we shall be able to talk it over, and perhaps we shall get somewhere. All we have to do is to look after our own home folks first, and then think about the other fellows.

Mr. COOLIDGE. There is nothing illogical about the Senator's three proposals.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator for that statement. Mr. COOLIDGE. I have always been in favor of restriction and limitation of immigration, and a better record of immigrants. As we are talking today, I understand that the Department of Commerce is taking a census; and I think they are trying to include in that census every alien. I hope so, at any rate. In fact, if we do have another census, the next census ought to include every alien in the country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to know that my colleague and friend agrees with me that all aliens should be

Mr. COOLIDGE. If we ask that the veterans receiving a bonus and a pension be fingerprinted, why not ask that aliens be fingerprinted, too?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is absolutely correct.
Mr. COOLIDGE. There is not another country in the world to which we could send thirty or forty thousand criminals annually which would accept them, is there?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Then why do we not get together on two separate bills, and pass them both, if the Senator does not want these persons to come in?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think possibly we can get together. I see that the Senator has my viewpoint about this matter, and I thank him for mentioning the fact that there ought to be fingerprinting of aliens, especially in view of the fact that we are fingerprinting our veterans. There is no earthly reason why we should not have aliens fingerprinted in order that we may ascertain the number of aliens in the country.

Mr. President, I have not finished with Mr. Grenier. We heard what Colonel MacCormack said about Mr. Grenier. Judging from what Colonel MacCormack says about Mr. Grenier, he is not a bad fellow at all. But I undertook, on my own initiative, to find out a little something more about George Gaston Grenier de la Paris. Here is what I found at the Department of Labor:

I went to the Department and personally investigated the records. I took with me a stenographic reporter to take down exactly what I found there. I found that George Gaston Grenier is not the angelic person so delightfully painted by the brush of Colonel MacCormack and his assistant artists. Before going into that matter, however, I wish to say this:

Senators remember that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] brought to my attention the testimony of Colonel MacCormack before the committee of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge], in which Colonel MacCormack said:

Why. Senator, we combed these cases with a fine-tooth comb. We went over them time and again.

Several pieces must have been broken out of the comb. however, because the Department missed more than they found. They must have been working very late at night; they must have been so sleepy and tired that they could not see the record, because here is what my eyes revealed in the morning light as to George Gaston Grenier:

The files of the Immigration Service show that Grenier entered the country illegally in 1926. He violated the law in coming into this country. He had no respect for the immigration laws of our country, and nobody else has respect for them. We might just as well understand that at this time. Nobody has any respect for our immigration laws, because aliens come in here every year by the thousands upon thousands in violation of our laws, in disrespect of our laws; and I do not wonder that that is a fact. Why should they have any respect for our laws? Why should the aliens who are slipping into our country every day, overnight, have any respect for the immigration laws of the country, when our own Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization has no respect for the laws we have made? I say that because the Department officials, out of ill respect and disrespect for our laws, have taken it upon themselves to hold in this country persons who have been declared mandatorily deportable.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schwellenbach in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very glad to yield to my colleague. Mr. BAILEY. I am troubled by subsection (b) on page 3 of the bill introduced by my colleague, reading in this way:

Whenever the President shall proclaim an emergency to exist in the United States, the Secretary of Labor shall take into custody all aliens subsisting upon public or private relief and deport them forthwith to the country of their origin.

I wish to ask the Senator to clear my mind on the subject of the rights under the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution of a child born in this country, the son or daughter of an alien.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I assume the Senator is desirous of ascertaining from me as to whether or not we would have a right to deport that child?

Mr. BAILEY. That is precisely the question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am of the opinion that under those amendments to the Constitution, this Government would not have the right to deport that child; but it would have the right to deport the alien who had come into the country in violation of the law, and if he is a good man, if he is a Godfearing man, if he loves his own flesh and blood, he will take his child back with him.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that is not the question. The language is, "Whenever the President shall proclaim an emergency to exist the Secretary of Labor shall take into custody all aliens subsisting upon public or private relief and deport them forthwith to the country of their origin." It is not a matter of committing a crime, it is a matter of being here and of our deporting them. This would give the right to deport the father and mother, but I raise the question as to whether we could do that when the consequences would be to deport a child born in the United States, in the face of the fifth and the fourteenth amendments.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am rather inclined to think that we could not deport the child. I am glad the Senator brought that to my attention. I desire to read an editorial in regard to aliens dependent upon this Government, but before I do that I will come back to the Senator's question, and I am very glad he raised the point. I desire to finish with George, and then I will come back to the Senator's question.

George came into this country illegally, without any respect for the law. George was a deserter from the French Army.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Is this the same George?

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is the same George. We will never forget George. Further, he stole an airplane. In the first place, he violated the immigration laws of our country by coming into the country. In the second place, he deserted from the army of his country.

We permit immigration into this country only for the purpose of adding to the strength of our country, benefiting our country, improving our country. There is no reason on earth why we should permit anyone to come into this country unless we want him, and the only reason why immigration is permitted is for the purpose of helping our country; it is not for the purpose of helping the alien.

What good would this man be to our country? If he did not have enough love and respect for the country of his birth, what do we want with him?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that he stole an airplane?

Mr. REYNOLDS. He stole an airplane.

Mr. DAVIS. Could he operate the plane himself?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Evidently.

Mr. DAVIS. Did he take it from one field and fly to Mr. REYNOLDS. The record charges him with stealing an airplane.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Did he land in this country in an airplane?

Mr. REYNOLDS. He evidently landed safely.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Did he land in this country in an airplane?

Mr. REYNOLDS. He must have done so, according to Colonel MacCormack, because he was painted so lily white that he must have dropped out of the skies. That must have been how he got into this country. I never thought of that before. Colonel MacCormack painted him so lily white, perfumed like the lovely red, red rose in the springtime garden, that I can understand now how he got into this country. The colonel painted him so lily white and perfumed so deliciously that I could not imagine the man slipping across the border. Now I see how he got into the country. He must have flown over here and dropped down in a parachute from the skies.

Now, I desire to state something else about this man:

. That he gave false testimony in applying for United States citizenship.

He perjured himself.

That he was convicted of a bastardy charge.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Was citizenship granted to him?

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is one of the fellows whom we should not send back, who, according to Colonel Mac-Cormack, is so pure and good, setting an example for the young of the country, a man who will contribute to the blood strain, to the stock, to the development of America, the greatest country on the face of the earth. That is the kind of people Colonel MacCormack wants to keep here in defiance of our laws.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether this man is one of those included in this description of the 2,862, in a question in which Colonel MacCormack was asked whether they were habitual criminals or "tainted with any acts of conduct which would make them unfit for citizenship", and he answered, "Absolutely not."

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is one of them. According to Colonel MacCormack's description, he was whiter and purer than the paper I hold in my hand, which was probably made in Michigan.

I wish to show the sort of people who are coming into this country. I know that the Members of the Senate do not want to keep this kind of people in the United States, but I say that if they do want to keep such men here, it is all right with me. If they can stand them, I can stand them. But I am going to let the American people, the people of my State and the people all over this country, know where I stand on this matter. I am voting for Americans first, then I will think about the people in other portions of the world. But I want it understood that I am an American, I am for America for Americans, and I am going to stand by Americans first, last, and all the time, and afterward, if I have any time and energy left, I will give it to the people abroad.

Let us see what else we have here. Here is a man who got into the country illegally. He deserted from the army of his country. If we should naturalize him and give him American citizenship, during the next war he would desert from our Army. He perjured himself. He was convicted of a bastardy charge. This is the man referred to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] when he asked me a moment ago whether this was one of the 2,862 cases who Colonel MacCormack says are men of fine character, and are not tainted with anything that is suggestive of immorality, that is suggestive of anything but fine, manly, courageous citizenship.

Let us see something more about George. If Colonel MacCormack can make a mistake in one, he can make a mistake in 2,862. Lo and behold, I find that this man entered this country twice illegally.

Grenier, according to the records, made two illegal entries into this country, his first arrival being dated back in 1919.

Listen to this carefully:

At that time he came into the country under false papers which he had purchased.

Not content with slipping in here the first time in violation of the law, after he was deported he actually had the gall and the nerve to buy a falsely prepared passport and to come in under that.

He was ordered deported to France in 1932, but somehow or other he managed to stay the deportation order, and it eventually was canceled.

Why was that deportation order canceled? Here is a man who, the law says mandatorily, must be deported, but the Commissioner of Immigration says, "You will do no such thing. I will pay no attention to the American laws, made by the American Congress. I know more than they do. I am going to do what I want to do. I will not send this man out of the country, even if the law says he ought to be sent out of the country, but I am going to keep him here." Why? At the suggestion of the board of review, that "hardboiled" board of review mentioned by my colleague the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] he canceled the deportation order because a welfare agency somewhere said he ought not to be sent out of the country. The Commissioner is going to let the welfare agencies run the office. He is violating the law himself by not carrying out the laws of the country.

The welfare agency examined into his history.

That is the most remarkable statement I have ever read. The welfare agency said that he ought to be permitted to remain in this country because they had examined into his history. They did not find where he had come illegally into this country, did not find where he had deserted from the army of his country, that he had stolen an airplane, that he had debauched a poor woman.

Can I believe that the Members of the Senate would rely upon such statements as that in a matter of such importance as this? No! I declare a thousand times: no!

Listen to this. I particularly call this to the attention of the Senator from Vermont, who has been kind enough to listen to all this argument. I am glad indeed to see that he is interested in America for America first, and I want to say that the people of his Commonwealth are glad to know that he is interested in America, and not in aliens; that his sympathies are with Americans, and not with aliens. I wish all the people of America to know where my sympathies are. My sympathies are with the Americans and not with the aliens.

Listen to this:

One of the moving considerations which led the welfare agency in its report to recommend leniency in the case of Grenier was that if he should be returned to France he would face court martial.

Of all reasons for staying a deportation, of all reasons for keeping a criminal in this country, the reason assigned for not sending him back to France, the country whose flag he had dishonored, the soil of which he had besmirched, was that they did not wish to see the poor fellow court-martialed.

If an American of that kind were in France—assuming there ever was an American like that—how long do Senators think he would be permitted to stay there? He would be kicked out of France so fast that the seat of his trousers would be as full of holes as a Swiss cheese. [Laughter.] The seat of his trousers would look as the immigration laws of this country will look if the pending bill shall be passed.

That, Senators, is the case of George Gaston Grenier.

Later I shall discuss the question as to whether or not those who come into this country have to undergo physical examination upon their arrival. Before I reach that, however, I again wish publicly to thank the Senator from Vermont, who is standing for Americans in preference to aliens, for bringing to my attention the sworn testimony appearing in the hearings before the Committee on Immigration, United States Senate, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, on Senate bill 2969, part 4, March 11, 1936. I read from page 201, that which was especially called to my attention by the Senator from Vermont.

Senator KING-

The Senator from Utah is a member of the Committee on Immigration, and at that time, as I recall, he was sitting with the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge]. The Senator from Utah asked the question:

Those 2,800 deported are not habitual criminals, and are not tainted with any acts of conduct which would make them unfit for citizenship?

Colonel MacCormack, who was on the stand, answered under oath:

Absolutely not.

What in the world did Colonel MacCormack mean? Colonel MacCormack was before the Senate Committee on Immigration. Colonel MacCormack, I assume, had been sworn. I assume Colonel MacCormack was testifying under oath. If he was not under oath, at least he was testifying; and, regardless of whether or not the oath had been administered to him, he was supposed to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, because the Senate Committee on Immigration was sitting as a body for the purpose of getting sufficient information on which intelligently to pass upon this most important legislation.

The Senator from Utah asked the question:

Those 2,800 deported are not habitual criminals, and are not tainted with any acts of conduct which would make them unfit for citizenship?

Colonel MacCormack answered:

Absolutely not.

He said "absolutely not." That is what he told the Senate committee. He said none of them were tainted. He said they were men of good character; there was nothing which would place them in a category which would make them unfit for citizenship.

I ask Senators to answer this question in their own respective minds conscientiously, as I know they will do: Would they consider fit for citizenship in this country a man who had entered this country illegally, in violation of the laws which Congress had made? Would they consider fit for citizenship in this country, and fit to associate with their blood kin or friends, a man who had deserted his flag, who had deserted his army, who had deserted the country of his birth? Would they consider fit for citizenship in this country a man who was a thief, who had stolen an airplane, who had perjured himself and sworn falsely by buying a counterfeit, a forged passport?

Senators certainly would not so consider. I can answer that question for them. I do answer that question for them, and I answer it unhesitatingly, because I know the character of men Senators are, and of what they are built. I know what consciences they have in their bosoms. No; George Grenier is not fit for citizenship in this country, but yet he is one of the 2,862 cases which Colonel MacCormack says are as pure as the drifted snow, and which should be permitted to remain in this country.

I know there are some cases out of the 2,862 which are worthy of consideration, and my heart goes out in sympathy to the persons involved, and I wish them to stay in this country; but I am not willing to help pass a law which will blanket into this country 2,862 people, the greater portion of whom are not entitled to be in this country. I should be derelict in my duty if I helped to pass upon 2,862 cases under a blanket law when I knew I was doing an injustice to the 12,625,000 unemployed persons in this country, and to the millions of persons upon relief.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the Senator's theory as to those who ought to pass upon the cases and decide whether or not they should remain here? Congress cannot do it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, yes; we can, Senator. Mr. BARKLEY. We cannot take up every individual case and pass an act concerning that case. We never could do that.

Mr. REYNOLDS. There are a number of bills pending before Congress now, known as private bills, giving relief to such individuals. Further, I wish to say to the Senator that I could not trust, and I do not believe anybody else could trust, the Immigration and Naturalization Service to pass upon these cases after Colonel MacCormack testified before the committee of the Senate that they were all lily white, that there was nothing in the world wrong about them, that there was nothing about them that would not make them

Perhaps we can come to some conclusion concerning a commission or a committee to pass upon such cases. One could go through a hundred of those cases in the Department every day and get the facts, if one were willing to work 8 or 10 hours a day, and pass upon these cases, and present a bill covering each case. But what is asked to be done in the pending bill is to blanket into this country 2.862 criminal aliens, 98 percent of whom have violated the criminal laws of this country, as admitted by Colonel MacCormack; and it might mean, with respect to a million such cases in the next 3 years, that the same Department of Labor shall be given power to say whether or not the aliens shall be permitted to violate the laws of this country.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask whether the Senator from North Carolina believes the pending bill would be more endurable if the Senate should adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, which divides the sheep from the goats, and puts all the criminal class out of the discretion which is granted to a departmental committee, and leaves to the departmental committee in all cases where hardship would result, and where the only offense was that of illegal entry into the United States, the right to permit such persons to remain in the United States and to become citizens? Would not the bill be more tolerable than it now is if such an amendment were placed in it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say very frankly to the Senator that any amendment which would separate the black sheep from the white sheep would strengthen the bill, because to blanket into the country all these 2,862 cases is unfair to the American people. The bad thing about this bill is that in section 3 not only does it blanket in those who came into the United States illegally but it gives discretionary power to an interdepartmental committee for a period of 3 years, during which it may pass upon the cases of a million people which may come before the committee for decision as to deportation. I cannot bring myself to let any interdepartmental committee pass upon those cases after having read the record.

I am going further into the matter mentioned sometime back by the Senator from Vermont, who has contributed very largely to this debate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator resist the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to state very frankly to the Senator from Michigan that I have not had time to give study to it; but at a later date I hope to confer with my colleague the Senator from Vermont regarding the matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to say to the Senator that many of us have a profound sympathy with the fundamental thesis which the Senator from North Carolina is developing. We simply have a doubt in our minds regarding some of the situations referred to, which, it seems to me, could appropriately be covered without any derogation of the main purpose sought by the Senator from North Carolina. I recommend to the Senator that he consider the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator. He has expressed my opinion precisely. As I stated a moment ago, just previous to the contribution to the discussion by the Senator from Michigan, whose fine home city of Grand Rapids is so favored, that I know there are many worthy cases in the 2,862. I do not want to send any worthy aliens out of this country. If I should send any such person out of this country by my efforts or the efforts of those who are cooperating with me in this matter, I would feel very badly about it; I would feel very sad. It would hurt me deeply to bring sorrow into the heart of any little child or to any wife or to any father. I want to avoid that; but I do not want to blanket all these people in here now and have the people of the world say, "Did not I tell you what the immigration law of the United States amounted to?" I want to make the people of the world respect our immigration laws, even if the people of America do not respect their own laws. It is unfortunate that our reputation has gone far and wide to the four corners of the earth and over the waters of the seven seas as being the most lawbreaking people upon the face of the earth, attributable to the delays in trial procedure and other things.

Listen to what Colonel MacCormack says. On page 202and this was brought to the attention of the Senate a moment ago by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin]-

Every stayed case has been repeatedly reviewed.

He testified to that before the committee.

In the first 2,000 cases about a dozen bad ones were found.

He says that "in the first 2,000 cases about a dozen bad ones were found", while I examined 30 and found about 20 had ones.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the Senator examine the two-thousandeight-hundred-odd cases?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No, sir; I did not. I picked at random some 20 or 30 or 40 cases.

Mr. DAVIS. From the files?

Mr. REYNOLDS. From the files. I did not ask of those in charge of the files for any particular cases. I said, "Just pick them out of the files and bring them here."

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator think the same ratio runs all through the 2,862 cases?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I cannot say that; I would not want to say that; but if the Senators are sufficiently interested in the problem, that is of more interest to the great masses of the American people than any other legislation before this body now-and there can be no question about that-if they want more information about it I wish to say that I will gladly go to the Department of Labor with an official reporter or representative or anyone else and just ask them to pick out a hundred cases, make a record of them, and bring them into this body and see what they turn out to be. I want to do the right thing, but I am getting sick and tired of our crying over and giving consideration to foreigners when we ought to be thinking about our people here at home. We had better be thinking about our own and not crying about the poor aliens. That is the way I feel about it, and that is the way millions upon millions of people in this country feel about it.

Mr. DAVIS. Of the 2,800 cases, how many of the persons involved had jobs?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That would be quite problematical, because the fact is revealed that there have been at one time or another more than 1,500,000 aliens upon our relief rolls; and during the time that 1,500,000 were on the relief rolls they sent back to their respective homelands from which they came in international money orders more than $250,-000,000, as has been estimated.

Mr. DAVIS. Those who have entered surreptitiously, if they are employed, have jobs that ought to belong to legally admitted aliens who are now on relief, as well as to American citizens now on relief.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. Every job that is held by an alien today is a job taken away from an American.

Mr. DAVIS. I am talking about the illegal aliens.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As to them, it is estimated that they are anywhere from 1,000,000 to 5,000,000 in the country.

Mr. DAVIS. Within the time the interdepartmental committee has the right to give legal status to illegal aliens here, how many are there who can come within that time limit? I have forgotten the number of years which the bill provides.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Three years.

Mr. DAVIS. It is to be in effect for 3 years, but it goes back so many years—I have forgotten the exact language of the bill. How many came in illegally up to that particular time which is made the deadline?

Mr. REYNOLDS. There is no way of telling, because we do not know how many people have entered the United States illegally; we have no registration of them. When we started out on our emergency-relief program, if Mr. Hopkins had had on his charts or his cards a notation that designated whether the individual was an alien or a citizen. whether he was foreign-born or American-born, whether he was naturalized or not, we would know how many aliens there are on relief rolls: but there was no such designation made upon the cards by Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator would not want to deny general relief to one who had legally been admitted here?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I would not.

Mr. DAVIS. Such an alien has cast his lot with us, and is he not, under proper circumstances, entitled to relief?

Mr. REYNOLDS. He is entitled under international law to the same benefits to which our citizens are entitled. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to my distinguished friend from the State of West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator just stated that Mr. Hopkins did not designate on his records whether certain persons were aliens or American citizens. In order to avoid the possibility of an inference of neglect of duty on the part of Mr. Hopkins being drawn from that statement, I venture to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if it is not a fact that it was impossible for Mr. Hopkins to indicate whether persons on the relief rolls were aliens because of the nonexistence of record evidence concerning the matter?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad the Senator makes that suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, let me state that I think those who are handling relief and the employers of labor in the United States who have hired aliens should ascertain first whether they were legally admitted into the United States and if they have come in within the last year. Under the passport law, which, I think, was put in effect in 1927 or 1928, a certain certificate is attached to the passport. When a legal alien left the ship and was admitted by the immigration inspectors at the port, he was given such a certificate to show that he was legally in the country. There is no trouble about asking the alien when he goes to a place of business whether he was legally admitted and whether he is a citizen. Of course, if he is a citizen, that is all to the good for him. If he is an alien, he may be told, "Show your papers to prove that you were legally admitted." He ought to have those necessary papers to show that he was legally admitted; and when he applies for relief, he ought to show his certificate of legal entry to establish that he is legally in the country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir. Now, in regard to what my friend and colleague said a moment ago: At the time we were preparing to take care of the millions upon millions of unfortunate people in this country, everything possible that should have been done could have been done. I am not by any means criticizing Mr. Hopkins, I want my friend from West Virginia to understand—not at all—because, even if it had been shown that these people were not entitled to relief because they had come into the country illegally, we would difference; but that, whether they were black or white, or whatever their religion was, or whatever portion of the world they came from, they would be cared for. We are a bighearted, generous people, and we would not have permitted anybody to have starved or to have gone naked or cold. I mention incidentially, in connection with the chart on the wall, to which I expect to make reference in the next day or two in regard to this question, that if we had thought about it, proper records could have been kept. I will admit that if I had been in Mr. Hopkins' place that I would never have thought about it: I would never have thought at that time about putting on each card whether a person was an alien or an American. It just would not have gotten to my mind; but, if that had been done or if it could be done now, for that matter, then we could have some general idea of the number of aliens in this country; whereas, as it is, we have no idea whatsoever as to the number in the country.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator fully understand that every immigrant admitted to the country must pass certain medical inspection?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is my understanding, in cases where the alien enters legally.

Mr. DAVIS. But where he enters illegally he is not subject to medical inspection.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite true.

Mr. DAVIS. Since the inspectors have taken them in charge and since the time has been extended and they are permitted to remain in the country, I wonder if the aliens involved in the 2.862 cases have been sent to the Department of Public Health of the Government to be examined to ascertain whether they have no contagious disease. Does the Senator know whether any of the reports show that that was done?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The records do not show. Mr. COOLIDGE. Have the 2,862 people filed some sort of bond with the Government?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is my understanding some of them have filed bonds, and some of them have been turned loose on their own recognizance.

Mr. DAVIS. May I say to my very distinguished friend from Massachusetts that in many instances the bonds were forfeited and the parties are at large in the country? It is impossible to find them. A man's name may be Mr. A today and tomorrow it is Mr. B. If I remember correctly, the Government collected thousands upon thousands of dollars because of bonds which had been defaulted.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite true. I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania knows, because he was Secretary of Labor under two Presidents.

Mr. DAVIS. I have in mind that at one time we had a very difficult time with Chinese who had been in this country and gone to China again and wanted to reenter without examination. We insisted that the Public Health Service should examine them, even though they were coming back to a legal domicile. We found then a new disease which was called clonorchiasis. It was said to be a very contagious The Public Health Service had a very difficult time in handling it. I am wondering whether it would not be wise for the Senator to ask the Public Health Service now to make similar examinations if the excepted aliens are going to remain in the country temporarily?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the able Senator from Pennsylvania for that suggestion. I think it a very good suggestion, particularly in view of the fact that it is the purpose of those of us who are interested in the American people to see that they are spared from any immediate association with those who are afflicted with contagious diseases.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sure the Senator knows about the examinations which are made under the La Follette Seamen's Act, which was probably a new charter of liberty for the seamen who work on the ships that travel to practically every port in the country. Every time they make a trip the have said—as we all know—that it would not have made any seamen are examined. During our more prosperous days I understand more than a million seamen were examined. If it was found they had a contagious disease, they would be taken off the ship and sent to the port hospital and treated at the expense of the ship. The Government, of course, furnished the service and would charge the expense to the ship. I think many thousands of dollars were so charged in such cases.

> When we had thus cleared more than a million seamen they had a right under the law to remain in the United States for 60 days, and I would not change that law, because it is the seamen's charter of liberty. But the Chinese, Japanese, and Hindoos who come here get the same right of entry, and then go into the interior, where it is impossible to find them. The same thing is true of a good many other aliens.

> Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, continuing with the suggestion made by way of reference to the hearings before the Senate committee, Colonel MacCormack said:

> Every stayed case has been repeatedly reviewed. In the first 2,000 about a dozen bad ones were found.

> They came in to us from the field and had all the superficial evidences of being within the class which we are proposing to stay, but when they were reviewed we found a number of bad

In other words, they took out the bad ones and left the 2,862.

Senator Austin. Just what do you mean by "bad ones", Colonel?

Mr. MacCormack. Criminals. Each case, however, has been reviewed several times. In the first 2,000 we found a dozen really bad ones, including criminals. These and hundreds of others have since been rejected because they did not meet the conditions stated in the bill, or even if they met the conditions stated in the bill, because it did not appear in the public interest that the stay be granted. For example, a man might be of good character, no criminal record, have lived here a long time, with his wife and children, but yet be no use to his family, not support them. A case like that is rejected.

Senator King. He would be deportable?

Senator King. He would be deportable?

Mr. MacCormack, We have done that in hundreds of cases. have only stayed cases that to a careful administrator, looking out for the interests of the United States, seemed to warrant a stay. There has been no sentiment about it. The cases have been scrutinized by Shaughnessy here and his hard-boiled board of review, and there is darned little sentiment entering into the

I wonder what came over that "hardboiled" board of review when they let George G. Grenier stay on the list of 2,862.

At that same meeting the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Moorel directed this inquiry to Colonel MacCormack:

Maybe they do not understand the bill.

Mr. MacCormack. I know that they do not understand the bill. If they did understand it, they would not oppose it.

The very trouble about it is that we do understand the bill, and that is why we are opposing it.

Colonel MacCormack went on to say:

I would like to analyze the 2,862 stayed cases.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me to enable me to call up another

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my good friend from Arkansas for that purpose.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, yesterday I asked the Presiding Officer to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives relative to House bill 11663. At the time the request was made it was explained that the Senate had passed a Senate bill (S. 2512) in May 1935, and that the House bill had passed the House March 27, 1936. The two bills are different but relate substantially to the same subject matter.

I asked the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the House bill with a view to moving to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the Senate bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] desired an opportunity to look into the proposed legislation, and the matter went over until today.

I desire now to renew my request.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, since I objected to the procedure last evening proposed by the Senator from Arkansas I have looked into the bill passed by the Senate, Senate bill 2512, and compared it with House bill 11663. The Senator from Arkansas proposes a substitution of the language of the Senate bill for the text of the House bill.

At that time I took the position that none of us understood-at least, I did not understand-the exact difference between the two bills. I have since examined both of the bills. They are both simplified by being called antilobbying bills.

There is a very clear distinction, a very vital distinction, between the bill passed by the Senate, Senate bill 2512, and the bill passed by the House of Representatives on March 27, House bill 11663. The Senate bill is in every respect far preferable to the House bill. In my judgment, the Senate bill covers a wider and more important field than does the House bill. The fear I entertained last night was that when the bill goes to conference—and that will be the procedure—the Senate may yield to the House regarding the provisions of the House bill, and the most important features of the Senate bill may be omitted in conference.

The Senate bill proposes to deal with individuals who engage in lobbying before Congress, as well as with those who engage in lobbying at departments of the Government. Senate bill 2512, which passed the Senate May 28, 1935, relates not only to persons who engage in lobbying before the Congress for legislation but also to those who practice before the departments in the interest of contractors or claimants, or with reference to any other matter with which the department heads may have authority to deal. The Senate bill provides that all such persons shall register and that they shall file reports as to their income. The House bill leaves entirely out of consideration any reference to lobbying or working with or soliciting favors or privileges from any of the departments of the Government. There is absolutely no reference to such procedure in the House bill.

While I recognize, from a parliamentary standpoint, that we probably shall have no opportunity of dealing with the matter except in conference, I wish to say that I think it would be better to defeat any antilobbying legislation than to attempt to accept as a compromise the House bill in preference to the Senate bill. Having had the opportunity of making this statement today, I withdraw any objection such as I made last night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] was necessarily called from the floor a few moments ago. Before leaving he authorized me to say if this matter should come up that he had no objection to the request; and I have no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of Senate bill 2512.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall engage himself for pay, or for any consideration, to attempt to influence legisla-tion, or to prevent legislation, by the National Congress, or to tion, or to prevent legislation, by the National Congress, or to influence any Federal bureau, agency, or Government official, or Government employee, to make, modify, alter, or cancel any contract with the United States Government, or any United States bureau, agency, or official, as such official, or to influence any such bureau, agency, or official in the administration of any governmental duty, so as to give any benefit or advantage to any private corporation or individual, shall before entering into and engaging in such practice with reference to legislation as herein set out register with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the register with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, and shall give to those officers his name, address, the person, association, or corporation, one or more, by whom he is employed, and in whose interest he appears or works as aforesaid. He shall likewise state how much he has been paid, and is to receive, and by whom he is paid, or is to be paid, and how much he is to be paid for expenses, and what expenses are to be included, and set out his contract in full.

SEC. 2. Any person, before he shall enter into and engage in such practices as heretofore set forth, in connection with Federal bureaus, agencies, governmental officials, or employees, shall register with the Federal Trade Commission, giving to the Federal Trade Commission the same information as that required to be given to the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate in section 1 of this act. this act.

SEC. 3. At the end of each 3-month period, each person engaged in such practices as aforesaid shall file, either with the Federal Trade Commission or the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate, as required herein, a detailed report of all moneys received and expended by him during such 3-month period in carrying on his work as aforesaid, to whom paid, and for what purpose, and the names of any papers, periodicals, or magazines in which he has caused any articles or editorials to be published.

Sec. 4. All reports required under this bill shall be made under oath, before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths.

oath, before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths.

SEC. 5. Any person who may engage in the practices heretofore set out without first complying with the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 6. Any person who shall make a false affidavit, where an affidavit is required in this act, shall be guilty of perjury and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 2 years.

years. SEC. 7. A new registration shall be required each calendar year on or before January 15.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to require registration of persons engaged in influencing legislation or Government contracts and activities."

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference thereon with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. KING, and Mr. BORAH conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] has not concluded his remarks, and I am informed that he will require some considerable time to do so. With that understanding, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTER

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Claude C. Badeaux to be postmaster at Garden City, La.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations desires to call up a matter which is on the calendar.

CONVENTION BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND MEXICO FOR PROTEC-TION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS AND GAME MAMMALS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Executive A (74th Cong., 2d sess.), being a convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States for the protection of migratory birds and game mammals, signed at Mexico City, February 7, 1936.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a convention, which will be read by title.

The Chief Clerk read the convention by title.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this convention is similar to the one we have entered into with Canada with regard to the same subject matter. I will say frankly, however, that this convention does not go nearly so far as did the other one. The present convention provides that there shall be a closed season for migratory birds between March 10 and September 1. It also provides that there shall not be any shooting season longer than 4 months. It provides against killing insectivorous birds. It provides against the transportation of either migratory birds or mammals across the boundary line without the consent of both parties to the convention. It is an advance in the right direction and is unanimously approved by the committee, and I hope it will be ratified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, at this hour on Saturday afternoon, with so many Senators absent, I should feel obliged to suggest the absence of a quorum if we were to proceed with the consideration of the convention.

Mr. PITTMAN. In that case, Mr. President, I withdraw the request for the consideration of the convention at this time.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to state that on Monday, if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds] will yield the floor for that purpose, when the opportunity arises I shall ask that the Senate proceed with the regular order of business.

Attention is also called to the fact that the Senate is to sit as a Court of Impeachment beginning at 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next immediately following the conclusion of the impeachment proceedings on that day.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, April 6, 1936, immediately following the conclusion of the impeachment proceedings.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate April 4 (legislative day of Feb. 24), 1936

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The Senate, sitting as a Court for the trial of articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, met at 12 o'clock meridian, having adjourned to that hour while sitting as a Court on Friday, April 3, 1936.

The managers on the part of the House, Hon. Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas; Hon. Randolph Perkins, of New Jersey, and Hon. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, accompanied by the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, Elmore Whitehurst, and by Thomas M. Mulherin, special agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, appeared in the seats provided for them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, with his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., appeared in the seats assigned them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire if any Senators are present who have not as yet taken the oath as members of the Court? If so, the Chair will administer the oath.

Mr. Gerry rose, and the cath was administered to him by the Vice President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Couzens	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Bachman	Dieterich	Lonergan	Russell
Bailey	Donahey	Long	Schwellenbach

Coolidge	King	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell] are absent because of illness; that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] is absent because of illness in his family; and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Duffy], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burke], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gorel] are necessarily detained from the Chamber. I ask that this announcement stand of record for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings for the last session of the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, be considered as read and approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. I send to the desk an order and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed order.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the opening statement on the part of the managers shall be made by one person, to be immediately followed by one person who shall make the opening statement on behalf of the respondent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the order? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. KING. Pursuant to the practice heretofore observed in impeachment cases, I send to the desk an order, and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the witnesses shall stand while giving their testimony.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the adoption of the order? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

REPLICATION OF MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

The VICE PRESIDENT. Do the managers on the part of the House desire to make an opening statement?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House desire to make an opening statement, but prior to that the managers desire to have filed—and I assume it should be read—a very brief replication, which is according to the practice in impeachment proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the manager want it read or printed in the RECORD and Journal?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. It is not of concern. It may just as well be printed. It is a formal matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the replication filed by the managers on the part of the House will be considered as read and will be printed in the Journal and the RECORD.

The replication is as follows:

REPLICATION OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ANSWER OF HALSTED L. RITTER, DISTRICT JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, TO THE ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT, AS AMENDED, EXHIBITED AGAINST HIM BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF

The House of Representatives of the United States of America, having considered the several answers of Halsted L. Ritter, district judge of the United States for the southern district of Florida, to the several articles of impeachment, as amended, against him by them exhibited in the name of themselves and of all the people of the United States, and reserving to themselves all advantages of exception to the insufficiency, irrelevancy, and impertinency of his answer to each and all of the several articles impertinency of his answer to each and all of the several articles of impeachment, as amended, so exhibited against the said Halsted L. Ritter, judge as aforesaid, do say:

(1) That the said articles, as amended, do severally set forth impeachable offenses, misbehaviors, and misdemeanors as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are proper to be answered unto by the said Halsted L. Ritter, judge as aforesaid, and sufficient to be entertained and adjudicated by the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

(2) That the said House of Representatives of the United States of America do deny each and every averment in said several answers, or either of them, which denies or traverses the acts, intents, misbehaviors, or misdemeanors charged against the said Halsted L. Ritter in said articles of impeachment, as amended, Halsted L. Ritter in said articles of impeachment, as amended, or either of them, and for replication to said answers do say that Halsted L. Ritter, district judge of the United States for the southern district of Florida, is guilty of the impeachable offenses, misbehaviors, and misdemeanors charged in said articles, as amended, and that the House of Representatives are ready to prove the same.

HATTON W. SUMNERS, On behalf of the Managers.

OPENING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, Mr. Manager PERKINS will make a statement on behalf of the managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair suggest to the manager on the part of the House that he stand at the desk in front of the Vice President?

Mr. Manager PERKINS (speaking from the desk in front of the Vice President). Mr. President and Senators, the managers on the part of the House deem it practical to make a simple, plain opening statement of the facts expected to be proved on the part of the House in this impeachment proceeding against Judge Ritter.

There are seven articles of impeachment. The first is an article which charges that Judge Ritter received from his former partner in the law business the sum of $4,500 without any consideration, that that money was corrupt and dishonest money, and that therefore Judge Ritter should be impeached.

The facts are that late in the year 1929 Judge Ritter came to Florida, and in 3 short years was a judge on the Federal bench. About 6 months after he arrived in Florida he was admitted to the Florida bar and shortly thereafter went into partnership with a man named A. L. Rankin. That partnership continued about 21/2 years and was dissolved upon the appointment of Judge Ritter to the bench. The partnership was a small law business, the income of the partners being divided equally, amounting to less than $5,000 a year to each partner.

When Judge Ritter went on the bench not one word was said to anyone about his having an agreement to have Mr. Rankin purchase from him his partnership assets. Nearly 2 years passed by. If there were any such agreement it was locked up in the secrecy of their hearts during all that time. No demand was ever made by Judge Ritter upon Mr. Rankin for a payment on account to him because of dissolution of the partnership. No letter was written by one to the other, and there was no agreement or promise in writing of any kind.

Nearly a year after Judge Ritter went on the bench a lawyer named Richardson, who had been trustee and was then trustee in bankruptcy of a beautiful hotel at Palm Beach. conceived the idea of continuing himself in office as trustee or as receiver. He took into the arrangement with him a lawyer named Metcalf. They started to prepare the information necessary to file a bill to foreclose the first mortgage on the hotel before the trusteeship had been terminated. During the trusteeship a third mortgage had been foreclosed, the property was purchased, and the deed delivered to a man named Moore, representing the holder of the third mortgage.

Mr. Richardson and Mr. Metcalf, finding the operation of the hotel was a very valuable thing, sought out the former partner of Judge Ritter, to wit, Mr. Rankin, and combined him with them with a view to perpetuating the hotel property in litigation. Mr. Richardson said in one of his communications that for 6 months he had been planning and scheming and devising a method by which the property could be taken away from those who had purchased it on the foreclosure on the third mortgage and thrown back into his possession either as receiver or trustee, or at least get it back into litigation.

Richardson, Metcalf, and Rankin represented no one connected with the hotel, but they sought clients. Through the strategic position Mr. Richardson had by reason of being trustee in bankruptcy, having all the documents and papers connected with the hotel, he finally located a number of persons who held first-mortgage bonds.

The first-mortgage bond issue was $2,500,000, distributed among 7,000 owners throughout the United States. During a number of months Richardson and Metcalf, with Rankin, were scouring the country to some extent to find persons who might lend their names to them to begin suit to foreclose the mortgage. Under the terms of the trust deed the mortgage could be foreclosed only by either the trustee or bondholders holding bonds to the extent of $50,000.

Up to the time of 2 weeks before the filing of the bill-in fact, 1 week before the filing of the bill-all the bondholders these men had been able to get together held bonds amounting to only $4,500. Mr. Richardson, by reason of the fact that he was trustee, received a communication from a man in Boston named Bert Holland, in which Holland asked the trustee what was the situation in the bankruptcy proceeding. Richardson then sought Holland and asked what was his interest in the hotel. He learned Holland had $50,000 of bonds which he held as trustee. He then communicated with a man named Sweeny, who, under the trusteeship had been operating the hotel, and asked Sweeny to see Holland; to see if they could not get Holland to come into the plan of permitting Richardson and Metcalf and Rankin to file the bill to foreclose the mortgage.

About the 3d of October 1929 Sweeny obtained permission from Holland to file the bill to foreclose the first mortgage. Mark you, gentlemen of the Senate, long before the 3d of October 1929, Richardson, Metcalf, and Rankin had been seeking a client. No client had been seeking a lawyer in the case. They had been amassing information, gathering it from the files of the trustee, gathering it out of the court, getting it from the courthouse where the mortgage and a copy of the bonds were recorded. Before they obtained the client on the 3d of October 1929, they had practically prepared a bill to foreclose the mortgage.

On the 3d of October Holland gave his consent. He then communicated with other bondholders, and on the 10th of October he notified Mr. Rankin, former partner of Judge Ritter, not to proceed in the case and not to file the bill to foreclose the mortgage. He notified him by wire. The wire was received by Rankin on the 10th of October 1929, and before the bill was filed. In response to that wire Rankin stated in a telegram that he had mailed the bill of foreclosure from his office at West Palm Beach to Miami, but it had not reached the clerk's office, and in fact it did not reach the clerk's office until the 11th of October, giving the lawyer ample time to telephone or telegraph or, perhaps, even to write to notify the clerk not to file the bill, as directed by the client.

On the 16th of October Mr. Holland forwarded another wire to Mr. Rankin and told him not to proceed with the foreclosure suit at all, that he did not want a receiver, that he was acting with the bondholders' committee for the protection of the bondholders. Notwithstanding that, Mr. Rankin, knowing that without Holland and the $50,000 of bonds he held it would be impossible for them to proceed with their foreclosure, filed an intervention on behalf of $4,500 worth of bonds to clinch the proceedings in the court and make it impossible for Holland to get out.

When Rankin sent the bill of complaint to the clerk at Miami he wrote a letter, which will be produced in evidence before this honorable body, in which he said he was enclosing the bill, and in which he asked the clerk of the court to put the bill under lock and key and not let anyone know it was filed, to keep the newspapers from having information in order that there should be no publicity—until when? Until the return of Judge Ritter, who then had been trying some cases in the city of New York.

During the latter part of September and the early part of October, Judge Ritter was engaged in trying cases in Brooklyn, N. Y. After this conspiracy had been fomented and this litigation started on its way, and before the client had been obtained by these champertous attorneys, Richardson and Rankin and a man named Tucker took a trip to New York. We say that one of the objects of the trip was to have a conference between Rankin and Judge Ritter with reference to this foreclosure suit and with reference to the appointment of a receiver in the foreclosure suit.

You will observe, gentlemen of the Senate, the proof will be that Mr. Richardson had spent two or three thousand dollars in fomenting this litigation before he even had a client; and in order to recover back the money he had expended, and put himself in a position where he could make a good deal of money by again being receiver, it was necessary that they get a client. Finally, after Holland had discharged Rankin and notified him as his attorney to proceed no longer, the matter came up for hearing before Judge Ritter on the 28th of October.

Before the client entered the courtroom with the former partner of the judge, the client discharged Mr. Rankin, told him he did not want him in the case any more, and that he wanted to discontinue the suit, because he had joined with other bondholders to protect their interests by means of a bondholders' committee. They went into the court. This man Holland came all the way from Boston to Miami to present to the judge his side of the case. He told the judge that he had discharged Rankin, that he desired the bill dismissed, and that he did not wish to proceed with the foreclosure. What was he met with? He was met with a statement by the judge that the court would not stand for these out-of-town or out-of-State litigants bringing proceedings in the courts of Florida and then seeking to set them aside or have them dismissed.

Then Holland urged Judge Ritter, even if he could not have the bill dismissed, that no receiver be appointed. Judge Ritter announced his intention of appointing Richardson, the man who for 6 months had been scheming and devising a way of continuing his operation of the property in connection with Sweeny.

A very reputable firm, Shutts & Bowen, were represented in court by Mr. McPherson. He objected to Richardson being appointed receiver. He asked the court for time to file affidavits or read the necessary documents to show the unfitness of this man Richardson, who fomented the litigation. The matter was adjourned until early in the afternoon, when Mr. McPherson appeared with either telegrams or letters which demonstrated right on their face that Richardsonthe man who had been trustee and who then was trustee in bankruptcy and whom the judge mentioned as receiver-had for 6 months been plotting and planning to continue his operation of this property. Notwithstanding these letters or telegrams read by McPherson, the judge, brushing aside the application of Holland, and refusing to listen to his request to dismiss the bill, made complete the champertous efforts of Richardson, Rankin, and Metcalf by appointing receiver the very man who had fomented the litigation and who they knew had fomented the litigation and who Judge Ritter knew had fomented the litigation, as stated by Mr. McPherson.

The receivership went on through 2 years' operation of the hotel after the filing of that bill; and I dare say, gentlemen, the testimony will show that Mr. Rankin did not do more toward the preparation of the bill than merely to sign his name to it. You gentlemen will be the judges of that.

The litigation went on from October. Then, in a little while, Mr. Rankin came in and asked for a fee. Judge Ritter allowed him a $2,500 fee, which fee was originally opposed by the same firm of Shutts & Bowen, who really represented the people in interest, the bondholders. Finally, I believe, there was an acquiescence in the $2,500 fee.

Later Rankin wanted more money. He had made an application for a fee of $15,000. Judge Ritter wrote a letter, which will be offered in evidence before this honorable Court, showing that the matter was sent to Judge Akerman and that Judge Akerman fixed a final, complete fee in this foreclosure suit of $15,000.

There will be some dispute as to whether it was a final and complete fee. Perhaps there will be someone who will say that under the practice in Florida in a foreclosure suit there may be two fees—one for conserving the property and finally one as the fee on the final decree.

But from the time of the entry of that order for $15,000 to the receipt by Mr. Rankin of the money thereunder he did practically nothing in this case which he and others had fomented. He had a few conferences; but the burden of carrying on the litigation was on the attorneys who represented the bondholders. They were the persons in interest. The bondholders really owned the property; but the persons who had gotten into possession of it were the receiver, Richardson, who had been the trustee, and his attorneys. They operated the property for two seasons.

operated the property for two seasons.

This property is a beautiful hotel. It operates from the 1st of January until about the 1st of April in each year. There is a 3-month season down there in this hotel. During all that time Mr. Rankin did practically nothing. These vigilant attorneys who represented the bondholders gave him a 120-day notice to take his affidavits in proof of the allegations of fraud he had set out in his bill of complaint. He sat idly by and did nothing with reference to taking any affidavits. The only thing we find that he did, after he signed the bill and caused it to be filed, was to appear upon the application for the appointment of a receiver and make application for fees.

After the 120 days had elapsed, and this Mr. Rankin, attorney for the plaintiff, did nothing, the firm of lawyers representing the bondholders gave notice of motion to take depositions to disprove the fraud and to prove the allegations in their counterclaim. They went to Chicago and took ample affidavits, which may be offered in evidence here. They thoroughly disposed of the question of fraud set out in the bill of complaint. There was nothing to it. Mr. Rankin did not even appear, nor did anyone appear on behalf of the receiver, or on behalf of Rankin or Metcalf, in Chicago when those affidavits were taken. Rankin sat down and let the litigation drift. There was only one thing they were intending to do. Richardson then was in the saddle as receiver, and the object was to keep the hotel operating as long as they could, because in ordinary seasons it took in three or four hundred thousand dollars net.

Upon the appointment of the receiver, Judge Ritter said to Metcalf, who signed the bill for the complainant with Mr. Rankin, that if Metcalf would step aside, he would appoint him attorney for the receiver. So, under an order of the court, Metcalf was appointed attorney for the receiver; and to counterbalance and to protect the interests of the bondholders, Shutts and Bowen were appointed attorneys for the receiver; and about a year passed by.

Finally, after long and difficult labor on the part of the attorneys for the bondholders, they were able to get Mr. Rankin to agree to a final decree. As I said, he did nothing of any consequence in this foreclosure suit from the time he signed his name to the bill until the time he took the check and endorsed the check for fees. He made a demand for at least $50,000 of fees to come to himself. The bondholders were powerless. The hotel was about to run into another year's operation. The real owners were being deprived of the possession of it. So, finally, the bondholders, through their attorneys, were obliged to submit to Mr. Rankin's demand for a $50,000 fee; and a consent decree was drawn—not drawn by Rankin, but drawn by the bondholders' attorneys, and changed to some extent by Mr. Rankin—by which a consent fee of $75,000 was allowed to Mr. Rankin. Together with the $15,000 fee he had received, it meant $90,000 of fees. The labor, all the work of any kind in the litigation, had been done by Shutts and Bowen. Before the decree was signed it was understood that they were to get one-third of whatever fee was allowed. Of the $75,000, they received $25,000, and they probably earned it.

What did Rankin do with the balance, gentlemen of the Senate? He gave 20 percent of the $50,000 balance to Metcalf, who helped to get him into the case and had helped to prepare the bill, for no reason whatever except that Metcalf had helped prepare the bill—$10,000 to Metcalf. He gave $5,000, or 10 percent of the $50,000, to Richardson, the man who was trustee in bankruptcy, and who had succeeded in making himself, through Judge Ritter, receiver in the foreclosure suit. Five thousand dollars of the $50,000 went to Richardson; and, if the answer be correct, $5,000 of it, or $4,500 of it, we allege, went to Judge Ritter.

You see, there was a cutting of the fee. After the $75,000 had been allowed and $25,000 taken out for the attorneys who did the work leaving $50,000 20 percent of the $50,000 or did the work, leaving $50,000, 20 percent of the $50,000, or $10,000, this attorney Rankin gave to Metcalf, who also got $5,000 for acting as attorney for the receiver; 10 percent of it he gave to Richardson, the receiver, who got $30,000 in addition for acting as receiver; and either 9 percent or 10 percent went to Judge Ritter.

Under what circumstances did it go to Judge Ritter? Nearly 2 years after the dissolution of the partnership of Ritter & Rankin, without one word ever having been said by either Ritter or Rankin to each other about any agreement to dissolve contemplating the payment of a purchase price for the law business, without a whisper, without a letter, without a bill, without anything in the line of documentary evidence, admitted by them, I believe, when they go on the stand, the day before Christmas, December 24, under another order made made by Judge Ritter, Rankin received $25,000 of the $90,000 from the receiver. That very day he went to the bank and deposited it-$25,000 paid on account-and, gentlemen of the Senate, why was it not all paid? Because there was not the money in the hands of the receiver from the operation. In order for them to get enough money to pay these exorbitant fees it was necessary to operate the hotel through another season, and this was the 24th of December, and the season does not open until the 1st of January.

So $25,000 was paid to Mr. Rankin. What did he do with the $25,000? He went down and put it in the bank. Then he drew a check for $3,000 and cashed the check; and then, with the cash in his pocket, he went over and saw this judge who has been impeached; and, slipping into the judge's chamber, with no one present but themselves, he handed to the judge not $3,000, but, the story is, $2,500 in cash—dishonest money, we say.

What did the judge do with the $2,500? When the money was offered to him, did he say, "Oh, no; there should be evidence of what is going on here"? No; he took $500 of the $2,500 and put it in a little tin box, and kept it for 6 or 8 months in the little tin box, and he put $2,000 in the bank.

They allege in their answer that there was an honest debt from Rankin to Ritter of $5,000. Gentlemen, with a law business as small as this, it will be shown to this honorable Court that the books of that office were not worth $100; that all of the fees which were earned and which had not yet been paid, when they came in, were in their turn divided 50-50 with Judge Ritter, of which we make no complaint. One-half of the fees were paid over to Ritter, all paid over by checks, not one in cash.

I was about to call your attention to the fact that of this $15,000 Mr. Rankin received, as he names it, as a preliminary fee, he paid not one cent to the judge. It was only when he received the $25,000 that he paid $2,500; and when he got the balance of it, he again gets $2,000 in cash.

His office was in West Palm Beach, and he has a bank account in West Palm Beach and one in Miami. What does Rankin do? He goes into the bank at West Palm Beach and cashes a check for a thousand dollars and puts the cash in his pocket, or in his brief case. Then he comes the 70 miles by bus or motor from West Palm Beach to Miami, then goes into the bank in Miami and draws another check for a thousand dollars and puts the cash in his pocket, then he seeks out Judge Ritter, and, in the privacy of that chamber, without a witness, he slips the $2,000 cash to Judge Ritter. Gentlemen, we say that was dishonest money.

We say, further, notwithstanding everything that is in the answer, notwithstanding the claim that there was an agreement to sell the business for $5,000, that Judge Ritter made complete the conspiracy of these men. He appointed the receiver whom they expected to be appointed. In one of the communications it was said, "If a receiver is appointed, Bemis and Sweeny will operate the hotel", and he made an order for them to operate the hotel. That, we say, covers the first two charges.

The third charge is a charge of practicing law. After this judge went on the bench, about a month elapsed, when he wrote a letter to a firm of lawyers in New York City in which he said, "I am now a Federal judge. I can no longer represent you in this suit of the Mulford Co.", a foreclosure suit, "but I think I did a lot of work." He said, "I will watch that proceeding to its finish. I think I ought to have $2,000 more", notwithstanding the fact that he agreed that $4,000, which up to that time had been paid, was all the fee.

The lawyers in New York transmitted the communication to their client, and the client, through the lawyers, sent him a fee of $2,000. In that letter he said he would see the proceedings to the finish; and he did. The name of the firm of Ritter & Rankin appears on all the papers in the foreclosure suit, from the time it was originally instituted, down through the appointment of the judge, and down to the final decree. We say that is practicing law.

In the case of J. R. Francis, the judge received a fee of $7,500 in the year 1929. We say that he was practicing law during 1930 and 1931 in the matter of Francis, and that he received these fees. We expect to prove, to some extent by documentary evidence, that he was actively practicing law, contrary to the statute.

The last two charges are charges of false income-tax returns. In the year 1929 Judge Ritter made an income-tax return and did not show any taxables. We will show to this honorable court that in that year he received, over and above his salary as judge, between $11,000 and $12,000 which was taxable, and on which he should have paid an income tax.

We charge that in 1930 he made another false incometax return. In his income-tax return for 1930 he included nothing whatever for professional income. The only item was an item of his salary as judge, which was exempt. We will show that in that year he received at least $5,200 which should have been returned. We will show that he received in that year out of this Rankin payment at least $2,500.

Gentlemen, the last impeachment charge deals with the man as a judge on the bench, while the first six, to some extent, deal with him individually. We say in the last charge that by reason of the conduct of this judge he has brought the United States district court into disrepute; he has caused the public to lose faith in its court; and that by reason of his conduct he should be removed.

At the opening of the proceedings the managers on the part of the House struck out two items of article VII. The object of that was to curtail these proceedings. We felt, after a careful examination, that in all of the proceedings there was sufficient evidence, and these two other items would take at least 3 or 4 days to try before this honorable Court, and having in mind the pressure of business here and on the other side, and the fact that ninety-odd witnesses were subpenaed, we concluded it well to take those two items out. But, Members of the Court, the removal of those two items does not in any way change or affect the charge in that impeachment article. That charge is a charge of bringing the court into disrepute and disgrace.

If we prove these charges we shall expect from the hands of this honorable body a verdict that Judge Ritter is not fit to be judge of the United States district court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, the honorable counsel for the respondent will now have an opportunity to make a statement.

OPENING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT, BY FRANK P. WALSH, OF COUNSEL

Mr. WALSH (of counsel) (speaking from the desk in front of the Vice President). May it please this honorable Court, it becomes my duty to make a statement of the actual facts in this case. In view of the statement made by the distinguished gentleman who preceded me, I have to ask the indulgence of this Court for some little time to do that. I had intended to take the charges up right at the start, but in view of what has been said, and my surprise at it, I feel that, in justice to Judge Ritter, I must make some answer and comment upon it.

I had supposed that when a matter was stricken out—although I should have been very glad to say something about it—that that was the end of it; that there would be no more to say. Two items were stricken out, and, in view of what my distinguished friend, whom I admire very much, has said, I feel compelled to tell the truth about them.

They struck out the charge against this man, who we say is innocent, which brought him into the proceedings. They struck out the charge that he did something that was wrong in the appointment of a master in a public-utility case in Florida. I shall not take up time with that except to say—and I want to be challenged if this is not a fact—that we went down to Florida and interviewed every witness, every single witness, and found that the conduct of the judge was absolutely meticulous in that case. We found that every person connected with it said that his conduct was of that character.

We interviewed the witnesses the managers on the part of the House had subpensed. In fact, there had been an agreement between us that this was in the nature of an investigation, and that we could all interview all the witnesses, no matter by whom they were subpensed. Every man they had upon the record refused to say a word against this respondent, but said that his conduct in that case was absolutely correct, and that they had adopted a resolution to that effect because they believed he was an honest, conscientious, and intelligent judge, and they would have nothing to do with the effort to impeach him.

The same thing might be said of the Florida Trust case. It took us over a week to prepare that case. I will make this statement very brief; I will tell the Members of the Court why they dismissed the Florida Trust case.

With one exception, that was the most complicated case I ever ran across in a court of equity. But we have every witness in that case, except one, under subpena.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I do not want to disturb the eminent counsel—

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You are not disturbing me.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. But I believe we have to challenge the statement just made, that all the witnesses who were summoned by the managers would have testified that the conduct of this respondent was meticulous, or anything that approached that.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Did you excuse them all?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I assume they have all been excused

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Did you excuse them all before you left Miami? I will not have a controversy with you; you have been so kind and courteous to me.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I just wish to enter a formal challenge of the statement as to what the excused witnesses would have testified.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good. I will not further pursue the answer to that question. I wish to set those matters aside. They are ended.

I should have said nothing about that question except that I believe if this man had committed an offense which was a disgrace to the bench, if he did something unfair in that utility case, or if he did something wrong in the case of the Florida Trust Co., the managers on the part of the House would have brought such conduct before this high Court and had it pass upon it.

I shall now have to go into a little detail concerning the rest of this charge. I shall make it as brief as I possibly can, of course.

We must first take a look at this man. Who is Halsted L. Ritter? He is a man who was admitted to the bar in the State of Indiana when he was 24 years of age. He was the son of a distinguished lawyer who served his State and served his profession honorably and well. He practiced with his father for 1 year, when he went to Denver, Colo. There he had a distinguished career.

I think it is well to say here that he was not a lawyer who devoted himself entirely to the material part of the practice of law; but he gave freely of his time and energy, during the 30 years he was in the State of Colorado, to matters that were the concern and behoof of all the people of Colorado, and not merely to private professional practice.

In 1895 he started to practice in Denver. In 1907 and 1908 he was a member of the Colorado Railroad Commission. It was the first railroad commission of the State. He was the lawyer member of it. He sustained its constitutionality in the highest court in the State of Colorado.

In 1908 and 1909 he was the president of the Denver Bar Association.

From 1915 to 1924 he was president of the Social Service Bureau of Denver.

In 1909 he was appointed by the Governor and served as a member of the Colorado Child Welfare Bureau.

In 1924 he was elected president of the Denver Community Chest, which was new at that time.

In 1924 and 1925 he was the founder and president of the Denver Legal Aid Society, to furnish legal assistance to those whose economic condition did not permit them to hire lawyers.

When he came to the State of Florida he had been elected president of the National Association of Community Chests. He went to Florida, first, on account of the health of Mrs. Ritter. With a few visits, Mrs. Ritter's health becoming so much better, he concluded to locate there. He went there for that purpose, to locate permanently in 1925.

That, the testimony will show, was just at the time when the great Florida land boom was flattening out. A real-estate organization had been gotten up there of which he was elected secretary. He was not yet admitted to practice law, and the intention was that after he had qualified himself he would be the general attorney for the company. It was an ambitious undertaking. It lasted 4 or 5 months. His salary while it lasted, and while he collected it, was $25,000 a year. When it collapsed, in 4 or 5 months, he went into the law office of Winters & Foskett. Winters is a witness here on some aspects of the case. Judge Ritter stayed in that office some 5 or 6 months.

He took the bar examination in Tallahassee in the late summer of 1926. While taking that examination, he met Mr. Albert L. Rankin. He had never known the gentleman before. He had practiced during all of his youth and later manhood in Denver; and I desire to say at this point that his success in Denver was, we will say, above the average. For the last 15 or 20 years of his practice his average income was about $30,000 a year. In the whole 30 years it ranged from about $10,000 in the lowest year to about $80,000 in the highest year. His only reason for coming to Florida was because of his wife's health.

After he took the examination in Tallahassee, considering that Florida was a common-law State, that Alabama had a limited code, and that Florida had a complete code, he was attracted to Mr. Rankin, who seems to be—and I think he is—a very good common-law lawyer. He was admitted to the bar, having come from Andalusia, in Alabama, where they had this limited code. In November 1926, 2 years and some months before the judge went on the bench, they went into this partnership arrangement. They went in, each to contribute half, each to share half and half in the fees that were made. They started exactly as two young men would start who were just admitted to the bar. One of them was well advanced in the fifties, the other perhaps a few years younger.

That was a prosperous business from the first. Judge Ritter had established connections in many parts of the United States, particularly in the East and in Colorado, and the business came to that office. The earnings were misstated-not intentionally misstated, I am sure-by my brother on the other side. My recollection is that in the latter part of the partnership the fees ran up to something like $18,000; and it was only 2 years after Judge Ritter had started in, as I say, with an absolute stranger, and both at the ages I have mentioned.

They first started on the fourth floor of the Comeau Building in West Palm Beach. The business increased, and they moved up to the eighth floor.

At the time the judge went on the bench they had a modern, well-equipped law office. They had a large reception room; a room for each of the partners; a library, and a file room. They had modern steel furniture and first-class equipment throughout. That is a trifle, and if it had not been so terribly belittled by my brother, I do not believe I should have mentioned it. They had books. They did not have a great many, but the judge brought the textbooks he had from Colorado, and some of the reports, running along currently at that time, the decennial and other modern reports; and Mr. Rankin, who had served for several years as a judge in Alabama, brought his books.

Under the testimony there is going to be no question, I say to this honorable Court, about just what that property was, and about just what was transferred under the contract that was subsequently made. I say they did not have many books. They had 895, which have been checked up, textbooks and these current reports.

As to the law business, there will be no further question about that. All of it we checked up, and accurately, I believe, in connection with the Judge and my good friends the counsel here. I think we can show this Court exactly what law business was left in that firm, and very close to what the actual value was. At any rate, we can show you absolutely correctly the amounts of money that Judge Rankin got out of this purchase during the years intervening down to the present time.

The only case in which there is any charge whatsoever made against this honorable man, involving his conduct while on the bench, is the Whitehall case; and about that I shall go into detail later.

When it came to dissolving partnerships, it turned out that Judge Ritter had brought more than 95 percent of the business into the firm. Mr. Rankin, so far as getting business was concerned, was not successful.

The cases were of great variety. Many of them came from other places. The evidence will show that when it came to the question of dividing the business, it was agreed that there were certain cases there that had been entirely attended to by Judge Ritter, probably one or two, out of which he should get the fee; that is, cases that had been finished. There were a number of cases, not a great number, that had been finished, and nothing was left in them except the collection of the fee. As to those it was agreed, because they were readily collectible and about to be collected, that they would be divided between the partners before the judge went on the

The evidence will show that the reason why there was a contract made at all, and why Judge Ritter agreed to a contract, which you might say was manifestly too generous to Mr. Rankin, was the fact, first, that Mr. Rankin had not been successful. He left Andalusia in a great deal of debt, the property he had was mortgaged, his insurance was mortgaged. Judge Ritter said to him, "Now, I am going on the bench, and there is some good business here out of which the money will be collected, but it will run a long time; I in the year 1929, the first year he went on the bench.

and what I would like-you understand the business-is for you to say to me that you will pay a lump sum for the business, so far as the cases are concerned; and then, no matter how much work is done on those cases, no matter how much money you get out of the business, I will have no further income from it, because it would not do, of course, for me to be attempting to carry on a system of accounts running perhaps over years."

As a matter of fact, since he and I were in Florida one of those cases has been settled. The case in which this fee of $7,000 against a defunct corporation is involved is now 7 years old, but they had a written guaranty by a man and his wife in Boston to pay that fee of $7,000.

In the investigation that was held sometime ago these things were picked out at random. So far as God has given my colleague Judge Ritter and me the power to do it, there will be nothing said in this case at random. We will produce and show you the entire case.

At the time that agreement was made, and the judge stepped out, there was a young man named Salisbury, a graduate of Harvard Law School, and a man whom the judge knew in the State of Colorado, an associate and schoolmate of some of the judge's children.

In order to see that this business was carried out, because Mr. Rankin was not very fast in his movements-partly on that account and partly that the clients might be properly served-Judge Ritter wished Mr. Rankin to continue, and he asked Mr. Rankin if he could suggest to him that Mr. Salisbury come into that office, because he was an energetic young man; that he would keep Mr. Rankin "on his toes" that he would get the business that was sent to the firm of Rankin & Ritter disposed of; and, incidentally, that thereby an opening would be made for a young friend who, he thought, would be worthy. Mr. Salisbury will appear before this honorable Court during the course of these proceedings. That young man went in there, and for some time-I will not say how long, a year or two, a considerable length of time-handled the inside of that business and a great deal of the outside of it. An agreement was made that out of all the business that was in the office turned over by Judge Ritter and of any new business that came in Mr. Salisbury should have 15 percent net for himself of the proceeds that came from any of that business.

We have had a registered accountant of ability go through all the books and all the memoranda that were left in the

I ought to say that Judge Rankin—and I do not want to reflect on him-was a man who kept no accounts and was a good deal like some of us other southern country lawyers who are not very orderly in that respect. I do not think, however, there will be any difficulty in pointing out to this honorable Court just what he did. There will be a description now of the mechanical part of the office. There were 44 unfinished cases left in the office.

I forgot to say that when Judge Ritter asked Judge Rankin what he thought he ought to pay for it Judge Rankin said $5,000. Judge Ritter did not stop to calculate it, but, for the reasons I have stated, was very glad to close the matter in that way. So the agreement was that he was to pay him $5,000. There was no agreement of partnership, and there was no agreement of dissolution, either.

Now, making it as brief as I can, it turns out that out of those 44 cases Mr. Rankin has collected in cash $14,125. That does not take into account the $7,000 that will be collected if the guaranty in this case that was just settled a few days ago is made good. It took a long time to work some of that out, and I think we can give you dates and facts that will leave it beyond peradventure. So much for the dissolution of that firm.

As I have pointed out, the Whitehall litigation is the only case before the Court in which there is any complaint against Judge Ritter's conduct on the bench.

The proceedings in the Whitehall case originated in 1929. The other complaints against him likewise had their origin When he was mentioned along in November or December 1928 for the judicial vacancy he naturally gave some time to it. So it may be said that the end of the activity of that law firm came probably in December 1928.

His name was sent to the Senate by the President and was referred to the usual committee. There were a great number of applicants; the receptive candidates numbered about 40, I understand. A careful study was made of his whole life. His private life was found to be absolutely above reproach, and his public and professional life the same. So, without any objection, his appointment was confirmed.

Now, as to the Whitehall case, if this case, in any way, shape, or form presented the picture given it by Mr. Manager Perkins, I know that the judge would hang his head in shame and walk out of this Court; and I am sure that I would not be here trying to excuse him.

First, as to how that suit came about. Here was a hotel—one of the largest hotels and undoubtedly the finest in Florida. It was the last word in a hotel for people who had money to spend. I have to give the history of that hotel so that the Court may realize what caused this litigation, and when you hear it, it will be very different from the way in which it has been depicted. I will have to state to this honorable Court that if I could not prove it by documentary evidence, again I would not ask to be believed.

There were two men down there in the hotel business in 1924, one whose name has not been mentioned, Martin Sweeny, now living in New York, and the other H. E. Bemis.

They started together quite young men. Martin Sweeny began as a bookkeeper for the East Coast Railroad that owned all those great hotels down there, the Flagler chain of hotels, and railroads. The name of H. E. Bemis has not been mentioned here, and if it be true that these men conspired, why, then, I simply have to say it casts odium upon a man who stood higher, perhaps, than any other business man in the State of Florida, H. E. Bemis.

There was another gentleman in the same business named Paris Singer. These three men got together and purchased the Flagler home.

They put $437,000 in that enterprise. They made the necessary improvements and opened it as a hotel and a club in the off season in 1924. They ran it for 1 year as a club, the three of them being equally interested, and they paid for the entire property.

In 1925 Mr. Sweeny met a man named W. J. Moore, a financier. These three men were about to build an addition of 100 rooms on this hotel when they met Moore. Moore told them that he could finance it if they would manage it because they had a reputation. I know that will not be questioned by the managers for the House, but if it is I say that there is no one higher in this business, down to date, than Martin Sweeny is, and that before Mr. Bemis died he was not outranked by anyone in standing. Mr. Sweeny is still down there operating hotels; he has been a Florida hotel manager and president for 31 years from the time he was bookkeeper.

They succumbed to the suggestion that Mr. Moore should furnish the finances for that hotel.

They took him in. Their investment was $437,000. When they financed the hotel, he got in on the no-par common stock for absolutely nothing. He was supposed to be the man who would furnish all the money. More of that gentleman later on.

Mr. Sweeny will testify that he estimated the cost of the building at $3,000,000 for improvements and enlargement. Everything was left as Flagler left it, the works of art, paintings, and so forth. The price was to be $3,000,000. Moore gave the contract on the building to his own company, the Longacre Construction, Co. Mr. Sweeny will be here as a witness. The managers on the part of the House have subpenaed him, and I suppose will put him on the witness stand, but if they do not, we certainly shall.

When the building was completed, they were $1,000,000 in debt to the Moore Building Co. They owed for equipment and for furniture. These men, who were practical hotel operators, had had a complete success from the time they started until the time they had met William J. Moore.

In March of 1928 there were three mortgages upon the hotel, one for $2,500,000, a second mortgage for $500,000, and a third mortgage for $60,000. They were all controlled by Moore. Moore now owned one-half the capital stock in the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. Martin Sweeny and his brother, Ed, owned one-half of the balance or 25 percent of the total. Mr. Bemis, who has since passed away, owned the other 25 percent. The testimony will show that Mr. Bemis and Martin Sweeny together, and after Mr. Bemis' death Martin Sweeny alone, determined to try to hold the property in which they had invested practically all their savings. They served a higher duty, too, which you will find running all through the correspondence, because these millions which were collected on the first mortgage bonds largely came through those who had faith and confidence in H. E. Bemis, Martin Sweeny, and Ed Sweeny.

In 1928 the trustee under the first-mortgage bond or trust deed was Harold Moore. He was a son of W. J. Moore. The trustee under the second mortgage was a man named Thomas, who was a clerk and employee of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., which is their company. The third trustee was a man named Hayden Ward. He was likewise a clerk and an employee for the Moores. Ward was trustee under the $60,000 encumbrance which will have a great deal to do with this case.

In March, and before the first default upon which they could have sought foreclosure, they having left out of all mortgages a large number of unsecured creditors, Mr. W. J. Moore concluded that he would have the hotel go into the hands of receivers. The men were helpless. The debt was there.

You will see the fruits of the work of Martin Sweeny and H. E. Bemis through all these years. They were all money makers, but the volume of indebtedness was so great and the load so high that they had to fight it through with difficulty. With Bemis gone, Martin Sweeny is there today, and he will tell you the whole story and assert that he will never give it up as long as justice reigns.

A receiver was to be appointed. Judge Ritter was not in office at that time. This was in March of 1928. The creditors got together and, to their disappointment, Mr. Bemis selected a young lawyer down there named Walter J. Richardson, who has been so savagely condemned by my distinguished friend on the other side. Mr. Richardson went in to operate the hotel during the period of the winter of 1928 and until the late winter of 1929.

Mr. Sweeny will have an epitome of the proceedings of every year, including all the years in question, when he comes before you, and will show that the highest returns that were ever made were made during the first bankruptcy in which young Richardson acted as trustee in bankruptcy.

During the second foreclosure, in 1929, Richardson was put in as receiver for the unsecured creditors and a stipulation was made. You may bring any witness from Florida, I may say to my distinguished friend of the opposition, and every one will say it was a wise act that Judge Ritter performed in making the order that kept the hotel under the management of Martin Sweeny and Mr. Bemis, the men who put their money into it and brought it to the place where it was and held it, under this terrible load of debt, because they were the best ones to operate the hotel. The profits in all those years show that it was properly handled. The profits were enough to pay the interest practically all the time on the first mortgage.

I want to answer, in a word if I can, what the gentleman said about the trustee in bankruptcy, the receiver of the hotel, getting $30,000. Stated that way, it looks like a large sum. All he really got was his salary for 2 years, at $15,000 a year, because when Judge Ritter came into office there was not a thing to be done in the case except to approve the bills. Those were in the hands of the referee in bankruptcy, who had gone carefully through all of them and who will be before you gentlemen to testify. When he got $30,000 and the other fees, except the one fee which I shall explain, he was getting only his salary and compensation for what he was doing. What he brought out of that hotel, except for taxes and insurance, was about $300,000 net profit.

That receivership is closed. It is said these men, mentioning Mr. Rankin and Mr. Richardson alone, went around to foment litigation and start a champertous suit. I think I am as familiar as any of us with the meaning of "champerty." It means a case in which a stranger, with no interest, combines with the plaintiff and defendant in an agreement that he will maintain litigation financially for a share of the profits which come out of the case, whether in land or property or money.

After the receivership was practically closed, there was nothing to do but to submit the report. Mr. Moore went to Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeny and tried to break them apart, but their friendship and personal relations were such that it could not be done.

Those friendly relations lasted until the death of Mr. Bemis. Mr. Moore wanted to sell out that property under the third mortgage and get title to it. There stood the $300,000 profits in the property in that year. He wanted to get title to it and have the money divided among themselves. Sweeny refused and Mr. Bemis refused. Do not depend upon my statement of the evidence. Mr. Sweeny has been subpensed as a witness by the other side and no doubt will be placed on the witness stand. Two letters have been taken from their correspondence and will be read to you. They were taken out of a correspondence numbering perhaps a hundred letters and, standing alone, look as though there was something champertous involved. As a matter of fact, these men were still the owners of half of the property through the corporation known as the Whitehall Building & Operating Co.

They had assisted in selling these bonds all over the country, and they had two objects, and you will find it all through these letters. One was to retain the property that was theirs. When the hard times came, and they were pressed, the evidence will show that Martin Sweeny put up $100,000 of his own money, and so did Mr. Bemis, and lost it all.

At this point Mr. Bemis began, as he had a right to do, to look around for some persons with bonds who would join in a suit for the purpose of protecting the first-mortgage bond-holders and that $2,500,000 worth of bonds. All of these letters will be brought in. They show one continuous purpose all the way through—the letters of Bemis to Richardson, the letters of Sweeny to Bemis, and the replies from Bemis. When that evidence is produced it will dispose of the first part of this charge with reference to the Whitehall Hotel.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the honorable counsel suffer an interruption at this point?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the honorable counsel if it would interrupt the stream of his statement if the Senate, sitting as a Court, were now to take a recess for luncheon?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Not at all. I myself shall be grateful for it.

RECESS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, take a recess until 2 o'clock this day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m., at which time it reassembled.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Counsel for the respondent will proceed with his statement to the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF OPENING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May it please the Court, I ought to say at this point that the evidence will show that Judge Ritter had absolutely no knowledge of anything about the Whitehall case until it came before him regularly in court. I believe that there will be no dispute about that.

At this point I ought also to reply to the insinuation that was made here about the trip to New York. The judge was holding court in Brooklyn. There was a case of a drainage district in Florida in which he had participated and in which an order was necessary to compromise the suit. Mr. Sydnor Tucker, a reputable attorney down there, and Mr. Rankin were counsel in the case. They stipulated that the order should be signed outside of the district because no other judge than Judge Ritter was familiar with the facts in this case. So they went to Brooklyn and saw Judge Ritter. We will introduce here, may it please the Court, the order that was brought to him to sign, with his signature and the date, so that under the evidence there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. Richardson never saw Judge Ritter when he came to New York at that time; Mr. Rankin never saw Mr. Sweeny when he came on that occasion. So, we think all of the testimony will leave that absolutely clear.

In addition to the interests which Mr. Sweeny had in Florida, he became the president and general manager, and is today, of four hotels in New York. The most prominent one is the Chatham, also the Berkshire and the Lenoir, and as a president of the Wilson Catering Co., Sherry's Park Avenue Hotel.

[We find the situation in March of 1929 to be that the suit was coming to an issue on the receivership, the receivership in which Mr. Richardson was receiver.]

On October 11, 1929, the unsecured creditors' trusteeship was at an end. There was nothing more to be done. Here were the three mortgages. The suit had been brought to foreclose the $60,000 mortgage, brought by the holder of the bonds, a man named Kenneth Moore. Kenneth Moore was another son of W. J. Moore, of the American Bond & Mortgage Co. He brought the suit in foreclosure, and Mr. Richardson naturally thought he was doing it to protect the first-mortgage bondholders. They were coming along through the year to the open season before the fall and winter when the Whitehall was finally opened.

The proceeding went along. The evidence will be that Moore tried to get Mr. Bemis or Mr. Sweeny, or both of them to agree to that sort of proceeding. Richardson believed he was acting in the interest of the first bondholders and wrote to him asking him not to sell the property under the $60,000 mortgage. He refused or at least did not give his assent to withdrawing the matter, and as it came close to the time, with the money in the hands of the company which was operating the hotel, Mr. Richardson took $60,000 plus the interest, in gold coin of the United States of standard weight and fineness as called for in the provisions of the bond, and went to Moore and said he would pay it and stop the sale. Moore refused to accept it.

Then the approach was made to Mr. Sweeny and Mr. Bemis that they should take Moore in and that the three should lease the hotel and operate it. Mr. Sweeny refused and Mr. Bemis refused on the sole ground of their own interest and because of their belief that the ones to be considered were the first mortgage bondholders.

The matter ran on until the day of the sale came. Kenneth Moore, the son of W. J. Moore, bought in the property and secured title to it for $2,600, leaving a deficiency judgment between $2,600 and the amount specified in the bonds plus the interest, their purpose being, as will be clearly shown, to take over the hotel and operate it, with the record behind it of having earned $316,000 profit during the preceding season.

Mr. Sweeney and Mr. Bemis both got busy. In March, Bert Holland had written to Mr. Richardson. He did not know Mr. Richardson. He just wrote to the receiver of the hotel and asked him about the payments that were provided for in the bonds. That is where he came into the picture in the first place. Mr. Richardson finally wrote and gave him the information that the sale was proceeding. He notified Mr. Sweeney that here was a man who had $50,000 of the bonds. Mr. Holland wrote the receiver another letter and told him he could not attend to any matter because he had not yet been discharged as trustee for the creditors in the first foreclosure suit.

Correspondence took place and he afterward wrote that if they wanted to know anything about it he would refer them to the firm of Metcalf & Hyatt. That was the first time any lawyer came into the case.

When the sale was made under the $60,000 deed of trust, Mr. Bemis went to Mr. Metcalf and got an opinion on the right of foreclosure of the first mortgage. The memorandum of law written by Mr. Metcalf will be produced here in evidence. Mr. Metcalf advised him that under one provision of the trust deed, to start a foreclosure proceeding a person would have to have $50,000 in bonds. If a man did not have $50,000 in bonds and the trustee did not proceed, the question was open as to whether or not anybody that had any of the bonds could come in and do it. That was an open question.

Mr. Metcalf advised that in case there was fraud in the management of the property, or in the case of an unfaithful trustee, any person who had a bond of $500 as a minimum, or more, had a right to bring a proceeding and had a right to have the foreclosure; or, if there was antagonism between the trust as represented by the trustee under the first mortgage and the interests of the second or third mortgages, again they would have a right to foreclose without getting the $50,000 of bonds.

I shall skip the intermediate steps because it is conceded that these men were finally employed. Here is how Mr. Rankin came to be employed. He had done some other business for Mr. Bemis. Mr. Bemis, by the way, was the operator of a very large hotel in Palm Beach. He knew Mr. Rankin and asked that Mr. Rankin be taken into the case. Mr. Rankin went over the memorandum of law written by Mr. Metcalf and advised the parties that he concurred, that if there was fraud anybody could foreclose.

We come now to the time of the first appearance in court. The uncontradicted evidence will show that Judge Ritter had not heard of this proceeding and knew nothing about it. Mr. Sweeney was the one who met Mr. Holland. He came to New York for that purpose and saw him at the Berkshire Hotel and explained the whole situation. He had nothing in mind except to save his own interests and to save the interests of the first-mortgage bondholders. He got clear authority from Mr. Holland to bring a proceeding.

While this negotiation was going on, Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeney were attempting to form a bondholders' committee. They had submitted the names of the highest-standing men, morally and financially, that there were in the State of Florida. The matter came to be a contest between those in Florida and those in Chicago.

Moore never came near the hotel. He did nothing and he could have done nothing in the management of the hotel. It was not to the advantage of the hotel, or so Mr. Sweeney and Mr. Bemis believed, for them to let the hotel get into the hands of these other people. They themselves had had the experience with the building and everything else in connection with the property.

At that point the suit was brought. On the one side were the American Bond & Mortgage Co., doing everything they could to control the hotel. On the other side were the two owners, doing everything they could to hold it and to protect the bondholders. The evidence in the case, all the correspondence, and other documentary evidence will show that beyond any possibility of doubt.

Mr. Rankin went ahead and filed the suit and alleged fraud and the antagonism of interest between the first mortgage-bondholders or trustee and the third mortgage, so far as the bondholders were concerned. He sent the suit to be filed on the 10th day of October; and with this fight going on, the judge being away, he wrote to the clerk and asked him to lock up the bill and not let anybody know about it until the judge arrived there. They knew that efforts were being made to get up another bondholders' committee; and, although it was a secret at that time, the fact afterward came out that while this was going on the American Bond & Mortgage Co. surrendered their assets to another company, a subsidiary of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., and from that to another company in Chicago, so that the American Bond & Mortgage Co. were insolvent at that time, although it was not generally known. So the effort was being made by the Moore interests in Chicago to get a bondholders' committee and bring suit, and the effort was being made by the Floridians to save the property.

At that point, on the 11th of October, the suit was filed and that letter of instructions given.

On the 10th Mr. Rankin received a telegram from Mr. Holland telling him not to file the suit. Mr. Rankin sent Mr. Holland in reply a telegram which will be introduced in evidence here. Rankin thought, of course, he was working for Holland at that time, and he sent Holland a telegram in reply setting out the facts, telling him what they were, and how highly necessary he believed it was to file the bill.

Rankin got a telegram from Holland saying, in view of the circumstances, not to do anything further in the case; to allow it to remain just as it was, in statuo quo. Now, here is what was going on:

Efforts were being made to get up a bondholders' committee in Chicago. Mr. Shutts' firm—and there is not a finer firm in the State of Florida—had gone into the case, representing the trustee, who they had every right to believe was faithful. They had gone in and asked that a receiver be not appointed, or that the appointment be deferred, and it was deferred at their request for a few days.

On the 24th day of September this matter finally came up. On the 28th they had induced Mr. Sugden, who was represented by Mr. Holland, a Boston lawyer, to go in with the other set of bondholders in Chicago; but when they came down there on the day this case was set, on the 28th, every person who had any interest in the litigation was present—Mr. Rankin and Mr. Metcalf, representing the plaintiffs; Shutts & Bowen, representing the trustee of the bondholders; Mr. John P. Stokes, representing the interests of Messrs. Bemis and Sweeney; and Mr. Lautmann, of Chicago, representing the bondholders' committee that had been formed only a few days before.

When this $50,000 in bonds came in, it was the effort of all of them—and it was known to Mr. Holland—to get all the interveners they could, and they had gotten bondholders who became interveners whose holdings I think amounted to about $7,500. They had the right to proceed under that if fraud and antagonism existed. So, when the parties came down there, that was the situation.

My friend is in error when he asserts that Mr. Holland came in and asked that the suit be dismissed. Mr. Holland did not ask that the suit be dismissed. He asked that the suit remain in status quo. He said he did not want it dismissed, but he did not want a receiver appointed. The evidence will show that they wanted their own receiver appointed. The court overruled the request; and I need not stop here to explain that the court's judicial action honestly taken, and an opinion honestly given, is not subject to condemnation by any court in the world.

Judge Ritter refused to do what was asked. He announced that he was going to appoint Mr. Richardson. Mr. Richardson had made the largest return that was ever made on that property in its whole existence. Judge Ritter knew also that there were two men there to manage that property, and only two, the men who originated it, the men who owned it; and in order to be perfectly fair about it and sure that the matter would be handled in the interest of the bondholders, Judge Ritter provided in his order that the property should be managed by H. E. Bemis and Martin Sweeney.

At that point, this objection having been made, I think Mr. McPherson was given some time, and came in the afternoon with two letters taken out of all the correspondence—two letters which the other side say will be introduced in evidence here, without the others, of course—showing what the fight actually was, and what was going on. Judge Ritter said that that was not sufficient to disqualify this man who had conducted this hotel successfully; and, therefore, that he was going to appoint him; and he did appoint him.

Every known interest was represented there—Mr. Lautmann, the bondholders, and the others, as I have suggested. No exceptions were taken to anything that was done there that day. No appeal was taken from it; so that the matter, so far as Judge Ritter was concerned, was settled upon its face.

I may shorten this statement by relating what became of the charges of fraud that Mr. Rankin is criticized for having made, and then not attempting to take any depositions in regard to them.

Before that time came, the American Bond & Mortgage Co.—and I take it probably every Member of this high Court now knows all about that—crashed, and the news was on the front pages of every newspaper. They were bankrupt. To have pursued them in the taking of depositions for the accounting and the damages that might have been obtained because of their fraud would have been a pure waste of money; and I may say here that within a year all of those men were in jail or under indictment in various parts of the country.

The time was coming then for another season's operation of the property. The receiver was reappointed and in the next year he again made a profit which justified the action which had been taken.

I wish to speak about the first fee paid to Mr. Rankin. If I do not touch adequately upon the subject, call my attention to it, because I desire to have the Court understand every item of this case.

First was a fee upon which an advance of $2,500 was made. The gentlemen on the other side say it is going to be claimed here—it is not claimed; it is the law; the law of that jurisdiction—that the attorney for the moving party in a case of this kind is entitled to a fee for bringing the assets into the estate; for conserving the assets and making them the subject of the litigation. Among other things, besides this beautiful building and the works of art in it, there was over $200,000 in cash brought in to be conserved; so Mr. Rankin applied for $15,000 as a fee. There was some objection to it. The judge allowed him an advance of $2,500, and referred the whole matter to Judge Akerman, on account of the fact that Mr. Rankin was the judge's former partner, and there was objection by the other side to the amount of the fee Mr. Rankin was claiming. There can be no question, under the evidence here, that that was only a conservation fee, because the application for it set that forth specifically, and the order signed by Judge Akerman also set it forth; that is, that it was for conservation

As the matter proceeded Mr. Rankin was approached by the attorneys on the other side—this whole scandal of the Moore case and the American Bond & Mortgage Co. having broke—to get together and compromise the case. They did get together. The evidence will show that what Mr. Rankin did for his clients cannot be minimized.

It is claimed here that nothing was done in that case. We simply say that we will bring here a trunkful of motions and various papers that were filed in that case, and I shall be very glad to give the gentlemen on the other side an index to it, so that it will not encumber the record of the Court, and so that anything any Member of the Court wishes or the other side wishes may be handed to them from the record itself.

The next thing Judge Ritter heard of this case, they told him there was going to be an order of foreclosure that had been agreed upon among all of the parties. So that order was afterward brought in. Judge Ritter heard nothing of that order until it was actually presented to him. The lawyers had gone to one side and agreed upon the whole matter. Mr. McPherson, one of the leading members of the firm of Shutts & Bowen, took up the matter with the bondholders' representatives in Chicago. The question of fees arose, and the evidence will be that Mr. McPherson urged that the fee of their firm alone in this case should be between $50,000 and $60,000. He sent back a telegram to his office to get further information about it and received in return a telegram, which will be introduced here, giving the amounts of fees and the cases in which they had been paid in Florida for them to justify the fee which they demanded of between fifty and sixty thousand dollars.

When the matter came before the court the question of fees arose, and the court was told that there was an agreement on the fee. The question was as to whom the fee should be ordered, and the court naturally said it should be ordered to the moving party who brought the suit and induced the foreclosure; and it was so done.

Of course, Rankin did not get the $75,000. As explained here, he paid $25,000 to Shutts & Bowen, $10,000 to Mr. Metcalf, and $4,500 or $5,000 to Mr. Richardson for the work he did. Mr. Richardson had gathered together evidence of fraud, everything that had been done, and he give them the information which probably no one else could have given them at that time.

The first payment upon the total fee of $75,000, as I understand the testimony, was $30,000.

I am not going to say to this Court that there were not circumstances about this matter which made it look suspicious, but I am going to say that there is nothing in the case except suspicion, and conjecture, and the acting upon what we might say were half-known facts, the fact that he did get some money, that they did not know he had an agreement, the fact that the man had been his partner, and the fact that he paid him in cash. There were reasons for everything that was done, I honestly believe the evidence will show.

In the first place, as I have said, this man, Mr. Rankin, had been unsuccessful, owed a great deal of money, was trying to get it, had all that business on his hands, and included in the convincing evidence we propose to present to show that this was not clandestine will be evidence as to the knowledge of the young man in the office, Mr. Salisbury.

Mr. Rankin did not pay the young man his 15 percent promptly, and Mr. Salisbury went to his friend, Judge Ritter, to complain about it. Judge Ritter said that Mr. Rankin was honest, that he was very slow, that he knew he was in financial difficulties, and he had not paid him anything on the obligation which he made when he sold out his business to him. In other words, Judge Ritter did not press that, and it seems to have occasioned great suspicion in the minds of those who afterward came to push the proceedings in the House.

However, when Mr. Rankin came in that evening, he brought the judge $2,500 in currency. I believe he tried to testify honestly, and according to that testimony there were two things operating on his mind. The City National Bank had failed the day before, and there was a run on the bank. He was really anxious to get the money out, he says, not to be carrying a large balance. He paid $12,500 of that money immediately, gave a check for it, to Shutts & Bowen, so that he would not have the responsibility of holding that check. He gave them more than their one-third share at that time. He drew this check himself.

It was Christmas time. He says he took $500 to go back to Alabama. Mr. Rankin paid off life-insurance, mortgages, and for automobiles, and other things. If it is necessary, we will put evidence of all that in and let you see everything he did with the money. Rankin took $2,500 and gave it to Judge Ritter. The judge asked him, "Why did you give it to me in currency; why did you give it to me in cash?" He said, "On account of the fact that we were formerly partners, I thought it might cause gossip or question as to why I was paying you that money." That is the reason he had in his mind, according to his testimony.

The judge took that money and put it in a small deposit box in a steel, locked cabinet in his own office. He put only $2,000 of it in the bank, because, as I will explain to you, everyone there was retaining a certain amount of cash, and he put it in with the amount which his wife kept, fearing that the bank situation might grow worse as they went along.

Going back just a little, I ought to say that when the fee came to be fixed in the Whitehall case it was called to the attention of the judge. The judge asked whether or not the bondholders had participated in the settlement and the agreement for the fee. Mr. Bowen said that that was a fact, but that in order to make very sure about it for the judge, he would go and call them up. He called up the attorneys for the bondholders in Chicago, and they came back, O. K.'d it, and therefore it was paid. That payment of $2,500 still left a balance of $2,500. When this man got the other payment he paid $2,000, which left $500. Again, while the judge was away one time he sent him $200, and later on he sent him $300. When he sent him the $300 the judge gave him a receipt in full for the balance due on the sale of the business. That is the story of that entire transaction, and I think it will not be departed from any in the evidence in this case.

In addition to that, in order to show that there was nothing clandestine about this, the others who knew about this contract by conversing with either one of these gentlemen will be brought before this Honorable Court to tell their own stories.

As I have said, I think this case has no parallel in impeachment proceedings. It dates back all the way to 1929. It is difficult in human memory to go that far and be accurate, but I believe we will have enough documentary evidence of an uncontradictable character to point the way to the truth in the case. So much for that,

Now, a word about the Mulford case, which arose just as Judge Ritter was going on the bench. Mr. Mulford was a New York gentleman who had an interest down in Florida in what was called the Brazilian Court Hotel. He had an indebtedness against it secured by a mortgage of $150,000. Earlier in time, perhaps about the end of the first year after the partnership was formed, Mr. Mulford brought that mortgage into the office for foreclosure. The case was attended to from beginning to end by Judge Ritter. There was an agreed fee in the case of $4,000. However, after the case started a cross bill was filed by a man named d'Esterre, in which he set up a claim to the ownership of a first mortgage for $70,000, which was held in escrow, and which predated the agreement of Mr. Mulford.

Instead of this being a plain foreclosure, it turned into a battle for the ownership of that property through the mortgage, and had it not been that they were successful in interposing evidence showing an estoppel, d'Esterre would have gotten the property and Mulford would have lost.

When Judge Ritter went on the bench there was money owing to the firm in that case. Mulford had paid $3,500 of the $4,000 fee. There was quite a number of items, and as those came in if there was anything to be paid out the firm paid it out. Inasmuch as the judge had handled that matter during the entire time it was in the office, and Mr. Rankin knew nothing about it, the judge suggested to him as a part of this contract that this was one of the cases in which he reserved a fee, one of the few cases in which he could take the balance that was due by Mr. Mulford, which was $500 on the fee and $1,400 in expenses, paid out as his own. Accordingly, that was done.

Judge Ritter wrote the letter to Mr. Mulford which has been referred to, telling about this circumstance, stating that it had turned into a different sort of a suit—although they knew that anyway—saying that he thought it was no more than fair that he should get another fee of $2,000. That was referred to Mr. Brodek, the lawyer in New York, who will be here to tell of that circumstance.

Following that Judge Ritter never went into court in that case; he never took any action of any kind, with the exception, perhaps, of having a meeting or an interview a time or two with Mr. Mulford's representatives or Mr. Rankin.

It would take a very grave stretch of the imagination, if not of the conscience, to say that he was practicing law when he did what I have narrated.

Next we have the Francis matter in these charges. Mr. Francis was a friend of Judge Ritter. They were as close as two men could be outside of a family. The wife of Mr. Francis had been Judge Ritter's schoolmate in the grade school in Indianapolis. The wives were very, very close friends.

Mr. Francis for a long time had been insisting on Mr. Ritter getting a lot which was close by Miami on an island there, Reovo Alto. This was after he went upon the bench. Prior to that time he had never rendered a bill to Mr. Francis for anything he did for him, for the advice he gave him in the office, the street, or at home, or any place where the advice might have been given. He never collected a fee from Mr. Francis for that.

After Judge Ritter was elevated to the bench there was a lot which they viewed on this island close to Mr. Francis' place, where he desired to go and live, and he gave Judge Ritter a check for $7,500 and told him to go and buy that lot. Judge Ritter took the money for that express purpose and purchased the lot. The deed will be here, or proof of it.

Mr. Francis lived in Flint, Mich., had a home down in Florida, but was very seldom there until shortly before his death. Judge Ritter concluded not to build on the property, not to take the property for that purpose, and therefore he did nothing further. In 1931 Mr. Francis died. After his death Mr. Ritter talked to Mrs. Francis about this circumstance and told her the facts about it, and she agreed with him and insisted upon it, that it was a gift from her husband. She was perfectly willing to have Judge Ritter keep the lot, and he could, if he wished, call it square for everything that he ever did for Mr. Francis.

Judge Ritter had never sent Mr. Francis a bill in his life. He thought it was all right not to do so, as Mr. Francis kept going down there. In 1933 the present proceeding started. Judge Ritter may have made a mistake in the case I have just discussed, because, of course, he had no reason to report that. It was a gift undoubtedly, and at that time the law was that gifts were not taxable.

I give you the date in connection with it, because I do not want to go into details about it. When this investigation started in 1933 a Government official came down and inquired about this matter. Judge Ritter had deposited the $7,500, so that the whole transaction was apparent there on its face. He had bought the property, and out of an abundance of caution, due to the interview he had had with Mrs. Francis, he had the lot appraised. That was what he would have to pay income tax upon as of the time he got it. The lot appraised $4,000, and he filed an amended report and sent it in. If that was a mistake on his part, he did it. And certainly I do not think it should rise to the importance of blasting his whole life.

These last two charges have been made in the presence of the Court, and I am not going into them except to say this: No matter what mistakes were made about those income taxes, I think the proof will be uncontradicted and incontestable that he paid the Government tax on every dollar of taxable income he had. I do not know whether this incometax case is to be tried in the highest court known to our Constitution and laws or not. I think we could have made a motion against that, but we did not care to do so. We want you gentlemen to hear it, and if we have to try it as we do an income-tax case I think we will be able to show you that there is no court in the United States which would convict Judge Ritter of attempting to evade the taxes on the evidence which will appear before you.

There is one other thing I wish to mention. It is said that Judge Ritter went to the hotel and lived there without paying anything to the hotel, and that it was a waste of the assets of the hotel. During the 2 years or more that that case was in his court under a receivership he went into that hotel twice: once on Washington's Birthday and once on another occasion. The total assets which were wasted, which is the assertion made here, amounts to $44 and some cents.

The evidence in this case will be both by Mr. Sweeny and by the gentleman who invited him, Mr. Richardson, that it was the common practice and the rule in all these first-class hotels to allow the manager to have a complimentary list. The people whose names were on the list could be invited by the manager. It will be shown that such action does not result in a loss, as will be established by the evidence of the hotel men.

Judge Ritter knew nothing about any of his relatives going there. It was never called to his attention if they did go. The case of the secretary stands alone. It is a small matter, but the judge naturally feared, and I did, that it would be looked upon as a petty, mean sort of a thing, so we are going to the trouble to give you the proof. The judge did not know that the lady in question and her husband went into the hotel at all, but I am informed-I have not seen them-that when they come here they will bring with them their letter of invitation.

Gentlemen of the Court, I have taken up more time than I intended to take. I say to you candidly and sincerely from the bottom of my heart that if this man is a dishonest man, he ought not to hold the office he now holds. If he is the honest man we think he is, if the evidence comes in as I shall try with the strength that God has given me to produce it here, then I say a verdict of guilty is by comparison worse than death. I ask the earnest consideration of this Court, and I feel it is going to be given in listening to the evidence. I feel that every word of this evidence which comes in here will be heard by the members of this Court as far as it is possible for them to be present; and if they do not hear it all, they will read the record.

LIST OF WITNESSES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Sergeant at Arms with reference to the witnesses, which will be printed in the RECORD.

The communication from the Sergeant at Arms and the list of witnesses are as follows:

> SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES. OFFICE OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS, Washington, D. C., April 6, 1936.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: There are attached hereto a list of witnesses for the Government submitted to me by the managers on the part of the House of Representatives and a list of witnesses for the respondent submitted to me by his counsel, all of said witnesses to be subpensed for the trial of Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

There are also attached hereto original subpenas served on the witnesses desired by both parties, said subpenas being duly served as shown by my report on the back thereof, and return made according to law.

Respectfully,

CHESLEY W. JURNEY, Sergeant at Arms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the managers on the part of the House ready to present their evidence?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes; if the President please. May we have a couple of minutes of opportunity to talk to our witnesses?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How long do the managers

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I think we might proceed to call the witnesses and swear them. The Sergeant at Arms has the list of the witnesses. We will ask him to call Mr. A. L. Rankin.

(Mr. A. L. Rankin entered the Chamber.)

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, Mr. Manager Hobbs will examine the witness.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF A. L. RANKIN

A. L. Rankin, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified, as follows:

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Your name, please, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness states that he is a little hard of hearing, and the manager on the part of the House conducting the examination will please accommodate himself to that condition as much as possible.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. What is your name, please?-A. A. L. Rankin.

Q. Mr. Rankin, were you ever judge of any circuit court in the State of Alabama or elsewhere?—A. No; I was never judge of any circuit court. I was judge of the city court of Andalusia, Ala., which had circuit court jurisdiction in civil matters up to $5,000, as I recall, and jurisdiction of all misdemeanors.

Q. It was called, in the act creating it, an inferior court, was it not?—A. Well, I believe it was.

Q. That is the only court that you have ever been judge of in the State of Alabama or elsewhere?—A. Yes.

Q. You have never been judge of any circuit court anywhere?—A. No. sir.

Q. What was the first approach that you made or that was made to you with regard to the Whitehall case?—A. The first approach that I recall was by Walter S. Richardson, who had been trustee in bankruptcy of that property.

Q. When and where?—A. It was in West Palm Beach, Fla., in my office, to the best of my recollection, some time about the 1st of September 1929.

Q. At that time Judge Ritter, who had formerly been your law partner, had ascended the bench of the Federal court, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, had he not?—A. He had.

Q. And you were practicing with a then partner who had been suggested to you by Judge Ritter? Is that true?—A. That is correct,

Q. And to your office one day in the fall of 1929 came Walter S. Richardson?—A. That is correct.

Q. Judge, was he or was he not a lawyer?—A. Yes; he was a lawyer.

Q. What was the conversation that he had with you with respect to employing you to bring the foreclosure suit in the Whitehall case?—A. Well, as I recall, Mr. Richardson came into my office and stated to me that he and Mr. Ernest Metcalf had been looking up the law with reference to the respective rights of first-mortgage bondholders of the Whitehall Hotel. I believe the name of the corporation at that time was the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. That is my recollection. He stated to me that Mr. H. E. Bemis would like to have my opinion with reference to the right of the bondholders to foreclose the trust deed or mortgage. He stated at the time that Mr. Bemis was very much worried with reference to the status of that property. He stated that Mr. Bemis had been a large stockholder, or was a large stockholder, in the Whitehall Building & Operating Co.; he had been the executive head or manager, and by reason of that fact when the Whitehall bonds were issued a great many of Mr. Bemis' friends invested in those bonds, and that it looked like unless someone would take active action, or quick action, in order to protect the first-mortgage bondholders, that the property would be dissipated; and that Mr. Bemis' chief aim was to subject this property to payment of the first-mortgage bonds. He asked me to give him an opinion with reference to the respective rights of the bondholders; and my recollection is that he left with me a copy of the trust deed at the time.

Q. So his solicitude was entirely for the protection of the first-mortgage bondholders?—A. That is what he said.

Q. At that time he was trustee in bankruptcy, was he not, in that hotel case?—A. Well, he had been. The best of my recollection is that he stated to me that he had wound up all of his labors as trustee in bankruptcy and made a final settlement, but there was one or two contested claims that would have to be settled; and enough money had been set aside when he made his final settlement to take care of that.

Q. He was still acting as trustee in that sense to that limited degree, was he not? Did he not tell that to you?—

A. I cannot answer that.

Q. You do not know when his trusteeship terminated officially?—A. I do not.

Q. Judge, I will ask you if under the provisions of the deed of trust or mortgage securing the issue of first-mortgage bonds on the Whitehall Hotel property—and when we refer to the Whitehall property or the Whitehall Hotel property we are meaning the property which was then owned by the Whitehall Building & Operating Co., or whatever its name was—the deed of trust or mortgage securing the first-mortgage bonds on that property contained a provision limiting the right of the bondholders to foreclose with respect to the amount in ownership of the bondholders, did it not?—A. Yes; the trust deed did have a limitation.

Q. What was that limitation?—A. Well, as I recall, it provided that the holders of $50,000 worth of bonds could bring a foreclosure.

Q. In other words, Judge, the trustee of that bond issue could foreclose at any time that a default was made—is that true?—but that if the bondholders cared to foreclose there must be at least $50,000 worth of first-mortgage bonds represented in the petition. Was that your understanding of the purport of that deed of trust?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I think that— The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the manager on the part of the House yield to counsel for the respondent for an interruption?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt; I wish to interpose an objection. I think that the mortgage itself on that point would be the best evidence. It is rather an involved matter, but the statement with respect to the particular matter is not so very long, and then the manager could examine from that, if I may make that suggestion.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I appreciate the suggestion and will take the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is overruled.

The WITNESS. Will you please repeat the question? By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. I was simply asking you for your understanding of the provisions of this deed of trust or mortgage securing the issue of first-mortgage bonds. What was your understanding of the provisions with relation to the opinion that was called for by Mr. Richardson from you?—A. My understanding and the way I construed the trust deed was that, in the event there was a default in the payment of the bonds, and the trustee failed or refused to bring foreclosure proceedings, then a bondholder or bondholders holding $50,000 or more of first-mortgage bonds or bonds under the trust deed could foreclose.

Q. And that that was the minimum limit?—A. That was the minimum limit, as the trust deed provided.

Q. In other words, as you understood and advised your then client, fewer bonds in amount than $50,000 could not so act.—A. No; I did not advise him that.

Q. That is a fact, is it not?—A. No.

Q. It is not a fact?—A. No; it is not.

Q. In the absence of fraud, is not that a fact?—A. In the absence of fraud or collusion it might be.

Q. Yes. But, in the absence of fraud or collusion, it does require a minimum of $50,000, does it not?—A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, you said that you did not know whether Walter Richardson was then trustee in bankruptcy even when you filed the bill. You joined him as party respondent, as trustee, did you not?—A. I do not recall that.

Q. You do not recall that?-A. No, sir.

Q. Judge Rankin, you went to New York a short while after Walter Richardson approached you, did you not?—A. I did.

Q. You went in the company of Mr. S. J. Tucker?—A. I did.

Q. Mr. S. J. Tucker was receiver, or trustee, in bankruptcy of the Highland Glades drainage district?—A. He was the receiver—equity receiver—of the Highland Glades drainage district.

Q. He was receiver in equity of an estate being administered before the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida, pending in the Miami division?—A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Rankin, who else accompanied you to New York upon that trip?—A. Mr. Tucker and Mr. Walter Richardson.

Q. Judge Ritter was holding court in Brooklyn at that time, was he not?—A. He was.

Q. The purpose of the trip that took you from West Palm Beach to New York was to see Judge Ritter, was it not?—A. It was to present a petition to Judge Ritter in the Highland Glades drainage district matter with reference to the settlement of State and county taxes.

Q. Was that all?—A. That was all, as I recall, that was provided for in the petition, that is, as we were applying for it.

Q. That so-called tax settlement that you say you went there to talk to him about, the petition, related to giving away $11,000, approximately, of taxes lawfully levied against over 12,000 acres of land belonging to four individual owners, did it not?—A. No; it did not.

Q. What did it refer to?—A. Well, I would have to go into the history of the Highland Glades drainage district litigation, and I would have to think some about it.

Q. I wish you would think and tell us.—A. To the best of my recollection, there was a deal on for the Southern Sugar Co. to purchase a tract of land of the Highland Glades drainage district. They had made to the receiver—they had made to the owner of the land some kind of a proposition of purchase. The owner of the land in turn came to Mr. Tucker for some kind of an adjustment, to see if he could get some kind of an adjustment of the taxes. There were some $75,000 or $100,000, to the best of my recollection, of back taxes, State and county taxes, due on the lands that were embraced in the High Glades drainage district. Those taxes were still due. Just what the proposition was that they were making I do not recall. That was in 1929. I would have to go over that record in order to refresh my memory.

Q. For the purpose of refreshing your recollection, I will ask you whether or not there were four individual owners of land, aggregating over 12,000 acres, against which accrued taxes of $27,812.14 had been levied for the years 1922, 1923, 1925, 1926, 1927, and 1928, and if you did not petition, in behalf of the receiver, that those taxes be reduced to and settled for $16,000?-A. I do not recall that.

Q. Judge Rankin, you say you made that trip up there to get that order signed. At the time you went there were two other district judges for the southern district of Florida in the southern district of Florida. Is not that the fact?—A. That I do not know.

Q. You do not know whether Judge Lake Jones was in Jacksonville when you passed through?—A. No; I do not.

Q. You do not know that Judge Alexander Akerman was in Tampa at the time you left?—A. No; I do not.

Q. But they are or were at that time district judges of the United States for the southern district of Florida with concurrent jurisdiction, excepting for divisional limitation, with Judge Ritter, were they not?—A. Yes. They were two judges sitting, but whether they were there or not I did not attempt to find out.

Q. Did you seek to present this application or this petition for settlement of these taxes to either one of the two judges of concurrent jurisdiction?—A. No; I did not.

Q. You went to New York?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also had another matter in mind to discuss with Judge Ritter, had you not?—A. No; I had no other matter in mind

Q. You discussed no other matter with him?—A. No other matter with him? Oh, I probably did discuss other matters with him, but my trip there was principally for the Highland Glades drainage district matter.

Q. What was the nonprincipal purpose?—A. That was the principal purpose, and the nonprincipal purpose? I had no other purpose in going to New York.

Q. Did you or did you not have a subsidiary purpose?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you have any more important purpose?—A. I did not.

Q. Then your statement under oath at this time is that you had no other purpose whatsoever on your trip to New York except the granting of this ex-parte petition?—A. That is true.

Q. Judge Rankin, when you came back home a firm of lawyers representing some of the interested parties in the Highland Glades drainage district case filed a motion before Judge Ritter to vacate his order granting that petition, did they not?—A. That is true.

Q. And Judge Ritter wrote two decrees on two different days denying that petition to vacate, did he not?—A. I do not recall.

Q. But you do recall that he did deny it?—A. I think that is true.

Q. A short while thereafter he granted an order permitting the movants, who had sought to vacate the order he had signed in Brooklyn, to appeal from that decision, did you not?—A. Will you repeat the question?

Q. Judge Ritter shortly thereafter made an order permitting those movants to appeal, did he not?—A. To the best of my recollection, he did.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I think I ought to object to that question. There is no charge that Judge Ritter did anything that was improper there or entered any judgment that was not proper. The only question on this issue is whether they were there or not. If we go into every one of these things I imagine we will consume a great deal of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will counsel repeat the question?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I asked the witness if it were not a fact that Judge Ritter granted an order permitting the aggrieved movants to appeal from his decision denying their motion to vacate the order made in New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer thinks the facts are material. The objection is overruled.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Is that a fact?—A. I have already answered.

Q. Shortly after the assignments of error were filed and this permission had been granted by Judge Ritter to appeal was granted, within, say, a month or 6 weeks, Judge Ritter then wrote an order vacating the New York order made in the Highland Glades case, did he not?—A. I do not recall.

Q. You do not know whether or not he did?—A. No; I do not.

Q. You were attorney, by appointment of Judge Ritter, for Mr. Tucker, the receiver, were you not?—A. I was the attorney for Mr. Tucker.

Q. And you knew nothing of Judge Ritter's order vacating the order he signed for you in New York?—A. Certainly I must have. I did know it.

Q. But you do not now recall it?—A. I do not now recall it.

Q. Mr. Rankin, did you see Judge Ritter when you were in New York?—A. Yes; I saw him.

Q. How often?-A. I saw him on two occasions.

Q. What two occasions and where?—A. I saw him when Mr. Tucker and I presented the petition to him. I saw him over in Brooklyn.

Q. Where else did you see him?—A. Then in the evening Mr. Tucker and I and the judge and Mrs. Ritter had dinner together.

Q. Those were the only two times you saw the Judge?—A. The only two times I saw him.

Q. So you got that order signed within a few minutes the first morning you were there in chambers in the court room—that is, in connection with the court room in Brooklyn where he was then presiding? Is that right?—A. That is correct.

Q. The only other time you saw him was that night in a social way when you took dinner with him and the others?—A. That is the only other time I saw him.

Q. You did not discuss with him, I believe you stated, anything in relation to the Whitehall case?—A. None whatsoever, because I had not been employed in it.

Q. Did you discuss with Mr. Walter S. Richardson, the man who had employed you and went with you to New York? Did you discuss it on the way to New York?—A. No doubt we did. The best of my recollection is we did discuss it.

- Q. He discussed it with you all the way up there?—A. And I discussed it with him some after we arrived in New York.
- Q. And then on the way back?—A. Well, I do not recall whether Richardson came back with me or not.
- Q. Did you tell him the purpose of your trip to New York?-A. Tell whom?
- Q. Mr. Walter S. Richardson, your client, the man who had hired you .- A. Well, I had not been hired.
 - Q. You had not?-A. No.
- Q. Oh, I see. You had just been employed to render an opinion. You had not then been employed in the Whitehall foreclosure case?—A. I had not been employed.
- Q. I see; but you did discuss with Mr. Walter S. Richardson on the way up there and after you got to New York the Whitehall case?-A. Yes; I did.
- Q. What was Mr. Walter Richardson's business, if he told you, in New York at that time?-A. Well, the best of my recollection is that he told me that he was going to New York for the purpose of seeing Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeny with reference to a foreclosure proceeding on Whitehall.
- Q. Judge, under the Florida practice, the only way in which mortgage foreclosures are effected, in the usual routine way, is by a petition in chancery or bill in equity?-A. A bill in equity; yes.
- Q. There is no procedure in Florida for foreclosure under a power of sale contained in the instrument itself?-A. No procedure in Florida.
- Q. Judge Rankin, when you were testifying before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House down in Florida, when this matter was under investigation, you testified that you saw Judge Ritter only once while you were in New York; did you not?-A. I believe that is correct; but I did not recall the dinner that we had with him at the time.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, after your trip to New York, in which the sole and only purpose, you say, was to present and have signed this ex parte order relating to the reduction of taxes in this Highland Glades case-after that, when did you return to West Palm Beach, or to Florida?-A. I do not recall that I stated that that was the sole and only business of my trip up there.
- Q. I beg your pardon, sir; I so understood you. I shall be very happy to have you correct me if I am in error. What was the other purpose?-A. Well, I was handling some business for Howard Cole & Co. in New York at the time, and I had to see them, and I had to stay there 2 or 3 days in order to get to see him. He was out at the time, although I had written previously and told him that I would be there; but he was called to Chicago, and I had to stay there 2 or 3 or 4 days; I do not recall now.
- Q. Who paid the expenses of your trip to New York and your expenses while there and returning?-A. The Highland Glades Drainage District paid part of it, and I paid part.
- Q. How much did you pay?-A. My recollection is that I paid $100 and they paid $100.
- Q. The total expense of your trip from West Palm Beach, Fla., to New York City, where you remained for several days, was only $200?-A. That is the best of my recollection.
 - Q. Who paid Mr. Tucker's expenses?-A. I do not know.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, when did you first hear of Bert E. Holland?—A. Who?
- Q. Bert E. Holland, the client who afterward employed you to file the foreclosure suit in the Whitehall Hotel matter .-A. I believe—to the best of my recollection; I will put it that way-Mr. Richardson told me either before we went to New York or on the way up there that he had had some correspondence with a man by the name of Bert E. Holland, or that he had the information that Bert E. Holland, he and his associates, or he, controlled some $50,000 in Whitehall bonds.
- Q. Mr. Richardson also told you on that trip, did he not, that he had written to Martin Sweeny to get in touch with Mr. Bert E. Holland and seek to get him to employ counsel to file the bill for foreclosure on the Whitehall first-mortgage bond issue?-A. Well, he may have told me that.
- Q. And he told you that he was going up there at that time to see Martin Sweeny and Mr. Bemis about that very matter, did he not?—A. That is right; he told me that.

- Q. Looking to the filing of a foreclosure bill under the firstmortgage deed of trust on the Whitehall Hotel property?-A. Yes.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, on February 10, 1930, or at any time about that time, did you or not give Mr. S. J. Tucker a check for $200 which you marked on the face "Account trip to New York"?-A. Well, I may have.
- Q. Do you have any recollection of so doing?-A. No: I do not. I have a recollection of giving him a check on account of the trip to New York; but just what it was, the amount of it, I do not recall.
- Q. You do recall giving him a check with reference to his expenses to New York on this particular trip?-A. I believe I recall that.
- Q. Sir?-A. I believe I recall giving him a check. The amount of it-
- Q. You do not recall the amount?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Will you look that up, please? I do not mean at this time, but we have subpensed you to produce that .-- A. Yes; I will look it up.
- Q. Now, Judge, you never heard anything from anybody else while you were in New York with reference to the Whitehall foreclosure case that was then being fomented until you went back to Florida with Walter Richardson? Is that right? He is the only man who talked to you about it going up, in New York, or going back?-A. To the best of my recollection, he is.
- Q. All right, sir. When you got back home, what was the next step in your employment? Whom did you see next who said anything about hiring you?-A. Well, the next, as I recall, either Mr. Sweeny or Mr. Holland called me from New York on the long-distance phone.
- Q. Sweeny or Holland?—A. Yes, sir; one or the other; and during the conversation, whether it was Sweeny or Mr. Holland that called me, I do not recall-but during the conversation the best of my recollection is that I talked to Mr. Holland, or he talked to me, about the foreclosure of the trust deed. He stated to me that he had some bonds.
- Q. Did he say anything to you about wanting you to represent him in the foreclosure?-A. Yes; he said that I had been recommended to him, or that Ernest Metcalf and I had been recommended to him, by Mr. Sweeny or Mr. Richardson; I do not recall which.
- Q. You say that either you, or Mr. Ernest Metcalf and you, he told you, had been recommended to him to file this bill for him?-A. That is right.
- Q. Did he authorize you to go ahead and to foreclose this first mortgage, or to file a petition for foreclosure in his name?-A. He instructed me to file a bill to foreclose the mortgage.
- Q. And he told you whom he represented, did he not-he gave you the name?-A. He said he was trustee, with some others, for $50,000 worth of bonds.
- Q. And he told you the names, did he not?—A. Not at that time; but he gave me-I told him I wanted the information. I think I wired him or wrote him; my recollection is that I wired him for the information.
- Q. All right, sir.—A. And he gave it.
- Q. Walter S. Richardson was a lawyer, was he not?-A. Yes; he was a lawyer.
- Q. Practicing law in Florida at that time?-A. Yes; he was practicing law.
- Q. Ernest Metcalf was a lawyer practicing law in Florida at that time, was he not?-A. Yes.
- Q. And Holland or Sweeny-neither of whom you had ever seen or heard of until Walter Richardson told youeither Holland or Sweeny, over the phone from New York, told you that you had been recommended to them, and that they wished you to join, with whom?-A. Metcalf.
 - Q. With Metcalf, in the filing of this bill?—A. Yes. Q. You did so, did you not?—A. Yes. Q. Who prepared that bill?—A. I prepared it.

- You did?-A. I did.
- Q. You yourself prepared that bill of complaint?--A. I prepared the bill; wrote every word of it.
 - Q. You wrote every word of it yourself?—A. Dictated it.

- Q. And Mr. Metcalf did not?—A. No. Metcalf was sitting in, and so was Richardson.
- Q. The three of you were sitting in on it, but you actually did the writing?-A. I actually dictated every word of it.
- Q. You actually dictated every word of that original bill of complaint?-A. That is right.
- Q. All right, Mr. Rankin. What was the next thing you - did in that case?—A. What was the next thing?
- Q. Yes, sir.-A. Well, I dictated the bill and had it written, typewritten, and it took me then about 4 or 5 days to prepare the bill, and I finished with it on the 10th of October, and we signed the bill and put it in the mails.
- Q. What time did you put it in the mail?-A. Oh, as I recall it, it was some time about noon.
- Q. Why did you wire Bert E. Holland on the 10th, then, that you had the bill prepared and would file it "tomorrow or the next day"?-A. Why did I wire him?
 - Q. Yes, sir.—A. Well, he was asking about it.
- Q. I mean, if you mailed it by 12 o'clock on the 10th, why did you wire him at 2:30 or 3 p. m. that the bill was prepared and that you would file it "tomorrow or the next day"?—A. Why did I wire him that?
- Q. Yes.-A. I do not know that I mailed the bill along about noon; I mailed it some time after noon, I do not know; along about noon or some time after noon; but the reason I mailed it at that time was because Richardson gave me the information that there was a lease-parties negotiating for a lease on the building for that season, and it was at his suggestion and Metcalf's, and all three of us agreed to it that we had better get that bill filed immediately.
- Q. You just stated to this honorable Court that your best judgment was that it was mailed about noon on the 10th day of October.—A. Well, it was sometime about noon or a few hours after; I do not recall.
- Q. All right, then. I want to know what you had in mind by wiring Bert E. Holland, your client, on that same afternoon, that you were not going to file the bill until "tomorrow or the next day"?-A. We changed our minds about it afterward.
- Q. Then, after you wired him that, he wired you again the same day and told you not to file it, did he not?—A. He did: told me to hold it up.
 - Q. Told you not to file the bill?-A. Yes.
- Q. He had wired you prior to that time not to file it, had he not?-A. Prior to that time?
- Q. Yes, sir.-A. No; he had not.
- Q. He had not?-A. He had not wired me not to file the bill before I put it in the mail.
 - Q. He had not?-A. No; he had not.
- Q. So, just out of a clear sky, without any communication at all, you wired him and told him that the bill "is ready and I am going to file it tomorrow or the next day", and then you put it in the mail; or was it already in the mail?-A. I think we put it in the mail after the wire was sent.
 - Q. After the wire was sent?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Yet you never wired Bert Holland that you changed your mind, did you?-A. You say I did not wire him?
- Q. No, sir.-A. But I advised him.
- Q. I know, but not until after the wire from him later in the day told you not to do it?-A. No; I did not advise him immediately.
 - Q. You did not do it that day?—A. No.
- Q. You did not do it until the next day, after you had gotten another wire from him that afternoon telling you not to file it?—A. I do not recall just when I filed it.
- Q. You do not remember this telegram of the 11th? A. I say I do not recall. You are talking about matters which are 6 or 7 years old.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, when you mailed that bill, you wrote the clerk to put it under lock and key and not to let anybody know anything about it being filed until Judge Ritter got back, did you not?-A. I did.
- Q. And you got a letter back from him saying that he would keep it dark, or words to that effect?-A. I did.
- Q. It was on the 10th and the 11th that you had that correspondence and that exchange of telegrams with Bert E. Holland, your client, was it not?-A. Yes.

- Q. Along about the 16th, some 4 or 5 days later, he was still wiring you not to do anything about this case, was he not?-A. Yes; he was.
- Q. And on the 17th, after receiving his telegram of the 16th, you wired him that-"as requested, will not make application for you for receiver Whitehall pending instructions?"-A. Yes; I sent him that wire.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, as a matter of fact, you had gotten, through Walter Richardson's solicitation, clients to authorize you to swear in their names to interventions and had filed them on the day before you sent that wire, had you not?-A. I believe I had.
- Q. And they lived out in the Middle West, and had never seen you, and came to you at the solicitation of Walter Richardson, did they not?-A. That is right.
- Q. And you filed and swore yourself to those bills of intervention which were filed by you in court on the 16th and wired him on the 17th that you would not intervene?-A. Yes: that is true.
- Q. You brought this suit in Bert Holland's name, did you not, Mr. Rankin?—A. Metcalf and I brought it.
 - Q. That is what I mean.—A. Yes.
- Q. He was the only one who had been able to be found by Walter S. Richardson or by anyone else who had control of as many as $50,000 worth of first-mortgage bonds. Is that true?-A. He was the only one who had been suggested to me as having that amount of bonds.
- Q. And you knew that Walter Richardson was after him, through Martin Sweeny and otherwise, did you not?-A. After the bonds?
 - Q. Yes .- A. Yes; I knew that.
- Q. You knew that Walter Richardson was seeking to get clients who could put you in court?-A. I knew that.
- Q. In other words, you knew he wanted to find a client who could be induced to lend you his name to file the bonds for foreclosure on behalf of all the first-mortgage bondholders. You knew that Walter Richardson was doing that, did you not?-A. Yes; I knew Walter Richardson was after the bonds.
 - Q. And for that purpose?—A. And what?
 - Q. And for that purpose?—A. And for that purpose; yes.
- Q. Bert Holland was your client was he not? He was the man who had the qualifying amount of bonds under his control to enable you to file the foreclosure?-A. He was the man who furnished me with the $50,000 worth of bonds.
- Q. That was the qualifying amount under the deed of trust under which you operated?-A. Under the deed of trust; it was.
- Q. He was your client. Is that right?-A. He was my client.
- Q. What time did the mails run from West Palm Beach to Miami, or what time did they run at that time?—A. I do not recall.
 - Q. You lived there, did you not?-A. Yes; I live there.
- Q. You do not know what time the mails ran between those two towns?-A. No; I did not.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, why did you file that bill after Bert E. Holland had told you not to?-A. I did not file it after he told me not to; that is, I mailed it before I got the wire from him.
- Q. You mailed it before you received his wire?-A. That is right.
- Q. You did not mail it until sometime in the afternoon of the 10th, did you?-A. Well, I told you a few moments ago that I mailed it some time after noon.
 - Q. That is what I say.—A. Yes.
- Q. You just said it was noon, or thereabouts, and then you said several hours later, possibly; therefore it was after noon of the day of the 10th of October 1929 that it was mailed, was it not?-A. I did not understand that question.
- Q. Was it or not in the afternoon of October 10, 1929, before you mailed that bill?-A. It was.
- Q. You did not send it by air mail, did you?-A. No.
- Q. Straight, open mail? It went by train?-A. I do not think we had any air mail then.
- Q. It went by train or truck, did it not?—A. It went by train.

Q. And it went the next morning, did it not?—A. I do not recall: it probably went that night.

Q. You do not know when it is shown that that letter, from the stamp on the back of the envelope, was mailed?—A. No; I do not. We dropped it in the mail box in the Comeau Building.

Q. You had written the clerk to lock it up and to keep it dark, had you not?—A. I did.

Q. And you knew that that thing was under your control, subject to be withdrawn at any minute you saw fit? You knew that nobody had seen it except Palmer Rosemond, the deputy clerk, did you not? He told you so?—A. Told me what?

Q. Palmer Rosemond.—A. Told me what?

Q. Told you that he had locked it up as you requested, and that he would let no one see it?—A. Yes; he wrote me that.

Q. You knew you could stop it at any moment you wanted to, did you not?—A. And that he would hold it there until Judge Ritter came back.

Q. Yes, sir. And you knew that you could have withdrawn it at any minute until the judge had come back, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And yet in spite of the fact of your only client with $50,000 worth of bonds necessary for you to qualify you to file it, telling you not to, you let it stay?—A. Yes; I let it stay.

Q. Now, Judge, why did you do that?—A. Why did I do that?

Q. Why did you violate the known instructions of your only qualifying client?—A. Simply because I knew from representations that Mr. Richardson made to me that Mr. Holland had gotten under the control of the Moore crowd and American Bond & Mortgage Co. temporarily.

Q. So when your client had come under the evil influence of the opposite crowd you ignored his instructions?—A. In the meantime, other bondholders had come in and we had intervened for them.

Q. You mean that Walter Richardson had brought you employment from them and you had done so?—A. That is correct.

Q. You did not dismiss as to Helland, did you?—A. How is that?

Q. You did not dismiss the bill as to Holland, did you?—A. No; I did not.

Q. And you knew that Walter Richardson had solicited the employment of you and Metcalf by these interveners, did you not?—A. Yes. Wait, let me catch that question.

Q. I want you to catch it. I ask you, sir, if you did or did not know that Walter S. Richardson had solicited these interveners for whom you filed on the 16th of October?—A. No: I did not know that.

Q. You did not know that?-A. No.

Q. You did not know-A. No; I did not.

Q. When you answered my question a few minutes ago—I do not mean right now—you did not know that Walter Richardson was doing that?—A. No; I did not know that he had.

Q. But you thought he was? Did you not, Judge?—A. Well, we did not think here.

Q. You did not think. All right,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I send to the desk a question to be propounded to the witness at this point, with the consent of the honorable counsel?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

Mr. KING. I should like to have it answered by the witness.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Did you regard your conduct as ethical in representing Holland and at the same time you got clients to begin intervention proceedings?

A. Yes; I considered that ethical.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge Rankin—A. Just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness desires further to answer the question. Will the Senator from Utah give attention to the witness, please?

The WITNESS. I will answer it this way:

Mr. KING. Did he change his answer?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Not yet.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the witness' previous answer be read by the reporter.

The official reporter (Fred A. Carlson) read as follows:

A. Yes; I considered that ethical.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness desires to make further answer.

The WITNESS (reading):

Did you regard your conduct as ethical in representing Holland and at the same time you got clients to begin intervention proceedings?

Well, that is not just the situation, because I had nothing to do with procuring the clients for whom I intervened by the intervention proceeding, and with that explanation I say that it was ethical.

Q. By Mr. Manager HOBBS. And yet, Judge, you swore to those interventions yourself, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. None of your clients ever swore to them, did they?—A. No.

Q. And on the day after you had filed them in court you wired Bert Holland, your client, that you were not going to file the interventions, did you not? Is that not true, Judge?—A. I do not recall.

Q. I will ask you to look at this telegram to refresh your recollection, please sir [handing telegram to the witness].—A. Yes; I sent him that telegram. But as I understood your question, that telegram is not worded as you put it.

Q. I am asking you, Judge, after you had, on the 16th of October, filed interventions for these other people, if you did not wire Holland that you would not—"as requested will not make application for you for receiver for Whitehall (case)"?—A. That is right, I wired that; that I would not make application for him.

Q. That is right?—A. Yes. For him.

Q. Yes. But you had already done so, had you not?—A. No.

Q. You did not do so in the original bill of complaint—you did not have a prayer for a receivership?—A. Why yes; I had a prayer for a receivership.

Q. You did not have a motion filed at that time in the name of Bert E. Holland asking for receivership?—A. Well, I do not recall that, but when we applied for a receiver we applied on petition by the interveners.

Q. And you applied in the name of Bert E. Holland also, did you not?—A. Not at the time.

Q. I am talking about on the 28th when you went there and argued the matter?—A. No; I did not apply for it.

Q. You did not?—A. No; I did not.

Q. All right, sir; but you had already filed a bill in his name, seeking a receivership?—A. That is what we had.

Q. And you did file a motion for receivership in the names of the complainants, one of whom was Bert E. Holland?—A. That was in the bill.

Q. Yes; and also in the motion, too, was it not?—A. I do not recall that it was. We filed a separate petition for the interveners.

Q. That is a matter of record. Now, having lulled him by this and similar telegrams into believing that you were not going to proceed for receivership in his name, telling him to talk to you over the long-distance phone, as you do in others, we come now to the 28th day of October 1929, in the court room of Judge Ritter. I ask you if before entering that room you saw your client, Bert E. Holland.—A. Yes; I saw him.

Q. I will ask you if he did not tell you that he no longer desired or wished your services in that case?—A. No; he did not.

Q. He did not?-A. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the counsel read the telegram which he just quoted from for the purpose of the record?

West Palm Beach, Fla., October 17-

Omitting the hieroglyphics which I do not understand-"1114A", and so on-

BERT E. HOLLAND,

Palmer House, Chicago, Ill.:

As requested, will not make application for you for receiver Whitehall pending instructions. Suggest you call me long distance, as you losing strategic position by delay.

A. L. RANKIN.

Then some other numbers "1125a", or something. Was that what you wished, Mr. President? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge Rankin, on the 28th you say that Bert Holland did not see you in the hall and tell you he no longer desired your services?-A. No.

Q. Did he not tell you that that suit had been filed by you and Metcalf in defiance of his orders as your client and that he was through with you, or words to that effect?-A. No: he did not say that.

Q. He did not say that. What did he say?-A. He told us that he did not want any receivership-or receiver appointed at that time, and did not want us to make an application for the appointment of a receiver for him, and we told him that we would not make an application for appointment of receiver for him, but we would make an application for the appointment of a receiver for the interveners.

Q. And then you went on into the courtroom?-A. Yes.

Q. And you say that is what Bert Holland said to you and what you said to him?-A. That is what Bert Holland said to me and that is what he said to Metcalf, and we were both together.

Q. You were both together in the hall?-A. Yes.

Q. It was called to my attention, Judge, that you paid the filing fee for filing this bill of complaint, $15, yourself .-A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Holland never paid it?-A. No.

Q. Never paid you a dime of your expenses in the matter at all?-A. No. I paid it.

Q. Did he ever pay you any fee?—A. Did he ever pay me any fee?

Q. Yes.—A. No; he never paid me a dime.

Q. Did you ever ask him for one?-A. No; I never asked him for a fee.

Q. And you paid the expenses of filing the bill and the other incidental expenses yourself?-A. Yes; I paid it.

Q. You paid out of your own pocket the expense of filing the interventions, did you not?-A. I believe I did.

Q. Now, on the 28th of October, when your client showed up from Boston in Miami, he got up in open court and made a statement to the judge, did he not?-A. Yes; he made a statement to the judge in open court.

Q. He is an attorney at law, is he not?-A. I really do not know.

Q. You do not know that?-A. No, sir.

Q. You have received letters from him. Have you never received one on his letterhead?-A. I do not recall.

Q. That is all right, sir. He got up and made a statement in open court, did he not?—A. Yes; he made a statement in open court.

Q. What did he say?—A. As I recall, he stated that he did not care to have a receiver appointed at that time, and objected to it.

Q. What did Judge Ritter say?-A. Judge Ritter, to the best of my recollection, asked him if he authorized his attorney to file that bill; and he said he did; and the judge said, "You are not asking now for this bill to be dismissed"that is as I recall it—"but you just do not want the court to appoint a receiver"; and he stated, I believe, that that was his position.

Q. Judge, that was not your testimony when you were on the witness stand before in this matter, was it?-A. It may not be, but it was in words very much to that effect, though and show the work that I did in the case. I was in con-

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Certainly, Mr. President. It is I do not just recall the exact conversation or just what took place there.

> Q. And you would not attempt to swear positively what took place?-A. No; I would not swear positively, because I do not recall positively.

> Q. Do you recall whether or not Judge Ritter said anything about a man coming into his court from out of the State and starting something and then trying to stop it?-A. Judge Ritter made some remark, but I just do not recall what it was.

> Q. It may be a little later, after you argued—I believe you did argue for the appointment of this receiver, did you not?-A. I do not recall whether I presented the petition or whether Mr. Metcalf presented it.

> Q. Do you not remember that you did present it yourself and that you argued it for quite awhile?-A. I may have.

> Q. And then a gentleman from Chicago by the name of Lautmann, who represented quite a large number of the bondholders, tried to say something, did he not?-A. Yes; Mr. Lautmann rose and made some argument.

> Q. What did Judge Ritter tell him?-A. I do not recall what he told him.

Q. You do not?-A. No: I do not.

Q. He represented about 90 percent of the bondholders under the first mortgage deed of trust, did he not?—A. Who?

Q. Lautmann?-A. I do not know. It was the first time had ever seen him, and I had never heard of him before.

Q. I believe you were Judge Ritter's former law partner, were you, up to the time he went on the bench?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, for the purpose of clarifying the record, I will ask you when the formation of the partnership between you and Judge Ritter began, or when it was accomplished?-A. It was in October or November, I think-my best judgment is October or November-1926.

Q. When did you move to Florida?—A. I moved to Florida in June 1926.

Q. And you and Judge Ritter both stood the bar examination at Tallahassee that summer and were admitted to practice in Florida, and for the first time formed your partnership that fall and continued your partnership until he went on the bench?—A. That is right.

Q. Judge Ritter appointed the receiver on the 28th day of October 1929, after Bert E. Holland had made his statement in court, and after you had argued for the appointment of a receiver, and after Lautmann had attempted to say something, then Judge Ritter said that he was going to appoint a receiver, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. And he said he was going to appoint Walter S. Richardson?-A. Yes; he said that.

Q. Nobody had mentioned Walter S. Richardson's name in the courtroom, had they?-A. Nobody had.

Q. Not until Judge Ritter had?-A. I had not. Q. Then nobody else had?—A. Metcalf had not.

Q. You had been there, had you not?—A. Yes; but I had not heard anyone mention his name as receiver.

Q. And, to the best of your judgment, until his name fell from the lips of Judge Halsted L. Ritter, no one mentioned it?-A. Judge Ritter, to the base of my recollection, was the first one who called his name.

Q. Then, as soon as he did it, Mr. McPherson, of the firm of Shutts & Bowen, objected to the appointment of Walter S. Richardson as receiver, did he not?-A. Yes; he did.

Q. And asked for time to bring in documentary proof to show his unfitness, did he not?-A. To the best of my recollection, he said that.

Q. And Judge Ritter granted him until 2 o'clock that afternoon to do so; is that right?-A. I think that is what happened.

Q. From that good moment or throughout the whole time that this receivership was running what did you do? I do not mean this offensively; I mean except your applications for your allowance of fees from time to time, what other services did you perform?-A. Well, the record will show. If I had the record here, I could pick out the papers I filed sultation every few days with Mr. Bemis, Mr. Sweeny, and | Whitehall case?—A. I do not recall whether it was settled Mr. Richardson.

- Q. So you had some conferences with Bemis, with Sweeny, and with Richardson?-A. Yes.
- Q. You were not attorney for the receiver?-A. How is that?
- Q. You were not attorney for the receiver?-A. No; I was not.
- Q. Judge Ritter suggested that either you or Ernest Metcalf should withdraw as attorney for Holland and that if either one of you would do so he would appoint you attorney for the receiver, did he not?-A. Yes.
- Q. That suggestion came from the court, did it not?-A. Yes, sir; it did.
- Q. So you were not attorney for the receiver, Walter S. Richardson, were you?-A. No; I was not his attorney, but I was attorney for the complainant.
- Q. All right, sir. Why were you conferring with the managers of the hotel under the receivership? What was the purpose of those conferences?-A. There were a great many questions that arose with reference to repairs, management, operation, and purchases, everything of that kind. They were very frequently calling on me. I do not recall just what the different things were that we discussed.
- Q. Ernest Metcalf, at the suggestion of Judge Halsted L. Ritter, had retired as your associate representing a complainant and had gone over and taken the receiver's counselship, had he not?-A. Yes; he had.
- Q. So the receiver, himself a lawyer, had another lawyer, Mr. Ernest Metcalf, to represent him, did he not?-A. Yes; he had another lawver.
- Q. And he had employed Bemis and Sweeny to run the hotel, had he not?-A. Yes; the court required him to do it.
- Q. And Bemis and Sweeny and Richardson consulted you?-A. They did.
- Q. What papers did you say you filed? I do not mean in detail-of course, the records will show-but I mean just what papers do you recall not relating to the petitions for fees to be paid you; what other papers do you recall that you filed from the 28th of October on?-A. Well, as I recall it, I filed answers to the cross bill of Harold A. Moore; and, as I recall it. I filed replies to the answers of some of the other defendants there-that is, the answer of the trustee under the second mortgage; and then I prepared, but the papers were not filed, the warning order to get service on the nonresident defendants; but they came in and answered and I did not have to file those. Then later I prepared the final decree in full.
 - Q. You did?-A. I did. I prepared the final decree in full.
 - Q. You wrote that yourself?-A. I did.
- Q. Prepared it in full? Have you stated to us in substance the content and extent of your services in this case?-A. Is that the extent, do you say?
 - Q. Yes.—A. I am sure it was not.
- Q. But to the best of your recollection at this late day that is all you can recall? The records will show the balance?-A. Yes; the records will show.
- Q. That is all you can recall?-A. No; it is not. There was a claim in the bankruptcy case of Albert Pick & Co. involving-I do not remember just how much it was, but several thousand dollars. I went down to the hearings on two or three occasions, and on behalf of the bondholders I contested that claim of twenty-some-odd thousand dollars. In other words, I filed objection to the allowance of it and attended several hearings. Then after that I attended several hearings before the special master in which there were some contested claims, and they took testimony on several occasions. Then I made several trips to Tampa, since the case was transferred to Tampa, on hearings instigated by the special master in different matters with reference to instructions, and so forth.
- Q. Judge Rankin, do you not know that the Albert Pick claim was settled before the special master long after the final decree in this case was rendered?-A. Do I know what?
- Q. Do you not know the Albert Pick contest before the special master was settled long after the final decree in the

- prior to the entry of the final decree or subsequent to the entry of the final decree, but you asked what I did after the filing of the bill, and I am trying to answer your question.
- Q. Up to the time of the filing of the decree.—A. I did not understand you.
- Q. I beg your pardon. It is my fault. I did not make myself clear. I want to ask one other question. To go back to the appointment of the receiver, Walter S. Richardson, that afternoon at 2 o'clock, on October 28, 1929, when you came back in there, Mr. McPherson presented some letters to Judge Ritter protesting against the appointment of Walter S. Richardson, and in those letters he showed this drumming up of business, did he not?-A. Those letters showed
- Q. The solicitation of a client to institute the suit.—A. I do not recall that.
- Q. You did not hear that?—A. I did not hear it?
- Q. Did you or did you not hear it?-A. I don't remember whether I heard it or not, but I don't recall it.
- Q. You do not recall it?-A. No.
- Q. You do not recall Mr. McPherson introducing in evidence upon that occasion, and it being read and commented on before Judge Ritter, the fact that Walter S. Richardson had solicited clients to bring cases?-A. I do not recall hearing him make a statement like that.
- Q. You do not?-A. No. I do not say that he did not do it.
- Q. All right. Judge Rankin, on the day that the final decree was signed in the Whitehall case you had agreed upon a split of the fee that was to be allowed you, had you not?-A. Yes.
- Q. How was it to be split?—A. The fee was to be split with Shutts & Bowen and Fordham. The understanding was that whatever fee the court allowed they would participate to the extent of one-third and I would participate to the extent of two-thirds.
 - Q. You had already gotten $15,000, had you not?-A. Yes.
- Q. That was allowed to you by Judge Akerman, and $2,500 by Judge Ritter?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You had already gotten that, and on the day the final decree was signed you had reached before that an agreement with counsel on the other side of the case whereby they were to get a slice out of your fee?-A. Yes; we had an agreement, a settlement agreement.
- Q. Shutts & Bowen and Fordham were to get $25,000?-A. They were to get one-third of whatever the court allowed.
 - Q. That was the agreement, was it?-A. Yes.
- Q. What connection did Shutts & Bowen and Fordham, as you call them, have with this case?-A. They represented the trustee under a trust deed, under the first-mortgage trust
- Q. In other words, they represented Moore?—A. That is, the Moore interests.
- Q. The man you had called in your bill the perpetrator of a fraud?-A. That is correct.
- Q. And when they took testimony in Chicago, to disprove the allegations of fraud against Moore, you were not there?-A. No; I could not go at the time. I think I was out of the State; that is my best recollection.
- Q. You got notice of the hearing and the taking of testimony, did you not?-A. I believe I did.
- Q. You knew they were going to take testimony to disprove the averments of your bill, did you not?-A. I do not recollect that.
- Q. You do not recall about that? You did not go to Chicago, did you?-A. No.
- Q. You did not participate in the hearing there when they took over 400 pages of testimony, did you?-A. No; I did not go to Chicago.
- Q. They were representing the men at whom you were shooting, Shutts & Bowen?-A. Yes; they were representing the same interests.
- Q. And Fordham, as you call him, is the Honorable Albert C. Fordham, of West Palm Beach? Is that right?-A. Yes.

- Q. He was the local attorney in West Palm Beach for the Moore interests, was he not?-A. Yes.
- Q. So they were the ones against whom your bill was filed? Is that true?-A. Yes.
- Q. You agreed to give them a third of whatever fee was allowed you?-A. I did.
- Q. In addition to that you agreed that they should be paid $6,500 as the balance on the bank trust deed, did you not, out of the fee which they contended should have been allowed them in the bankruptcy phase of the Whitehall case?-A. For services they had rendered Harold A. Moore, trustee; yes.
 - Q. That was in the bankruptcy case?—A. That is right.
- Q. That had nothing to do with this case?-A. It had nothing to do with this particular case—that employment.
- Q. Not a thing? You knew, did you not, that the referee in bankruptcy before whom the bankruptcy was pending had heard their petition and denied their petition for that fee in that particular case?-A. I don't recall that. The fact is I don't believe I remember anything about that.
- Q. You knew the referee in bankruptcy had allowed them a fee of $8,500 for their services to the trustee in that bankruptcy, did you not?-A. No; I did not.
 - Q. You did not know that?-A. No.
- Q. You knew they were claiming $15,000, did you not?-A. No; I did not.
- Q. You did not know about the $6,500 balance they had petitioned to the referee for in that bankruptcy phase of the proceedings before any of this was instituted, and that he had heard the petition and the evidence in support of it and had denied that petition for this fee? Did you know that?-A. No; I did not know that.
- Q. So, then, when you agreed that $6,500 should be paid in this case for services rendered in another case, you were ignorant of the facts I have just hypothesized?-A. Yes; I knew nothing of that.
- Q. In addition to that, Judge, you had agreed to pay Ernest Metcalf $10,000, had you not, out of your fee?-A. Yes.
- Q. He got $5,000 decreed to him; did he not?-A. I believe he did.
- Q. So you were just giving him $10,000 on the side?-A. No: Metcalf had done quite a little work in the matter. The fact of the business is, he had drawn a rough form of bill of complaint, I think a few pages, and then he and Richardson had assisted me and been with me all the time that I was drawing the final decree-I mean, the bill of complaint-and after he had withdrawn from the case and been appointed attorney for the receiver, I agreed to compensate him for the work that he had done.
- Q. So, just out of appreciation for his having drawn the first rough draft of the bill of complaint in the Whitehall case that we have been talking about, and just because he had withdrawn as your associate counsel, just to be a good fellow, you handed him $10,000 out of your fee?-A. Well, I felt like I was obligated to pay him something.
- Q. Judge, you similarly felt, did you not, the urge to compensate Walter Richardson, the trustee in bankruptcy, who, while he was trustee, had been seeking these bondholders so that he could initiate this foreclosure proceeding, and then who took you to New York, or you went with him, talked it over there, and he told you what he was going for? You felt the urge to compensate that man, too, did you not?-A. Yes; and I did.
- Q. And you slipped him $5,000?-A. For services he had rendered prior to the time he was appointed receiver.
- Q. Yes, sir. Judge Rankin, on Christmas Eve of 1930, the day that the final decree was signed by Judge Ritter, your former law partner, you got an advance payment on the $75,000 fee that he allowed you that day. You got a payment of $25,000, did you not?-A. Thirty thousand dollars.
- Q. All right, sir. You deposited only $25,000, did you not?—A. As I recall it, I deposited $30,000.
- Q. Well, twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars; that is a difference of only $5,000. You got some little bit of money, an advancement on your $75,000 fee?-A. Yes.
- Q. What did you do with it?-A. Well, it was a check on the First National Bank in Miami.

- Q. Yes, sir. You went down to the bank and deposited it; did you not?-A. I went down to the bank and deposited it, and I told Mr. Bowen, of Shutts & Bowen, to come on down there with me and I would pay them $12,500, or half of what I had agreed to pay them.
 - Q. And you did so?-A. I did.
- Q. And they went to the bank with you, you say?-A. Yes; they went in the bank with me-Shutts and Bowen.
- Q. And yet, while they were right there at the bank window, where the cash was, you paid them in checks, did you not?-A. I did not understand you.
- Q. I will ask you this question: How did you pay Shutts & Bowen and Mr. Fordham?-A. I gave a check to Shutts & Bowen for $12,500 in the bank.
- Q. And that was supposed to pay off Messrs. Shutts & Bowen and Mr. Fordham?-A. Yes.
- Q. For their part, for a little bit more than their part. You had agreed on a third, and you paid them half of this advance?-A. I gave them half of what was coming to them.
- Q. But although they were standing there in the bank with you, where the cash was, you gave them a check?-A. Yes; I gave them a check. They asked me to.
- Q. All right, sir. Whom else did you pay out of that fee?-A. I paid Judge Ritter $2,500.
- Q. No, sir; I am not coming to that. Did you pay Walter Richardson any of it?-A. I believe I did. I will have to see my checks to see.
- Q. And you paid him with a check, did you not?-A. Paid him with a check?
 - Q. Yes, sir.—A. Yes; I paid him with a check.
- Q. So everybody in this case except Judge Ritter got his in a check?-A. That is correct.
- Q. How did you get Judge Ritter's pay to him?-A. How did I get it to him?
- Q. Yes, sir.—A. I drew a check for $3,000 cash. I went to the window and got the $3,000 in cash. I put $500 of it in my pocket-well, I took out $2,500 and went over, and on my way to my car-it was parked back of the Federal Building-I went into Judge Ritter's office and paid him $2,500 in cash.
- Q. Who was present when you paid him that cash?-A. There was no one in his private office. His secretary was out
- Q. And you went in and closed the door and paid him $2,500 in cash?—A. Well, I do not recall that I closed the door.
 - Q. You do not?-A. No. I may have, or I may not have.
- Q. And there you paid him $2,500 cash on Christmas Eve of 1930?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. Is that the truth?—A. That is true.
 - Q. That is what happened?—A. That is what happened.
- Q. All right; and he is the only man in this case that you did pay in cash?—A. The only man I paid in cash.
- Q. You did not take any receipt for it?-A. Did I have a reason for it?
- Q. I say, you did not have any receipt for it; you did not take any receipt for it?-A. No; I took no receipt for it.
 - Q. Not a scratch of a pen?—A. Not a scratch of a pen.
- Q. All right, sir. The sum and substance of that is that you got $25,000 under a decree signed by Judge Ritter that day, and took the check giving you that $25,000 to the bank; and then, after writing a couple of other checks, you drew a check for $3,000, and brought back the proceeds, and gave $2,500 out of the proceeds to Judge Ritter in the privacy of his own chambers, without a scratch of a pen?-A. That is exactly right.
- Q. Judge Rankin, I want to ask you please to look at this check [exhibiting check to the witness and to Mr. Walsh. of counsel]. This is a check which purports to have been drawn on December 24, 1930, payable to the order of cash, for $3,000, signed by you. Is this the check that you drew?-A. It is.
- Q. You did not draw it.—A. I did not what?
 Q. Your handwriting is not on the face of it, is it [again exhibiting check to witness]?-A. That is the check that I signed. Mr.—the best of my recollection is Mr. Raum wrote the check.

Q. You signed it there in the bank, did you not, Judge?-A. I did.

Q. When did you put that endorsement in the left-hand lower corner, which reads as follows, on there:

For payment on purchase of business, $2,500; for expenses of trip,

A. I put that on there some time after I received my checks back from the bank.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Official Reporter please read the last question and answer?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last question and answer will be read.

The Official Reporter (Percy E. Budlong) read as follows:

Q. When did you put that endorsement in the left-hand lower corner, which reads as follows, on there:

"For payment on purchase of business, $2,500; for expenses of trip, $500."

A. I put that on there some time after I received my checks back from the bank.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. So this check in its new form is not the check in the form in which you presented it to the bank?-A. No.

Q. In that this endorsement down in the left-hand lower corner, "For payment on purchase of business, $2,500; for expenses of trip, $500", was written long after you had received this check back from the bank, after it had cleared?-A. It was some time after I received it back from the bank.

Q. That was written in the privacy of your own office, was it not?-A. I do not recall; no doubt it was.

Q. Do you recall where you wrote it?-A. No, I do not; but I merely put it on there for a memorandum as to what went with the money.

Q. Judge Rankin, do you not know that was put on there the same day on which you made the so-called receipt when you paid him $300?-A. I do not recall that.

Q. Do you not know that you and Judge Ritter had heard that there was talk about this thing and thought you had better have some written evidence of it, and that you put it on there in 1932?-A. No; I put it on there prior to any time that I had heard any talk with reference to it.

Q. Is that so?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. Judge Rankin, was there any danger of you forgetting that you had, in the privacy of his chambers, paid your former law partner $2,500 in cash hot into his own hand?-A. No; there was no danger of my forgetting it.

Q. Yet you say you made this endorsement some time after it cleared at the bank in order that you might not forget it.-A. It is just a memorandum of what went with that $3,000 in cash.

Q. All right, Judge.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while counsel are consulting, may I have several questions read which I sent to the desk a moment ago?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Were you arranging for filing a suit for the interveners while you were acting for Holland?

Mr. KING. Now, I should like to have the next question read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Could the interveners file a suit in intervention without consent of the court?

The legislative clerk read the third question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Could there be a suit for foreclosure by bondholders owning or holding less than $50,000 of bonds?

A. Yes.

The legislative clerk read the fourth question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

How could you get into court as interveners with bonds representing less than $50,000?

A. You could file a petition with the court for an order allowing intervention.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge Rankin, with further reference to this endorsement in the lower left-hand corner, where you show that $2,500 went for the purchase of the business, and for the expenses of the trip $500, you reported that $500 in your income-tax return for that year as farm expenses?-A. I do not recall.

Q. You do not recall talking to Mr. C. R. West about this matter, the investigator of the Income Tax Bureau at Jacksonville, who then lived in your home town of West Palm Beach?—A. Yes; I recall talking to Mr. West about my income tax, but I do not recall just what I said to him with reference to that check.

Q. Judge, what was your agreement with Metcalf as to percentage of the fee you were to be allowed? You agreed with Shutts & Bowen and Fordham on a 331/3-percent cut, did you not?-A. Yes.

Q. What percentage of cut did you agree on with Ernest Metcalf?-A. We did not have any percentage agreement with him.

Q. So the fact that it was 20 percent of the $50,000 did not signify?-A. That did not signify.

Q. You just agreed to give him $10,000?-A. Yes.

Q. What percentage did you agree to give Walter Richardson?-A. I do not recall that we had a definite percentage agreement. We may have had, but I do not recall it.

Q. You knew, of course, that Ernest Metcalf was allowed, and allowed without objection, a fee for representing the receiver in this very case, did you not?-A. Yes; I knew that; or that he would be.

Q. So, for all the services he performed in this case, except the preparation of the rough draft of the original bill, he had been paid, had he not?-A. For all the services he performed?

Q. In this case; yes .- A. With reference to the receivership?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Yes; he had been, or would be paid at the time.

Q. Except for the rough draft that he prepared of the original bill of complaint. That was what you were paying the $10,000 for, plus the consideration that he had withdrawn from association with you, and therefore deprived himself of part of the fee?-A. Yes.

Q. Is it not a fact, Judge Rankin, that Walter Richardson, when he had fomented this litigation, had an agreement with both you and Metcalf that he was to get 10 percent of any amount you received, and 10 percent of any amount that Ernest Metcalf received, in payment for his letting you in on it?-A. I do not recall that we had an agreement of that kind.

Q. You do not recall that?—A. No; I do not. I know I paid him some four or five thousand dollars.

Q. You paid him a little more than that, did you not?-A. I may have paid him a little more.

Q. You paid him $6,500 or $6,800; but the point is he was being paid as receiver, anyway, was he not?-A. Yes; he was getting paid as receiver.

Q. He was paid $30,000 for acting for 6 months during the two seasons the hotel ran, was he not?-A. I did not catch that question.

Q. He was paid $30,000 as receiver's fees for the two short winter seasons that he ran the hotel as receiver?-A. That is my recollection; that he got $30,000.

Q. But you paid him $5,000 additional?-A. Yes; I paid him, because I agreed to pay him that before he was appointed receiver, for the work he had done.

Q. For the work he did; and you agreed to pay him 10 percent of anything you got out of it, did you not?-A. I may have. I do not say I did or I do not say that I did not.

Q. And Ernest Metcalf agreed to pay him 10 percent of anything he got, too, did he not?-A. I do not recall.

Q. Do you not remember that Walter Richardson told you what was in his mind? Do you not remember when he told you that he was not going to get his hands off this property as easy as old man Moore and old man Fordham thought they were going to shake him loose; that he had this scheme, and if he could find any bondholders representing $50,000 worth or more of the first-mortgage bond issue he was going to put his scheme through, and he would use you two men if you would give him 10 percent of any fees allowed—A. No; he did not tell me that.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. Well, I have already outlined at the beginning of my examination what he said to me, approximately, with reference to that.

Q. When did he have the conversation with you in which you say that you may have told him something about 10 percent, but you will not be sure, but you did agree to pay him something?—A. Well, it was along about the time that we started on the work.

Q. When was that—when you went to New York?—A. After we came back from New York.

Q. After you came back from New York?—A. Yes; and after we started on the preparation of the bill.

- Q. And then how much did he say he wanted out of you for letting you in on it?—A. How much did he say he wanted?
- Q. Yes. How much did he say that he wanted of your fee?—A. We had a settlement, and I paid him somewhere around $5.000.
- Q. But you said that a short while after you got back from New York you agreed that you were going to pay him something for letting you in on this thing?—A. That is right.
- Q. How much did you agree to pay him? Not how much you paid.—A. Well, I did not state that I agreed to pay him any definite amount.

Q. Did you or did you not?-A. I do not recall.

- Q. You do not recall. And you do not recall whether you agreed to pay him a percentage? You do not remember whether you agreed to pay him one-third, or one-half, or 10 percent of your fee?—A. No.
- Q. But you did agree to pay him something in addition to his fees that he was to receive as receiver?—A. Yes; that is correct.
- Q. And based upon the amount of your fee?—A. Yes; based upon the amount of my fee.
- Q. In other words, if you got—A. Now wait a minute. No; it was for the services that he was rendering.
- Q. Why, of course.—A. And I told him that I would pay him a substantial amount.
- Q. What do you mean by "substantial"?—A. Well, I would think $5,000 was pretty substantial. That is what I paid him.
- Q. I agree with you fully about that; but what I am asking you is, What was to be the basis according to your understanding with Mr. Walter S. Richardson for his compensation? In other words, did you tell him that it was to have any relation whatsoever as to the amount that you got out of the case? Were you going to pay him the same if you got a large fee or a small one?—A. I do not recall just what our agreement was.
- Q. But I am asking you if you do recall—although you do not recall just what it was, do you recall that point, that you agreed to pay him a substantial amount, dependent upon how much you got?—A. Well, I just cannot answer that because I do not remember.
- Q. As a matter of fact, Judge, you and Metcalf each agreed to pay him 10 percent of anything you got out of it, did you not?—A. I just do not recall.
- Q. And you did pay him that, did you not?—A. I paid him $5,000. That amounted to more than 10 percent of what I really received.
- Q. But you did pay him substantially 10 percent?—A. I say that amounted to more than 10 percent of what I actually received.
- Q. Judge, let us get on down to the second trip that you made to Judge Ritter's office. It was in the spring, was it not, when you got another order from Judge Ritter to make another payment to you?—A. Yes; some time.
- Q. There was not enough money in the receivership to pay Q. It is 67 miles from you the full amount of $75,000 until after you had gone into not?—A. It is 70 miles.

- a second season of operation, was there?—A. Well I do not recall that.
 - Q. You do not?-A. No-that there was not enough.
- Q. Why, then, after he had just allowed you a $75,000 fee, did you pray for $30,000 to be paid you then? Did you not recite in that petition that the $30,000 was in the treasury, in the hands of the receiver?—A. Yes.
- Q. Did you not assign that as the reason why he could allow you your part payment of your fee that day, Christmas Eve?—A. Yes: I think I alleged that in my petition.
- Q. Then you did not know that there was not $75,000 to be distributed in that way at that time, did you not?—A. That there was not?

Q. Yes .- A. No; I did not.

- Q. You did not know that. All right, sir. The seasonal operation there begins the 1st day of January and runs through January, February, and March, does it not?—A. Yes.
- Q. So along in April, after you had finished the season and had collected the amounts that had been brought in by these people that occupied the hotel, you asked Judge Ritter to order the payment of the balance due you, did you not?—A. I did. My recollection is that it was after the sale of the property at the master's sale, and after probably—well, anyway, I do not recall that, but it was sometime after, along about the 1st of April somewhere.
- Q. On the 14th day of April he gave you an order to be paid the balance of your fee, you having had $5,000 between the time of the first payment and this? That is right, is it not?—A. I did not understand the question.

Q. I will make it specific. On the 24th day of December 1930 you got $25,000, did you not?-A. $30,000.

- Q. $30,000. Then between then and October 14 you got another $5,000, did you not?—A. I do not recall that I did.
- Q. Then either that is true or on April 14 you got the whole balance of your fee?—A. I think that is the truth.
- Q. Either way, you got the balance, did you not?—A. I got the balance.
- Q. How much was that payment, approximately?—A. $45,000.
- Q. What did you do with it?-A. I deposited it in the bank.
- Q. What bank?—A. I do not recall just how the payments were made to me—whether it was one check on one bank, or whether it was two or more checks on other banks—on different banks.
 - Q. All right, sir.—A. I deposited the checks all right.
- Q. I am satisfied you did, sir. And you deposited part of it in West Palm Beach in a bank up there, and you deposited part of it in Miami, did you not?—A. I think that is correct.
- Q. And then one day up there at Palm Beach, on the day that you had made that deposit, or shortly thereafter, you decided to take a trip to Miami to see Judge Ritter, did you not?—A. Yes; I went down to Miami.
- Q. And so you went down to the bank in West Palm Beach in which at the time you had more than $2,000 balance, and you drew a check for $1,000, did you not?—A. I did.
- Q. And you put it in your pocket and walked out?—A. I
- Q. Then what did you do by way of getting toward Miami with that $1,000 in your pocket? Did you go in your car?—A. I think—to the best of my recollection, I went in my car.
- Q. Then you rode from West Palm Beach the 67 miles down to Miami, along the highway of Florida, with the thousand dollars cash in your pocket?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And when you got to Miami you went to another bank and drew out $1,000 in cash, did you not?—A. I did.
- Q. And then you went around for the second time to Judge Ritter's private office, and in chambers you gave him $2,000 more in cash?—A. I did.
- Q. And that is the way you got hold of the $2,000 to give him; is it not?—A. That is the way. I drew a thousand dollars out of the bank in West Palm Beach and $1,000 out of the bank in Miami, and I carried it in there and paid it to Judge Ritter.
- Q. It is 67 miles from West Palm Beach to Miami, is it not?—A It is 70 miles

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, at this point I should like to submit two questions, which I send forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bachman in the chair). The clerk will read the first question submitted.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Robinson, as follows:

Why did you not give Judge Ritter a check instead of paying him cash?

A. Well, the reasons—there were two reasons. One was that the day before, on the 23d, they had had a bank failure there in Miami. The City National, as I recall, I think had had a run on the bank; and I wanted to pay as much as I could on what I owed, and I owed Judge Ritter some money, and I started to write a check to him for $2,500, and then it occurred to me that it might not be that Judge Ritter did his banking there at the same bank, and it might subject him or me, or both of us, to criticism if I would, on the same day that I deposited $30,000 there, write him a check for $2,500, I being his former law partner. That is the explanation, and the only explanation that I could make of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the second question submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Robinson, as follows:

How did you reach the conclusion that Richardson was entitled to receive any part of the attorney's fees?

A. We had agreed originally, after we had been employed, to pay Richardson reasonable compensation for his assistance there in helping us draft the bill and furnishing us data.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit two questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the first question submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

What time in the day, which I understand was the day before Christmas, December 24, 1930, did you receive the order from Judge Ritter for the payment of your fee?

A. It was along around noon or just before noon, as I remember.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the second question submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

What time was it that you, on December 24, 1930, paid Judge Ritter?

A. I think the answer to the former question would probably answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness does not seem to have answered the Senator's question. Let it be read again.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

What time was it that you, on December 24, 1930, paid Judge Ritter?

A. To the best of my recollection it was a little before noon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understood the witness to say he made the deposit a little before noon. Did he make the payment to Judge Ritter at that time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the witness answer each question again.

The WITNESS. I did not understand the first question. I will answer it again.

Mr. WALSH. What I want to know is, What time was the order made and what time did the witness make payment on that same day?—A. I will answer the question, "What time in the day, which I understand was the day before Christmas, did you receive the order from Judge Ritter for the payment of your fee?" To the best of my recollection it was before noon and shortly after the time of the final decree. All of the attorneys of record were present at the time he entered the order, as I recall it, allowing the payment of the advance fee of $30,000. Answering the other question, to the best of my recollection, it was some time shortly before noon that I paid Judge Ritter the $2,500.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I submit two questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the first question submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Barkley, as follows:

Why did you make the second payment of $2,000 in cash instead of by check?

A. For the same reason that I did not pay the first $2,500 in cash; that is, the controlling reason was that I did not want to subject Judge Ritter or myself to criticism by giving him a check. I owed him an honest debt and my judgment was that the best way to pay him was in cash and take his receipt in full when I finished paying him. That is just what happened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the second question submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. BARKLEY, as follows:

Why did you cash two $1,000 checks to obtain the $2,000 which you paid Judge Ritter, instead of drawing a single check?

A. I can answer that only by the best of my recollection, I may be wrong about the amount of my deposit there in Miami at the First National at the time, but it is the best of my recollection that I wanted to get as much of that money out of Miami as I could. I may be wrong, but the best of my recollection is that I only had about $1,500 or $2,000—I do not say definitely that that was it—so I drew one check on the Central Farmers, and when I reached Miami I drew the other check for $1,000 on the First National. That is the best of my recollection.

HOURS OF SESSIONS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I send to the desk an order and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the order submitted by the Senator from Arizona.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That until or unless otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, shall be held as follows:

From 12 o'clock noon until 1:30 o'clock p. m., and from 2 o'clock p. m. until 5:30 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think I should state that when the proposal was first submitted to me it provided for sessions from 11 o'clock a. m. until 1:30 o'clock p. m. and from 2 to 5 p. m. After conferring with some of the Members on this side of the Chamber, it was thought that the hour of 11 o'clock would interfere with committee work, which is very important and very abundant at this time; hence I suggested meeting at 12 o'clock, continuing until 1:30 p. m., and from 2 to 5:30 in the afternoon.

I cannot speak for all the Members on this side of the Chamber, but personally I should not object to the first proposal. However, I think the latter is the better of the two. So far only as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the order, though I hope that anyone who feels otherwise will make known his attitude at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think it is the intention of the Senator from Arizona that the 30 minutes' interim between 1:30 o'clock and 2 o'clock be availed of as a recess for the purpose of enabling members of the Court and the managers and counsel to take lunch.

Mr. McNARY. Yes. The only criticism I heard suggested, which I do not think is very serious, is that the proposed afternoon session from 2 to 5:30 is a little long, and may tax the energy of the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent; but that is for them to consider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of the proposed order?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I express simply a personal preference in regard to the time of meeting, and do not, of course, desire to object if a general conclusion has been reached.

Personally I should prefer that the Senate meet at 11:30 and run to 1:30, if the extra half hour is desired, and then from 2 until 5, instead of going on until 5:30 in the afternoon. If that is not agreeable, it is merely a personal

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from California that several appropriation bills are now being considered by the committee every morning from 10:30 until 12; and I hope an order will not be entered immediately to interfere with their consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. I may say to the Senator from Cali-fornia that his suggestion was considered and it was objected to, because it would interrupt and interfere with the work of committees to require Senators to appear in the Senate at 11:30, and it would probably not conserve time. The difficulty of having a quorum in attendance at 11:30 in the customary procedure of the Senate was believed to be so great as not to justify the Senate sitting as a Court meeting at that hour.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I said in submitting the suggestion, I do not wish to object to what has been agreed upon; and if there is substantial agreement among my brothers, and the hours have been fixed, I shall be very glad to assent thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the proposed order as presented. The question is on agreeing to

The order was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Court?

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Court suspend its proceedings and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business; and I should like to make a brief statement as to the reason for the motion. Some Senators have said that they desire an opportunity to present amendments to general appropriation bills which are pending, and that it will be necessary that the amendments be presented today in order that they may be considered by the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter. I make the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas the Colorado Planning Commission, in accordance with whereas the Colorado Flamming Commission, in accordance with the purposes for which it was created, and in the exercise of a part of the powers and jurisdiction conferred upon it, in cooperation with several Colorado representatives of Federal agencies, including the Biological Survey, the Resettlement Administration, and the Forest Service, and with various parties representing the and the Forest Service, and with validus parties investigation as to the desirability and feasibility of the acquirement and use by the people of the United States of a part of the lands in the South Park area in Park County, Colo., for use as a preserve for large game, fish, and fowl, for recreational purposes, and the elimination of nonproductive lands;

Whereas the State of Colorado is vitally interested in said matters not only from the standpoint of the people of the State of Colorado but also from the standpoint of the people of the United States as a whole, and as a matter of conservation of the natural resources and recreational facilities of the Nation;

resources and recreational facilities of the Nation;
Whereas the said Colorado Planning Commission, pursuant to request of the Gevernor, after investigation and full hearing, through its proper committee, has unanimously approved the acquirement of said area for said purposes, and requested the adoption of a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado to the President and to the Congress of the United States, and to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and to the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and to other proper Federal agencies having charge of the matters involved therein;
Whereas the following pertinent and material facts concerning

Federal agencies having charge of the matters involved therein;

Whereas the following pertinent and material facts concerning said proposed projects are known to exist;

First. That the area involved in the proposed project consists of approximately 549,000 acres in Park County, bounded by the Pike National Forest, and that of said area approximately 25 percent, is now owned by the United States Government, 14 percent by the State of Colorado, and 2 percent by Park County, the remainder being privately owned and largely by nonresidents; that the proposed area is located in almost the exact geographical center of the State of Colorado, and through transcontinental railroads and by good State and National highways from all parts of the State easily accessible to the general public.

Second. That it is not now and has not been for a long time possible profitably to farm the area now proposed for a game preserve, and that almost all of the persons and families owning or homestead lands in said area are on relief, and that said persons and families constitute in excess of 85 percent of the entire present relief roll of Park County.

Third. That the area involved is well adapted, by reason of geography, topography, and climatic conditions, for the use proposed, and before the artificial changes made by the homesteader and cattleman was the natural habitat of every species of wild game and a hunter's paradise for the Indians and trappers.

Fourth. That the project will be self-supporting and self-liquidating, and will be of financial benefit not only to the persons whose lands will be acquired but to the entire county of Park and its citizens, and to the State of Colorado generally; that the area is free from any complications of taxation or outstanding bond

Fifth. That in addition to the merits of the project for the use contemplated, the incidental benefits which will result therefrom are very great not only to the State of Colorado but to the entire western country, in that the purchase, acquisition, and use of said area for the purpose contemplated will free to the South Platte River and its tributaries for use below the proposed area throughout the States of Colorado and Nebraska, from sixty to eighty thousand acre-feet of water per annum which is now uneconomically used and wasted in the production of unprofitable crops; that the reasonable value of this water alone is $100 per acre-foot, or from six to eight million dollars.

Sixth. That the conservation of said water and the addition of the water now wasted will not result in the cultivation of any new lands, but will supplement the frequently insufficient and uncertain supply now available for lands having water rights and already highly cultivated and improved and lying from the mouth of the Platte Canyon to the Nebraska line and beyond. Seventh. That practically all of the individual owners of land in the proposed area have signified their willingness to sell their holdings.

Eighth. That the centralized control resulting from the carrying out of this project will be of immense value to the entire area of Colorado lying below the boundaries of said preserve, from the standpoint of sanitation and prevention of contamination of domestic water supply of all cities and towns located on or near the South Platte River, and will, to a large extent, equalize stream flow and prevent peak floods: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That the President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to lend his influ-ence, and the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully ence, and the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to lend its influence, and the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized and urged to give prompt and full consideration and to enact legislation, or otherwise take appropriate action to enable the proper agencies of the Federal Government to acquire, take over, and control said South Park area for said purposes and for a preserve for large game, fish, and fowl, and for the segregation and use of such other parts of said area for purposes most beneficial and for the best interests of the people and Government of the United States and for the people and government of the State of Colorado; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President and to the Congress of the United States, and to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior; and to the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture; and to each of Colorado's Senators and Representatives in the National Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas widespread unemployment still exists throughout our land and only temporary, palliative and uneconomic measures, operating with borrowed money, have been taken to alleviate this condition; and

Whereas we are fully mindful that such measures were neces y and expedient under the desperate circumstances confront-this national administration; and

Whereas we believe that permanent, sound, and fundamental approach to the problem should now be devised to raise the buying power of labor and stabilize industrial balance for the future; and

Whereas there has been developed in Denver, Colo., known as the Beatty prosperity plan, which plan is considered by many economists to be a scientific solution to our economic problems, and is one which does not favor any class or interests above another or seek to regiment labor or industry; and

Whereas we believe the subject matter of this plan is worthy of the earnest consideration of our Chief Executive and National Congress, in an effort on the part of the national administration to amend our Federal income-tax laws, to accomplish a more equitable distribution of wealth. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and the Sei-ate and House of Representatives of the United States Congress is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to give consideration to the said Beatty prosperity plan, a copy of which is hereto attached; be it further Resolved, That copies of this memorial and copies of the said Beatty prosperity plan be set forth in a pamphlet entitled "Industrial Balance Through Tax and Wage Ratio" be forwarded forthwith to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the National Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate

Whereas it has come to the attention of the members of the Thirtieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, assembled in second extraordinary session, that Federal Coordinator of Transportation Joseph B. Eastman has submitted a plan for consolidation of railway terminals and consolidation of railways; and

Whereas said general assembly is opposed to such plan because due consideration is not given to employees and communities in-volved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirtieth general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States be memorialized and urged to prevent the placing in operation of said plan by Coordinator of Transportation Joseph B. Eastman unless due consideration is given to all employees and communities which are affected by said plan; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Colorado Representatives and Senators in the National Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Whereas in the matter of the conservation and development of water, Colorado occupies a position of commanding importance by reason of the following facts:

1. That the State contains within its borders the crest of the Continental Divide, and that in the higher reaches of these mountains are the headwaters of many rivers of importance which flow across the four borders of the State into the Gulf of Mexico on the east and the Pacific on the west;

2. That because of its semiarid climate Colorado has imperative need for the highest and most beneficial use of these waters before they escape across its borders, and that through the development of irrigation works approximately 3,500,000 acres of fertile farm land are now being irrigated from these waters;

3. That this use of waters arising within the State is not largely a consumptive use, but that the greater part of waters used for irrigation returns eventually to the rivers through underground drainage and is available for use in the lower States;

4. That because of changed crop programs due to changing line.

4. That because of changed crop programs due to changing living and industrial conditions, these lands are now in desperate need of additional water supplies, not to provide for the cultivation of new lands but to assure permanent security to these lands which for many years have been and now are being farmed in crops adapted to existing conditions;

5. That the irrigation of lands from the direct flow of the rivers have been additional water and that additional water.

has reached its maximum development, and that additional water supplies henceforth must be secured by the construction of great storage reservoirs to impound the flood stages of the rivers for use during the irrigating seasons, when supplies now available use during the irrigating seasons, when supplies now available are wholly inadequate;

6. That the construction of such reservoirs, in addition to adding to the security of many thousands of people dependent upon these waters for their livelihood, will constitute an important, and probably an indispensable, part of any program for the control of floods on the lower reaches of these rivers or the rivers to which they are on the lower reaches of these rivers or the rivers to which they are tributary;

7. That the laws of Colorado permit the organization of water users competent to contract with the Reclamation Bureau, the Public Works Administration, and other Federal agencies;

8. That there are within the State six major river basins; that a comprehensive plan for the State-wide development of water resources and the elimination of sectionalism is now under way, and that the consummation of such plan by surveys and construction will effectually eliminate all sectional differences among the people of these river basins;

9. That the people of Colorado are not financially able to construct these essential storage works without the aid of the Federal Government, and that the Federal Government, because the element of flood control is a national, rather than a local, problem, can well afford to be just in the distribution of the costs of such works between its own agencies and those water users who will be directly benefited: Now, therefore, be it directly benefited: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the United States Government, through its proper agencies, be requested and urged to give to the conditions herein set forth the most serious consideration; that in any emergency or ordinary program of public works it give all possible aid to the dominant industry of Colorado and to the relief of the menace of recurrent floods on the lower rivers; that the United States Government participate to the fullest possible extent, through its proper agencies, in surveys to determine the present and future water needs of all sections of the State and the best possible method of conserving the waters arising within its boundaries and method of conserving the waters arising within its boundaries and devoting them to beneficial use before they flow across its borders and are forever lost to the people of Colorado; that the United States Government, so far as is consistent with sound public policy and the use of public funds, aid in the construction of such works as are deemed essential to the development herein described, upon such just and equitable terms as may be agreed upon between the Government and all parties concerned; and be it further Resolved, That copies of this joint resolution be sent to all Colorado Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the President of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this joint resolution, duly certified, be forwarded to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively, in Washington, with the request that they be read into the Journals of the said hodies.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States H. R. 11172, known as the Starnes-Reynolds bill, which is a measure authorizing the prompt deportation from this country

States H. R. 11172, known as the Starnes-Reynolds bill, which is a measure authorizing the prompt deportation from this country of criminal and other undesirable aliens and restricting immigration into the United States; and

Whereas there are now in the United States approximately 8,000,000 of aliens, three and one-half millions of whom are in this country illegally; and

Whereas of the many millions of unemployed more than one and one-half millions of those now on public relief and charity and who are costing the State and Federal Governments more than $500,000,000 yearly for support are aliens; and

Whereas the State of Colorado now has within its borders large numbers of criminal and otherwise undesirable aliens, who have become public charges and for whom the State must provide; and Whereas the enactment into law of H. R. 11172, the Starnes-Reynolds bill, would permit the deportation from the State of Colorado of many of the said criminal and otherwise undesirable aliens illegally within the borders of the State: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirtieth general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to enact into law the said H. R. 11172, the Starnes-Reynolds bill, to the end that the State of Colorado, with the other States, may receive the benefits from the operation of said laws; be it further Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded forthwith to the President of the Senate to the Speaker of the House of gress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of the Citizens' Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations Between the United States and the District of Columbia, signed by Edward F. Colladay, chairman, and so forth, Theodore W. Noyes, chairman of its executive committee, and other citizens, being presidents or chairmen of its constituent and cooperating organizations in the District, praying that while the lump-sum payment plan of Federal contribution toward National Capital upbuilding continues as the annual exceptional appropriation practice for the government of the District of Columbia (temporarily substituted by the Congress for the 60-40 definite proportionate contribution plan provided by the unrepealed substantive law of 1922) the amount of the lump-sum payment be substantially increased, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

IMPORT DUTIES ON COTTON AND SILK LACES

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I have today received a number of telegrams from lace manufacturers in my State who are very much disturbed with reports of an impending reciprocal-trade agreement with France, reducing import duties on cotton and silk laces, which, if put into effect, will seriously cripple the lace-making industry and result in hundreds of employees being thrown out of employment in Rhode Island.

Reports of what it is understood will be the new tariff rates in effect upon the agreement taking effect, and what they will mean to my State, are set out in these telegrams, as well as in a telegram I received from the American Lace Manufacturers' Association, with headquarters in New York City, sent by Clement J. Driscoll, of that association, on behalf of the Rhode Island lace manufacturers, as stated.

I ask, Mr. President, that these telegrams be printed in full in the RECORD, with the signatures, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK N. Y. April 3, 1936.

Hon. PETER G. GERRY,

Hon. Peter G. Gerry,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of undersigned lace manufacturers of Rhode Island and at their direction I am forwarding this plea for your assistance in the matter of the proposed reciprocal treaty with France as effective the lace industry. Advice from France indicates French reciprocal treaty will be signed within next few weeks and will contain tariff reduction on laces completely destructive of the proposed treaty committee with will contain tariff reduction on laces completely destructive of our industry. We have supplied reciprocal treaty committee with complete details, but under ruling of committee we can neither confer with its members nor obtain any information. If the treaty is effected with provisions reducing duty on products of 12-point machines to 60 percent and duty on all silk lace products regardless of machines upon which they are made to 65 percent our industry will be completely wiped out. The above rates are as we understand it the rates tentatively agreed upon. If these rates are included in the treaty the lace mills of Rhode Island will undoubtedly be wiped out. The lace manufacturers of Rhode Island direct me to plead with you for assistance. If you desire I shall be glad to confer with you further in Washington at such time as you may direct. This telegram is sent at the request of the following mills: American Textile Co.; Bodell Lace Co.; New England Lace Mills; Seekonk Lace Co., of Pawtucket; Bancroft Lace Co.; Levers Lace Co., Riverpoint Lace Works, of West Warwick; Beattie Lace Works, of Washington; Rhode wood Lace Co.; Washington Lace Works, of Washington; Rhode Island Lace Works, of West Barrington; Central Lace Works; United Nets Corporation, of Central Falls; Richmond Lace Works, of Alton.

Senator Peter G. Gerry, Senate Office Building:

Senate Office Building:

We are much disturbed by reports from France, reference to early conclusion of reciprocal-tariff treaty reducing duty on cotton laces made on 12-point machines to 60 percent and silk laces made on machines of any gage to 65 percent. Unable to obtain information from our officials. French Minister of Commerce predicted in address yesterday early conclusion of treaty. Believe lace industry in this country would be ruined by reduction of duties to above rates. Believe basing of duty on gage machines an impracticable method. an impracticable method.

WARREN, R. I., April 3, 1936.

PETER G. GERRY, Senate Office Building:

We learn from French sources that the French treaty is being put into effect within 2 weeks. If lace tariff has been reduced to 65 percent, as scheduled, it will absolutely prevent American lace manufacturers from competing with French laces. Our 250 employees will be thrown out of work. Please do everything possible to prevent treaty being put into force.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 4430) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 265) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish the Senate with certain information concerning producers (submitted by Mr. Vandenberg on Mar. 23, 1936), reported it with amendments.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4298) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act, as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1745) thereon.

MINNIE C. LAMB

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 277), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1935, to Minnie C. Lamb, widow of Walter C. Lamb, late an assistant clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, less expenses incident to the last illness and the funeral of the deceased, and such personal debts and obligations of the deceased as the financial clerk of the Senate may consider should be paid out

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, subsequently reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MISSOURI WILLIAMS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 267 and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bachman in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 267, submitted by Mr. Ashurst on March 24, 1936, as follows:

Recoived, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1935, to Missouri Williams, widow of the late Octavius Augustus Williams, an employee of the United States Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "to", to strike out "6 months" and insert "1 year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER-ADDITIONAL EXPENSES OF TRIAL

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 272, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read. The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 272, submitted by Mr. ASHURST on March 31, 1936, as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby authorized to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, to defray the expenses of the impeachment trial of Halsted L. Ritter, $15,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for said purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate will proceed to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Marvin L. Sollmann to be postmaster at Anna, Ohio, in place of E. C. Ludwig, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 4438) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to cooperate with local banks in making rehabilitation loans to merchants whose properties were damaged or destroyed by floods during the year 1936; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BONE:

A bill (S. 4439) granting a pension to Adah C. Seed; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 4440) to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) to provide for participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO STATE, JUSTICE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. PITTMAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 12098, the State, Justice, etc., Departments appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed. as follows:

On page 29, line 25, after the words "Secretary of State", insert "$90,000 together with", and on page 30, line 2, after the figures "1936", strike out the words "is continued" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to remain."

On page 27, line 16, to insert the following:

On page 27, line 16, to insert the following:

"For the expenses of participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract, if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses (and by indirect routes and by airplane if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; equipment, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards; entertainment; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State."

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11418) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Russell, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Smith, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. McNary conferees on the part of the Senate.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture has made a preliminary report in response to Senate Resolution 265. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The preliminary report is as follows:

Hon, Ellison D. Smith,

Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: This is in response to the request from

Dear Senator Smith: This is in response to the request from you as chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for a report of the attitude of the Department of Agriculture concerning Senate Resolution 265. This resolution proposes that the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to furnish to the Senate forthwith the name, address, and amount paid to each producer, exceeding $10,000, in each calendar year, under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended.

A preliminary report on the largest payments made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is transmitted herewith. Payments of more than $10,000 have been made in the programs for producers of each of the following commodities: Sugar, cotton, wheat, corn and hogs, tobacco, and rice. In the 1933 cotton program, for example, 46 payments out of a total of 1,031,549 payments exceeded $10,000. The proportion of large payments was much the greatest in connection with the sugar program, because of the extent to which sugar production has become a large-scale of the extent to which sugar production has become a large-scale operation and has become concentrated in the hands of large corporations.

An examination of the different production-adjustment programs and a comparison of the size of payments with the acreages or production on which payments were based shows that the payments per acre or per unit of production, as the case might be, were uniform. The fact that some payments were much larger than others was directly and entirely due to the extent to which control of farm land and producing facilities had fallen into the hands of corporations absentes owners and large operators. This control of farm land and producing facilities had fallen into the hands of corporations, absentee owners, and large operators. This development, in turn, had been due in large part to the crushing effect of low prices of farm products on thousands of small farmers who were squeezed to a point where they lost their lands. The adjustment programs, which were largely designed to preserve the family size farm as an American institution, have, I am glad to say, arrested this alarming development, which had been proceeding at an especially rapid rate in 1931 and 1932.

In order to lift farm prices sufficiently above the ruinous levels.

In order to lift farm prices sufficiently above the ruinous levels of 1932 to enable farmers to hold their lands, it was essential to carry out Nation-wide programs of production adjustment. This obviously would have been exceedingly difficult if not impossible if the largest producers were encouraged to continue with unlimited expansion of production, thus placing the whole burden of reduction, or the alternative burden of low prices, upon the small or average farmers. The only way to include large operators in the program, unless they were to be singled out to be the objects of coercive measures, was to compensate them as well as the other producers on the basis of actual, voluntary adjustments in production. The Adjustment Act did not make a distinction as between large and small producers, although landlords were required to divide their payments with the share tenants and share croppers on their land, and cash tenants were paid the entire

The real significance of these large payments is not in the fact that, in paying uniform rates the Government made payments which varied with the number of acres or units of production involved, but rather the social and economic implications of such concentration of the ownership and control of farm land as had come about previous to the launching of the adjustment programs

Neither the act, nor the farmers using the act, regarded the payments as charity, but as a system of financing a practicable operation to control production and bring about improvement for the whole agricultural industry. One of the hard facts which the farmers in operating their programs had to face was the existence of processor control of large-scale farming units, particularly in the production of sugar and rice. Anyone contending that payments large enough to bring big operators into the programs should not have been made, should be ready to propose either a method of breaking up these large-scale holdings, or a plan of production adjustment which would have worked without their being included.

Whether or not Senate Resolution 265 is adopted, the Department of Agriculture will make available to the Senate and to the public, as soon as the information can be obtained without delaying disbursements authorized by Congress to farmers who in good faith carried out provisions of the production-control programs, a much more comprehensive report than is called for by the

The report of the Department of Agriculture will include a classification of payments as to amounts, showing not only those in excess of $10,000, to which Senate Resolution 265 is confined, but also the number and amounts of large payments in brackets less than $10,000, and the number and amounts of smaller checks.

As to publication of the names and addresses of recipients of checks the Agricultural Adjustment Administration feels that this is a matter of policy which is very properly a prerogative of Congress to determine.

gress to determine.

If the Senate desires a report to include the names and addresses which Senate Resolution 265 proposes to call for; that is, the recipients of checks of more than $10,000; the administration has no objection whatever to furnishing them, in addition to the information it will publish in any event. The Department merely requests time to prepare an accurate report, and wishes the gathering of information to interfere as little as possible with disbursements owing farmers who cooperated in production-control programs.

While the Agricultural Adjustment Administration believes that publication of such information is a matter of policy lying clearly within the prerogatives of Congress, its own view had been that it should not itself publish this information while the payments were being disbursed among farmers.

The Adjustment Administration has received floods of requests and amounts of disbursements. Many of were being disbursed among farmers.

The Adjustment Administration has received floods of requests for names, addresses, and amounts of disbursements. Many of these requests came verbally or otherwise from interests which wished to use the information to exploit the farmers commercially, from creditors who wished to collect debts, or from those who apparently thought they could derive some financial, political, or other personal advantage from possession and use of information concerning payments to individuals.

In some instances, requests were even made for advance information on disbursements, so that those who possessed this knowledge might have their agents ready in the field, prepared to begin exploitation of the farmers as fast as the checks arrived.

Although careful steps were taken for accurate accounting of all funds, partly with a view to ultimate publication of comprehensive information, the Adjustment Administration declined to make contemporary release of names, addresses, and amounts of individual payments, because it did not wish to be a party to the commercial and other exploitation to which farmers, by such a practice, would have been exposed.

Instead the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has made public voluminous reports showing the total amount of payments disbursed in every State and in every county each month. These monthly reports have been released as soon as the information could be compiled, or 4 to 7 weeks after the close of the month covered by the report. In all the principal production-control programs, the county production-control committees, composed of farmers, checked and approved the conditions of payment and the amount of each check disbursed in the county and complete records were checked and approved the conditions of payment and the amount of each check disbursed in the county and complete records were kept by the farmers' committees of all these transactions. They were scrutinized and approved by State committees and audited in Washington.

In the sugar program, carried out under provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment and Jones-Costigan Acts, there were localities in which the actual producer entitled to the payment was a corporation, and where the farmers' committee form of local adminisporation, and where the farmers committee form of local adminstration could not apply. All payments to Hawaiian sugar corporations and the large payment to the corporation operating in Florida referred to later in this report were referred to the General Accounting Office for approval by the Comptroller General before disbursement.

A resolution similar to Senate Resolution 265, except that it would have called for a report on payments above $2,000 instead of $10,000, was introduced in the House in February as House Resolution 462. The House resolution was reported adversely by the House Committee on Agriculture, and the House voted to sustain the adverse committee report.

Approximately 6,900,000 contracts have been signed by producers with the Secretary under the agricultural-adjustment programs. The information concerning payments under these contracts is tabulated on probably about 20,000,000 punch cards.

If the House Resolution had been adopted, and if it were interpreted to require an immediate cross-check of contracts to disclose total amounts over $2,000 paid to producers or landlords having an interest in more than one contract in more than one county or

State, a substantial percentage of machinery and equipment would have been tied up, and checks owing farmers would have been delayed for weeks

To get the information Senate Resolution 265 proposes to ask for, would require somewhat less time because of the smaller number of checks in the bracket above $10,000. Including 3 weeks to run cards through the sorting machines, the information could be assembled within probably 6 weeks without using an average of much over 100 employees for the task, provided the resolution be so worded as not to require a cross-check over county and State lines to show the total amounts paid to the same individual operating in different counties.

Such a report would give a fairly clear picture of relative amounts of payments, and the names and addresses of recipients could be made readily available to the Senate if desired. A report by counties would fail, however, to disclose total amounts paid multiple landlords, such as insurance companies which shared payments with crop-share tenants on the same basis as the crop was shared, or of owners operating farms in more than one county. But while such a report would not disclose this particular information, we wish to point out that the cross-checking of contracts between countles would require the greatest amount of time, and might cause more delay in payments to farmers than the additional information obtained would expressed tental transfer of the contracts the country of the c formation obtained would at present justify.

While it will take some weeks to make a systematic and complete classification of payments by amounts and counties, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration always has exercised special care in checking the larger contracts and, therefore, already has available considerable information in satisfactory form as to the largest payments. Although this information is not all tabulated and has not been checked officially against the records of the 6,900,000 contracts, it still is believed to be sufficiently accurate so far as it goes to answer some of the questions that have been raised can be supplied if the Senate wishes.

I am supplying these facts so far as I have them. The data are not uniform as to commodities, since they are based on records available in the different commodity divisions. Inasmuch as the Adjustment Administration has not up to this time decided to make public names of recipients, they are not included. But the names of recipients of the largest payments cited in this report can be supplied if the Senate wishes.

The most comprehensive records thus far available cover payments made in the 1933 cotton-adjustment program. This has been prepared in table form. It shows the payments classified by amounts up to $10,000 and over, and represents a beginning in the kind of a study we are having made as to the other programs, not only for 1933 but for 1934 and 1935 operations of the adjustment programs. Any kind of a report or break-down of the 1933 cotton payments above $10,000 that may be desired can be quickly supplied.

Out of a total of 1931 540 cotton.

out of a total of 1,031,549 cotton payments under 1933 contracts, 46 were in the bracket above $10,000, and 227 were between $5,000 and $10,000. Of a total of $112,794,039 in payments to all cotton farmers, $818,656, or about seven-tenths of 1 percent, was paid in the bracket above $10,000, and $1,484,194, or somewhat more than 1.3 percent was paid in the bracket between $5,000 and $10,000. The average payment in the highest bracket was $17,797.

The complete table follows, as page 4-A.

Federal loans made to large operators prior to March 4, 1933, including production loans of regional agricultural credit corporations using Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds and seed loans which in 1932 were made to producers under agreements to reduce cotton production 35 percent, were in part secured by the 1933 cotton crop. Therefore the three highest 1933 cotton payments, as well as smaller ones, were made jointly payable to the producers and to the Farm Credit Administration which, on May 25, 1933, had assumed farm credit functions formerly exercised by 25, 1933, had assumed farm credit functions formerly exercised by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Department of Agriculture, and the Federal Farm Board. In this way the Federal Government protected through the 1933 cotton program credit advances made in that and earlier years.

The highest rental payment in the 1933 cotton program was made jointly to the Federal Farm Credit Administration and an Advances company agreed in production of earlier. This pay-

Arkansas company engaged in production of cotton. This payment was for $84,000, and the entire amount was used to pay off a Government loan taken over by the Farm Credit Administration. The next highest rental payment was for $80,000, paid to another Arkansas concern, and the whole amount was paid to the Farm Credit Administration to satisfy a Government loan made in February 1933

The third largest 1933 cotton payment was paid jointly to a Mississippi company and the Farm Credit Administration. As was announced in June of 1933, Oscar Johnston, of Mississippi, nationally known cotton expert, manager of the Federal Cotton Pool and associated since June of 1933 with the Agricultural Adjust-tionally known cotton expert, manager of the Federal Cotton Pool and associated since June of 1933 with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, is president of this company. The payment to this company amounted to $54,200, and the entire sum was paid over to the Farm Credit Administration, joint payee. On February 21, 1933, this company had been granted a Federal production loan of $250,000 through the regional agricultural credit corporation with Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds.

Before checks made jointly payable to Federal lending agencies were released, operators were required to settle with their tenants and croppers, who were entitled to a percentage of the proceeds of the check equivalent to the percentage of the crop shared by each. Large producers, as well as all other producers in the 1933 cotton program, were required to certify in their compliance forms that payments had been shared with tenants and croppers in the manner provided, and the tenants were required to acknowledge that proper settlement had been made. This required the Arkansas company receiving the $84,000 rental payment to share it with 1,125 tenants and share croppers. It required the Arkansas company receiving the $80,000 rental payment to share with 400 tenants and croppers. It required the Mississippi company receiving the third highest payment to share with 1,300 tenants and croppers. The payments were required to be divided between landlord and tenants or croppers as the proceeds of the crop were divided. The Arkansas company receiving the $84,000 payment, and the Mississippi company, chose, as many other producers did, to take their payment partly in cash rental and partly in options on Farm Board cotton at 6 cents per pound.

On the increase of cotton prices above Farm Board values wisch accompanied the 1933 cotton program, the value of options was realizable by producers either by sale or by their use as collateral for Federal loans. If these companies had taken their entire 1933 compensation in cash rental paymen

1933 compensation in cash rental payments instead of partly in options, the amounts of cash rental payments would have been about $56,000 more for the Arkansas company, and about $37,000 higher for the Mississippi company.

The fourth highest cotton rental payment in 1933 was paid to the Mississippi State penitentiary, for a reduction of 3,600 acres in its 1933 cotton acreage. The payment was $43,200. A similar payment of $25,500 was made in 1933 to the Arkansas penal institution.

In the 1934 cotton program the Arkansas company receiving the largest payment in 1933 received $115,700. The property of the Arkansas company receiving the second highest 1933 payment was divided into smaller properties in 1934. The Mississippi company received $123,747 in its 1934 payment.

In general, the 1933 cotton payments averaged higher, when option values were included, than payments in the 1934 and 1935 cotton programs.

cotton programs.

Voluminous and detailed summaries by States have been compiled as to 1933 cotton payments, and are attached hereto in photostat form. Anyone who wishes to study these records can readily obtain from them detailed information concerning the

No such compilation covering the whole agricultural-adjust-ment program is available. However, the following information is submitted as to payments in programs other than cotton.

WHEAT

The largest wheat payment for a single year under the program totaled $29,398.32. This was paid to a California farming concern. Of the sum, which covered the second 1934 and the first 1935 wheat payments, the landlord got $5,870.06 and the tenant, $23,528.26.

The second highest wheat payment was paid to the operator of a number of farms in Washington. Unofficial check shows $26,022.06 paid to cover the second 1934 and first 1935 payments. The third largest payment was made to a California bank, which was the owner-operator of large wheat acreage. The total covering the second 1934 and first 1935 payments was $23,845.22.

There were also payments to a large Montana farmer, operating partly as an owner and partly as a tenant on Indian lands, of $22,325.82, covering the second 1934 and first 1935 payments.

The number of wheat payments, covering the second 1934 and first 1935 installments, which exceeded $10,000 is shown to be seven by preliminary reports, which, however, do not include a cross-check over county and State lines on possible multiple land-

The seven large checks were out of a total number of wheat contracts exceeding 580,000 in 1934. Under the wheat program, cash tenants got the entire payment, and share tenants shared in the payment as they shared in the crop.

CORN-HOGS

There were 19 corn-hog contracts in 1934 on which the total payment was in excess of $10,000. There were 1,155,294 contracts finally accepted under the corn-hog program for that year. There were no corn payments in excess of $10,000. These 19 large hog raisers met all the requirements of the program, and their figures were given a supplementary check here in Washington before any payments were made. In 1935 the hog payments were only two-fifths of those made in 1934, so that only two payments were made in 1935 in excess of $10,000. There were eight 1934 contracts in excess of $16,000. There was one contract between $15,000 and $16,000; two contracts between $14,000 and $15,000; two between $13,000 and $14,000; one between $12,000 and $13,000; three between $11,000 and $12,000; and two between $10,000 and $11,000.

$13,000 and $14,000; one between $12,000 and $13,000; three between $11,000 and $12,000; and two between $10,000 and $11,000.

The largest payment, which exceeded $150,000, was made to a California farming corporation. This farm, like all of the other 19 farms on which the payment was in excess of $10,000, raised and fed out to a large number of hogs on garbage. It is the largest hog farm in the world. Between 5,000 and 6,000 sows farrow two litters of pigs a year. This company has acres of concrete feeding floors and large farrowing houses. They employ a large force of labor who take care of these hogs and clean the pens daily. At times the purchase large quantities of corn and barley to supplement their garbage. There are 445 acres all devoted to buildings, feed lots, roads, and lanes. They maintain a very well equipped office and have fine records, with original sales slips showing the disposal of all hogs which were sold to established packing plants. Like all of the farms through the Corn Belt, these large companies were adversely affected by the low price of hogs during the period 1930-33, and the Government program helped them to stay in business and kept their help employed. This company was paid approximately $157,020, less administrative expenses, on a hog base of 41,872.

The second largest payment was made to a farming company in New Jersey of approximately $49,194.38, less administrative expenses. This concern feeds a great deal of garbage from the greater New York area, and has a large investment in sheds, feed lots, and equipment. All their records were very carefully checked. The hog base was 13,118.

The third largest payment was made to a hog company in California of approximately $22,623.75, less administrative expenses, on a hog base of 6,033 hogs. The fourth largest payment was made to a Massachusetts producer of approximately $19,098.75, less administrative expenses, on a base of 5,093 hogs. The fifth largest payment was made to a California producer of approximately $17,838.75, less administrative expenses, on a base of 5,111 hogs.

As to landlords, they shared payments with share tenants as their interest in the crop was shared. Cash tenants received the entire payment.

TOBACCO

Except for cigar leaf, there were no production adjustment programs for tobacco in 1933.

The total number of contracts in all tobacco programs in 1934 was 288,908. The total amount of payments to producers participating in the 1934 tobacco programs was $43,136,860.08.

The largest 1934 tobacco programs was $43,136,860.08.

The largest 1934 tobacco payment was to a Florida concern operating 49 farms totaling 29,158 acres. The total of 1934 payments to this concern was $41,454. The second largest 1934 payment was to a Connecticut company for $20,530.91. Payments totaling $16,843, $13,263, and $15,450.30 were made, respectively, to one grower in South Carolina and two in Kentucky. The information as to these payments follows in tabular form:

RICE

The rice production adjustment program was in effect only in 1935.

The 1935 rice program offered assistance not only to owner-producers, but to producers operating as tenants on corporation holdings.

The rice program provided for the lumping into a single contract all of an individual's or a corporation's rice operations.

Cooperating share-tenants on these operations received their individual checks in their own names.

Nineteen out of 10,659 contracts (or less than two-tenths of 1 percent) for 1935 amounted to more than $25,000. All of the contracts listed belonged to corporate landlords and canal companies which furnished land and/or water to large numbers of producers on a shore basis. One Louisiana company, for example, operated through 650 share tenants.

Listed below by States are the preliminary records of rice producers whose 1935 adjustment contracts were in excess of $25,000, together with the acreage planted to rice on which those payments

PEANUTS

In connection with the peanut production adjustment program, out of a total of approximately 40,000 contracts, the largest payment was less than $3,000 under the production-adjustment contract.

SUGAR

The sugar program differed from the other programs and involved some payments of much larger amounts than were made in any of the other programs.

The reason for this is that corporate production is more commonly carried on in sugar than in any other kind of agricultural production. This is especially true of sugarcane.

The sugar program was designed to assist producers in continental latted State and the involvement producers for continental latted.

United States and the insular producing regions. To accomplish this purpose it sought to reduce the burdensome surpluses overhanging the American market and stabilize the price to give relief to domestic and insular producers without injuring consumers.

It was essential, in order to do this, to have the cooperation of the

It was essential, in order to do this, to have the cooperation of the principal insular producers, which frequently were corporations.

The benefits of the program to small and large holders of 77,000 beet-sugar contracts and about 10,000 sugarcane contracts within continental United States depended for effectiveness upon surplus reductions in insular regions, where corporate production was most common. For example, all of Hawaii's sugar is produced by only 39 producing concerns, which together produce about 13 percent of all the sugar consumed in the United States.

Under the quota system it would have been possible for the large producers owning mills to expand their production, to the exclusion of the small, independent producer, if the burden of restriction had not been equally distributed through the medium of production-adjustment contracts. In other words, if the production-adjust-adjustment contracts. In other words, if the production-adjustment contract had not been employed, corporation producers could have secured the total benefits of and advantageous price due to quota controls, while the uncompensated burden of restriction would have fallen on small producers.

Although the control system necessitated large payments to cor-porations, whenever such payments were made provisions were included in contracts to require that the program's benefits would included in contracts to require that the program's benefits would be passed on to tenants, sharecroppers, and laborers, so that these classes would share in the results of the program. Hence in these instances the program included prohibition of child labor less than 14 years old, limiting the hours of employees 14 to 16 years old to 8 hours per day, provisions for fixing wages of labor, and to assure payment of wage bills before Government payments were disbursed to the employers.

In addition to other conditions which virtually necessitated offers of contracts to large corporations producing sugar, the Jones-Costigan Act authorized the return to Puerto Rico of processing taxes collected on Puerto Rico sugar and expenditure of these funds either in the form of payments to producers or for the general benefit of agriculture in Puerto Rico. This same provision applied to Hawaii and the Philippine Islands. This meant that in Hawaii, where all sugar production is by corporations, and in Puerto Rico, where it is handled to a large extent by corporations, payments would have to be offered to corporations if production adjustment were to be attempted at all in those islands.

PUERTO RICO

PUERTO RICO

One Puerto Rican producer has been paid $961,064. Payment was made at the rate of $4 per ton on 240,660 tons of surplus sugarcane of the 1934-35 crop in accordance with public notice over a year ago that $4 per ton would be paid to Puerto Rican producers on their cane which, because of the sugar quotas, could not be ground into sugar. not be ground into sugar.

The largest corporation in Puerto Rico, which would have received a considerably larger payment, did not consider that the sugar contract, with its provisions for passing benefits along to labor in higher wages, and the curtailment of production, offered sufficient inducement to the corporation. Hence it refused to sign the contract.

As this report is being written, a preliminary list is available of advance 1935 payments over $10,000 in Puerto Rico. The 1935 advance payment is included in the $961,064 referred to above as the largest sum having been paid to any one corporation. The total payments, however, in most cases could be about five to six times the individual figure given as the advance payment in the following table:

In Hawaii there are only 39 plantation producers, all of them large enterprises. The largest plantation produced approximately 80,000 tons of sugar annually. The checks were all very large, the highest single check being $470,313. In this case the total payments made thus far amount to $862,460.06. The estimated total payments for the life of the adjustment program, however, including one payment still to be made, will amount to $1,022,037.87. This plantation in 1936 produced 1.25 percent of the total sugar consumed annually in the United States and has about 3,000 year-around employees sharing in the benefits of the program.

By the terms of the contract the plantation producers agreed that they would make the necessary reduction in sugarcane on plantation land and not on that of the 3,500 small adherent planters who were paid a share of the benefit payments by the companies.

The owners of these 39 large plantations also agreed that they would bring about "reduction in production required by the contract in such manner as to cause the least labor, economic, and tract in such manner as to cause the least labor, economic, and social disturbance", and they followed out a policy of not reducing the number of workers employed on the several plantations by reason of such reduction in production, or because of any provision of the production-adjustment contract. In addition, the contract included labor provisions which prohibited the employment of children under 14 years of age and limited labor of children between 14 and 16 years of age to 8 hours a day. It also provided that the Secretary adjudicate labor and contract disputes.

Furthermore, the plantation producers inaugurated a bonus-payment plan in which the 50,000 laborers on the plantations participated in payments made to adherent planters. If the adjustment programs had not been interrupted by court action it was estimated that the increase in the annual pay roll would have amounted to between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 a year as a result of this bonus plan. of this bonus plan.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

In the Philippine Islands the checks were disbursed almost entirely to small growers since there are very few companies which grow any cane.

While the foregoing data give, I believe, a comprehensive idea of the largest payments under the adjustment programs, the studies of the programs now begun will within a reasonable time provide much more detailed and voluminous information. Since disbursement of most of the payments under the production-control programs probably will have been completed within the next several weeks, and payments under the soil-conservation program probably will not start so soon, the Adjustment Administration will be in position to devote equipment and personnel to the large task of compilation.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration would appreciate an

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration would appreciate an opportunity to proceed with disbursement of payments still due farmers under the production control programs without the delay which would result from the necessity to devote equipment to an immediate cross-check of all payments over county lines.

From the scope of the information herewith submitted it will be evident that considerable time will be required to compile official and complete reports. The Adjustment Administration requests that it be given time to do this properly so as to utilize equipment when not needed for work in connection with disbursement of payments now due hence evolding a tie up of convertigate.

when not needed for work in connection with disbursement of payments now due, hence avoiding a tie-up of operations.

The public report which the Adjustment Administration will make whether or not Resolution 265 is adopted will give accurate and comprehensive data on payments. Obviously the Congress and the public are entitled to know how public funds are spent so as to be able to judge whether they are spent properly and in accordance with law.

I would be pleased to know whether the Senate interprets the foregoing principle to mean that the Adjustment Administration in preparing its reports should depart from its former policy and publish names of recipients of payments. The summary of payments in the 1933 cotton program shows that a report of recipients of payments over $1.000 would mean publishing a list of 7,014 producers' names merely for this one program for a single year.

Since most of the money will long ago have reached producers and opportunities that publicity would give for high-pressure commercial exploitation of recipients will have largely passed, some of the original reasons for disinclination to make public the names will no longer apply.

From the standpoint of economy it would, we believe, be inad-

SUPPORT OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT-EDITORIAL FROM CHARLESTON GAZETTE

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Not That Dumb", published in the Charleston Gazette of the 4th instant.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette of Apr. 4, 1936] NOT THAT DUMB

A lot of our Representatives in Washington who are seeking so desperately to succeed themselves are yelling themselves purple in the face avowing their loyalty and devotion to the President. The reason is obvious; the President will be the issue this fall and they want to ride into office on his coattails. But regardless of how much they affirm their allegiance, nor how loudly they praise him, they should not make the fatal error of thinking the people of this State are so dumb as to forget one very important thing.

Mr. BITTNER. Now, you asked about the newspapers. The Fairmont Times, in Fairmont, W. Va., is edited by one C. E. Smith. This paper is a daily and has been continuously and consistently against the United Mine Workers of America in this fight. It has favored the coal operators entirely. The paper is published in the city of Fairmont, and has been used as nothing else but a propaganda sheet against the United Mine Workers of America. And, by the way, I have sent for copies of the paper in which they were paying their compliments to this investigating committee and paying their compliments in the usual way, saying that you might fool the people down here in Washington but that no Senate committee can fool the people in West Virginia. That is a general outline of the paper.

The coal operators there—and we will furnish documents if we have them here, or witnesses if necessary, to show that the coal operators there, the Consolidation Coal Co., the Clark Coal Co., the Bethlehem Mines Corporation, the Brady-Warner Corporation, the Jamison Coal & Coke Co., and the New England Fuel & Transportation Co., were paying this gentleman $150 per month for the assistance he has been rendering them. They recently purchased him a home in Fairmont, which home is held under a deed of trust by one E. A. WAR DEBTS-ARTICLE BY PROF. HERBERT WRIGHT

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, Prof. Herbert Wright, of the Catholic University of America, has recently written a very able article discussing the subject of war debts, which I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD as a matter of interest to the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Mar. 29, 1936]

GREEK OFFER ON DEBTS MAY BE HINT OF NEW WAR—SETTLEMENT OF EUROPEAN NATIONS' OBLIGATIONS TO UNITED STATES WOULD PAVE WAY TO FURTHER LOANS, NOW BANNED

(By Herbert Wright, professor of international law, the Catholic University of America)

University of America)

Is the offer of Greece to make partial payments on its debt to the United States the camel's nose under the tent for a reconsideration of the whole question of intergovernmental debts? Is it the prelude to another European war? Will the United States be called upon to underwrite the expenses of the sanctions invoked against Italy in its dispute with Ethiopia?

Many discerning observers see such possibilities in the Greek offer, and it may therefore be well to examine the factors involved in such possibilities. The whole question of war debts was complicated by the Hoover 1-year moratorium of June 20, 1931, and by the fact that the debtors have always maintained, notwithstanding the consistent and persistent opposition of the United States, that there is an absolutely essential connection between war debts and war reparations. All the debtors accepted President Hoover's moratorium except Yugoslavia, which suspended payments outright. The moratorium, however, was only a stopgap measure and did not at all solve the problem of financial unrest.

LAUSANNE CONFERENCE HELD

On June 16, 1932, the representatives of Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain, Italy, and Japan met at Lausanne to consider measures for the improvement of the world economic situation, one of the main factors in which was the question of German reparations. The date originally proposed had been January, but delay was caused by negotiations between Great Britain and France, who had strongly divergent views on the question of reparations. The United States was precluded from association with the conference, since the Congress in December had passed a resolution that "it was against the policy of Congress that any of the indebtedness of foreign countries to the United States should be in any manner. of foreign countries to the United States should be in any manner canceled or reduced."

on July 8 it was announced that an agreement had been reached abolishing reparations, subject to the delivery by Germany to the Bank for International Settlements of 5-percent redeemable bonds (with 1-percent sinking fund) to the amount of 3,000,000,000 gold marks ($714,286,000). The bonds were to be held by the bank as trustee for 3 years, after which they might be negotiated and placed in the open market at a price not lower than 90 percent, though it was never expected that these bonds would be issued in full.

The agreement was helded as the beginning of a new speech in would be issued in full.

The agreement was hailed as the beginning of a new epoch in post-war history, but it was soon (July 14) revealed that the creditor powers on July 2 had joined in a separate "gentlemen's agreement" to the effect that the settlement would have final effect only after ratification by the creditor powers and that such ratification would not follow "until a satisfactory settlement has been reached between them and their own creditors", that is, the United States. In case no such settlement could be arranged, "the legal position is that which existed before the Hoover moratorium."

LAUSANNE AGREEMENT DROPPED

The Acting Secretary of State of the United States, on July 9, while expressing his pleasure "that, in reaching an agreement on the question of reparations, the nations assembled in Lausanne have made a great step forward in the stabilization of the economic situation in Europe", promptly gave notice that "on the question of war debts owing to the United States by European governments there is no change in the attitude of the American Government", which was that war debts and reparations were two distinct questions. The Lausanne agreement, therefore, was dropped, at least temporarily.

After the expiration of the moratorium five governments (Czechoslovakia, Great Britain, Italy, Latvia, and Lithuania) made "token" or partial payments as evidence of their good faith, while the rest claimed inability to pay or asked for a postponement. Finland alone maintained the full payment of its obligations. These "token" payments were considered by the United States Government as relieving the debtor nations, taking them from the position of being defaulters. On June 14, 1933, the President issued a statement in which he said:

"In a spirit of cooperation I have, as Executive, noted the representations of the British Government with respect to the payment

In a spirit of cooperation I have, as Executive, noted the representations of the British Government with respect to the payment of the June 15 installment, inasmuch as the payment made is accompanied by a clear acknowledgment of the debt itself. In view of those representations and of the payment, I have no personal hesitation in saying that I do not characterize the resultant situation as a default."

NEW STATEMENT IN NOVEMBER 1933

Again, on November 7, 1933, when another installment on the debts was about to come due, President Roosevelt issued another statement, in which he said:

"In view of these representations, of the payment, and of the impossibility at this time of passing finally and justly upon the request for a readjustment of the debt, I have no personal hesitation in saying that I shall not regard the British Government as in default." default.

Shortly before the next installment was due the Congress, on April 13, 1934, passed the so-called Johnson Act, making it unlawful for any person in the United States, whether an American citizen or not, to "purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government * * * issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government * * * except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness", so long as there is default in the payment of such "obligations or any part thereof.'

A few days after the passage of this act the Secretary of State requested from the Attorney General an opinion upon various questions pertaining to the act. In the course of his reply, dated May 5, 1934, the Attorney General called attention to the statements of the President quoted above and also to the fact that these statements by the President were accepted in good faith by Great Britain and certain other countries.

TOKEN PAYMENTS DEFAULT

He also pointed out that Mr. McReynolds, who had charge of the Johnson Act during its consideration by the House of Representatives, was apparently of the same view as the President, and that "the President, by signing the bill, participated equally with the House of Congress" and his view of the meaning of the words contained in the act was "of great significance." He therefore concluded that the five countries mentioned above were not at that time "in default under the terms of the act."

The clear implication of this opinion, although not stated in so many words, is that governments making "token" payments thereafter would be considered in default. This implication is borne out by a ruling of the Department of State, on May 10, 1934, that any "token" payments in the future would constitute default. any "token" payments in the future would constitute default. Accordingly Great Britain, on June 4, 1934, although prepared to continue token payments "on the assumption that they would again have received the President's declaration that he would not consider them in default", announced the suspension of all wardebt payments because of their understanding "in consequence of recent legislation no such declaration would now be possible."

About a week later Secretary of State Hull wrote to Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, as follows:

"The Attorney General has advised me that, in his opinion, the debtor governments which, under the rulings of his office of May 5, 1934, are not at present considered in default because of partial payments made on earlier installments, would have to pay only the amount of the installment due June 15, 1934, in order to remain outside the scope of the act."

DECLINE PAYMENT RESUMPTION

But Great Britain declined to resume payments and the other nations (except Finland) followed Britain's lead. Her position was that "the primary question for settlement is the amount that should be paid, having regard to all circumstances of these debts." This means that refunding arrangements now in force were made by Great Britain at a time when she expected substantial reparations payments from Germany, and that they should be revised in the light of the changed situation caused by the virtual scrapping of reparations payments at Lausanne.

tions payments from Germany, and that they should be revised in the light of the changed situation caused by the virtual scrapping of reparations payments at Lausanne.

With regard to the Greek debt, the official records disclose that on February 10, 1918, an agreement was made with Greece by the Governments of Great Britain, France, and the United States providing for advances of approximately $48,000,000 to be made to Greece under certain conditions. As a result of this agreement the United States made advances to Greece in 1919 and 1920 aggregating $15,000,000. From time to time Greece has urged certain claims for additional advances, but without success. For instance, in the latter part of 1925 and the early part of 1926, two special commissioners from Greece consulted with the World War Foreign Debt Commission, created by an act of Congress of February 9, 1922, with this end in view, but their efforts were unsuccessful.

The Greek Government maintained that there existed a commitment to them of the remainder of the original $48,000,000. Having received $15,000,000 up to that time from the United States, they claimed the remaining $33,000,000. But Secretary Mellon pointed out that the original commitment was a joint undertaking between France, Great Britain, and the United States, and since France had failed to advance any funds and Greece had released Great Britain without the consent of the United States, the United States was legally and morally released from any obligation or liability to make the additional payment of $33,000,000.

$12.167.000 ADVANCE TO GREECE

The World War Foreign Debt Commission, therefore, claimed that there was no legal obligation for the United States to make the additional advance and that a proposal for such an advance would require authorization by the Congress. On February 19, 1929, the Congress passed the bill authorizing such an additional advance and on May 10, 1929, $12,187,000 was actually advanced to Greece. At the end of the calendar year 1929 the total indebtedness of Greece to the United States was $32,231,000, representing 10 percent of the total foreign indebtedness of Greece. Since that time no payments have been made on principal or interest. time no payments have been made on principal or interest.

time no payments have been made on principal or interest. Hence it caused considerable surprise when, on February 5, 1936, the press dispatches carried the item that "the first break in the international impasse created by the wholesale war-debt defaulting by European nations 2 years ago, came yesterday when the Treasury Department received an offer from Greece of a partial settlement of its two 1936 installments. * * Greece has expressed willingness to pay 35 percent of the coupon value of payments due May 10 and November 10. Demetrios Sicilianos, the Greek Minister, it was announced, has communicated to the State Department an offer to pay $76,272 of the $217,920 due on each of those dates."

After mature consideration of this substantial offer, Secretary Hull, on February 8, acepted the Greek offer, although announcement of the acceptance was not made for nearly 2 weeks. An Associated Press dispatch in the morning papers of February 21, reported that it was announced on the preceding evening in authoritative quarters that the United States had accepted the Greek offer, "without prejudice to the contractual rights of the United States."

HINT AT ULTERIOR MOTIVES

This reservation of contractual rights seems to hint at the This reservation of contractual rights seems to hint at the possibility of ulterior motives in the Greek offer. At any rate, the question naturally arises, whence comes this sudden good feeling and good faith on the part of a debtor government which has been in default for several years? Has Greece unexpectedly entered upon an era of prosperity, alone of all the defaulting nations? Greece must know that the Johnson Act is still on the statute books and that the ruling of the Attorney General on "token" payments still holds. Certain it is that the United States waived no "contractual rights." How does it happen that, while the debtor nations (always excepting Finland) have generally followed the lead of Great Britain in defaulting on the payments due, now Greece takes the lead in offering a substantial payment upon the installments due?

Is there any connection between this Greek offer and the

Is there any connection between this Greek offer and the alleged secret agreement concerning a disposition of the Dodecanese Islands somewhat favorable to Greece, if military sanctions become necessary against Italy and Greece throws in her lot with Italy's opponents? Do the great powers of Europe feel the pinch of economic and financial sanctions against Italy and desire to have the entire debt question reconsidered and settled in order to make possible the floating of additional loans in the United States? Is the offer by Greece, therefore, merely the prelude to the reopening of discussions with the United States concerning a general settlement of all the war debts?

Color is lent to such a conclusion by the fact that on February 17 general settlement of all the war debts?

Color is lent to such a conclusion by the fact that on February 17
Senator W. Warren Barbour, Republican, of New Jersey, introduced a bill (S. 4031) to create a commission to enter into negotiations with respect to the refunding of certain obligations of foreign governments held by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance. A little over 2 weeks later Senator WILLIAM G. McAdoo, Democrat, of California, who was Secretary of the Treasury when many of the debts were contracted, introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 222), a little more carefully drafted, for the same purpose, except that it was for "the settlement of certain debts" of these foreign governments.

PROVIDES FOREIGN DEBT BOARD

The McAdoo measure in many respects follows the wording of the The McAdoo measure in many respects follows the wording of the Barbour measure. The chief differences are that it provides for a Foreign Debt Commission of 9 members (3 Senators appointed by the Vice President, 3 Representatives appointed by the Speaker, and 3 members not connected with the Government and appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate) instead of a World War Debt Refunding Commission of 5 members (the Secretary of the Treasury and 4 members appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate). The McAdoo measure authorizes $100,000 for the expenses of the Commission and in general provides for a more independent and more powerful commission, although both measures require that any agreement reached with a foreign government can become effective only after approval by the Congress. approval by the Congress.

approval by the Congress.

Neither measure has won much approval. Senator Borah is known to be opposed to any such measure, while Senator Pittman, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, on March 8 was reported as frankly "not in favor of the resolution." He maintained that Great Britain was more concerned over nonpayment of her war obligations than the United States because she realized she could not regain her pre-war creditor position while herself a delinquent. He represented it as the position of the United States Government, with which he was in agreement, "that if there was to be any further consideration of the matter, it should be at the request of the debtors, not the creditor."

It should be pointed out in passing that the new neutrality law recently enacted prohibits loans to any nation at war, so that Italy would be effectively restrained from floating new loans in the United States if Italy removes herself from the operation of the Johnson Act by meeting the payments due on her debt at present

United States if Italy removes herself from the operation of the Johnson Act by meeting the payments due on her debt at present or even if a new settlement of the existing debts were made in the face of the Johnson Act. On this score, the Greek offer might be considered the opening wedge in a new financial sanction against Italy, by opening to the sanctionist nations the loan markets of the United States closed to Italy by the neutrality law.

The real purpose, however, of the Greek offer was disclosed, when Greek Minister Sicilianos let the cat out of the bag in an address before the Order of Ahepa in Washington February 24. In commenting on the friendly relations between the two Govern-address before the Order of Ahepa in Washington February 24. In commenting on the friendly relations between the two Governments, he felt the necessity of giving some reason for the unexpected action of the Greek Government. He said that the Greek Government was "prompted by its capacity to pay", although it is a notorious fact that Greece suffered severely when Great Britain went off the gold standard on September 21, 1931, that Greece herself was forced to abandon the gold standard on April 25, 1932, and that, as recently as May 10, 1935, the Greek Parliament temporarily suspended the service on the foreign and internal loans. Therefore there is some reason to believe that Greece is not appreciably more able to pay now than formerly.

"As a result of the offer and acceptance", he continued, "every May and November of each year, and until world conditions improve or a definite settlement is reached, Greece will pay to the United States $76,000." Perhaps he said more than he intended when he used the words "until * * a definite settlement is reached", but at any rate they show what was in the back of his mind—namely, "a definite settlement."

This is not the place to discuss the question of whether the United States should cancel, or virtually cancel, the war debts in return for some material concession looking toward real international peace based upon justice. Recent developments in Europe, with France and Germany armed to the teeth and Great Britain embarking upon an ambitious armament program, rather impel one to ask, is the Greek offer the camel's nose under the tent to drag the United States into underwriting "another war to Britain emparking upon an amount and another the impel one to ask, is the Greek offer the camel's nose under the tent to drag the United States into underwriting "another war to end war"? Perhaps there is need of another Laoccoon, who, when the Grecian horse was being introduced inside the walls of Troy, exclaimed, "I fear the Greeks, even when bearing gifts"!

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, while the Senate was sitting as a Court of Impeachment a few moments ago, an order proposed by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was entered to the effect that the Court of Impeachment resume its sessions at 12 o'clock noon daily until further order. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess in legislative session.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, to meet, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, tomorrow, Tuesday, April 7, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in whom are centered our aspirations, our hopes, and our longings, be very near us, impressing us with the seriousness and the duty of life. Take away from the individual heart all guile, that we may have the ideal government, the ideal home, and the ideal church. The Lord God bless and preserve the defenders of our Republic who are in their ranks today, moving before the eyes of men. Grant that the freedom which has been gained and the institutions founded may be carried on to greater achievements; may our citizens honor and reverence them. Establish the work of our hands, the work of our hands, establish Thou it. In our Redeemer's name.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 3, 1936, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the Secretary of the Senate communicate to the House of Representatives an attested copy of the answer of Halsted L. Ritter, district judge of the United States for the southern district of Florida, to the articles of impeachment, together with supplementary rules of trial.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 11663. An act to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. ASHURST, Mr. King, and Mr. Borah to be the conferees on the part of the

There was no objection.

PUBLICATION OF TRIPLE A PAYMENTS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Agricultural Committee of the House I made the prevailing motion to report adversely on H. R. 426, introduced by our colleague from New York [Mr. TABER]. He made this resolution the subject of a recent speech on this floor. The resolution called for the name and address of every person or firm receiving more than $2,000 in any one calendar year by reason of benefits granted under the allotment plan of the Triple A. When the resolution was considered by the committee I thought it called for a useless expenditure of time and money. I still think so, though events have moved swiftly since I asked for time to reply to my colleague. During the intervening week the Senate Committee on Agriculture has prepared a resolution calling for the names of those who have received payments of $1,000 or over each year and finally for a list of those over $10,000. Secretary Wallace this morning gives to the press a statement of the largest payments. He adds the information that a much more detailed report will be forthcoming and again sets forth his basic objection to publicity for payment, in that it would amount to a betrayal of confidence, and that it is his opinion that it would be unwise to give returns to the public. He asks why any person except the cooperating farmer should receive benefit from knowledge of his transactions with the Government. I do not entirely share that feeling. I have no objection to publicity when it is helpful or if it will prevent fraud and favoritism. I believe that most people in each community generally know about how much their neighbors have been paid by the Government. My objections to the proposed resolutions of both Senate and House are founded on very different reasoning. The Secretary's statement shows clearly that there is nothing to conceal. unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill The payments were legitimate under the law enacted by this Congress and they were uniform for acre or unit of production. It is fundamentally important that we should have all facts in regard to the operation of the law which will help toward constructive legislation for the future. That is the only reason we are entitled to ask that time and money be spent to give us such information.

I earnestly hope that the currently published statement about the largest payments will not divert attention from the real benefits of the Triple A program to the average farmer, especially the wheat- and hog-control programs. I believe it is urgently important that the future program for the noncommercial farmer should not be jeopardized by feeling engendered by these reports.

I recall the condition of the country before this act was passed, the spirit of rebellion in rural America, the feeling of resentment and of helplessness which indicated the possibility of agrarian revolution. This has been quelled, debts have been paid, hope has been renewed. I am asking to have printed at the end of these remarks, and as part of them, the story of one such farmer, my neighbor, as a reminder of the situation before the enactment of the law and the value of the act. His statement reflects the attitude of 90 percent of the beneficiaries.

This morning's statement by the Secretary, and these pending resolutions, offer convincing evidence of the need of intensive study of the agricultural situation on the part of every Member of Congress, preparatory to framing permanent agricultural legislation which shall, if possible, provide a more equitable division of benefits.

I know little of the sugar and cotton situation, as it is outside my personal experience. Yes; I have read about it, and I have heard about it in the Agricultural Committee for hours at a time, but I still feel that I do not have a solution for that problem. Two things have been impressed upon my mind in connection with it. First, it raises the question, brought to the front also by large payments to insurance companies and banks, of dangerous concentration of wealth. The control of land is the control of our means of existence. When it is highly concentrated certain evils always follow from such concentration and control. Certainly the condition of the sharecroppers and tenant farmers growing some of the commodities included under the Triple A amounts to farm slavery. Those conditions are intolerable, and every man who learns of them must be convinced of his duty to work toward a revision of the program which will do justice to these submerged laborers. I have for many years looked with fear upon foreclosures which brought many farms into the hands of few owners, usually absentees. The Triple A has done much to prevent further corporation control of farm land. Certain results of such concentration are inevitable. These powerful owners, who largely control legislation, will shift the tax burden entirely from the land. Witness the struggle for a sales tax! How helpless the small farmer has been under the injustices of high taxes, which he was powerless to shift! The most evil result is tenancy and the losses to citizenship. Yes; these disclosures raised the question of how to deal with such a problem in the future, and how to prevent further concentration of wealth and land holdings.

There are just a few points which I feel it important to drive home, especially to the minds of those who are not farmers, and have not been deeply concerned with the farm problem. I also wish to say some things about the benefits, other than monetary, which have accrued to the Nation through the operation of that epoch-making experiment in recovery legislation—the Triple A. I feel sure we all agree that there was no corruption and no intention of granting special privilege in the administration of that act. We are convinced by the Secretary's message that the Department has nothing to conceal, and that it is not only futile but contrary to the public welfare to try to make Triple A payments a campaign issue or propaganda against the present administration.

The second point I would like to make, as forcefully as possible, is that the cooperation of the big operators was absolutely essential. If they had not been allowed to come into the program, they would have ruined it, because it was a program based upon controlled production. If they had remained outside the program, they would have usurped the markets and privileges yielded by the small farmers and the noncommercial farmers for the sake of the common good. There is no use probing into accounts with suspicion. There is no particular point in the gradation of payments at which it can be said special privilege begins. The big operators were, under the law, entitled to their payments. The only question in our minds should be the handling in the future of this very serious problem.

The other point I wish to emphasize is the folly of spending time and money to collect data which can benefit neither the Government nor the farmer. The act is no longer on the statute books. Studies of an entirely different character are urgently needed in order that we may proceed with constructive legislation. Let us approach this matter without political partisanship and let us free our minds of prejudice as we discuss the important questions of limitation of payments, the properly guarded cooperation of large landholders, publicity for payments in the future, the fundamental issue of controlled production, the cost of the program, and the returns from the program. I cannot, in this short time, cover all these subjects adequately, but I can suggest a line of thought, and I request the privilege of revising and extending my remarks so that I may make them available for others who are deeply concerned over these problems.

LIMITATION OF PAYMENTS

A few days ago I voted on the floor of this House for what was known as the Hope amendment to the soil erosion and conservation bill which is now the new farm law. The Hope amendment would have limited benefit payments, in the future, to $2,000 to any firm or individual, in any one calendar year. The reason I was willing to support the limitation of payments in the new bill is that we have moved forward in our recovery program and are enabled to build on our experience under the former act. The Triple A was definitely designed to control production and to put money into the hands of producers who agreed to withhold lands from cultivation for the common good, during a crisis. The new act has a different objective, looking to the future, as well as to the present, in initiating a policy of soil conservation. Even if we are agreed that a benefit limitation should have been in the former act, it is too late to talk about it now. No good can come from the necessarily large expenditure required, solely to prove that a mistake was made or to satisfy curiosity, or to furnish political propaganda against the framers of that emergency act. Any valuable lessons drawn from that experience may well be used in formulating permanent legislation to take the place of that which dragged us from the depths of 1932. Our people are entitled to full value received from every cent of governmental expenditure. I can see no value to the farmers, nor the Government, in going into the past and attempting to draw attention to possible weaknesses of an act which is now history, because the Supreme Court of this land held, by a decision of six to three, that the Triple A Act was unconstitutional.

COOPERATION OF LARGE LANDHOLDERS ESSENTIAL

Under the old Triple A law, a landlord, whether a corporation, bank, insurance company, or an individual farm owner, had the right to collect the landlord's share of the allotment money. The landlord had his rights in the benefit payment on land farmed by tenants, the renter also getting his share of the Government's payment. There are insurance companies which own thousands of acres of farming land taken from farmers through foreclosures brought about by the depression and now, happily, decreasing under our farm-credit system and the Triple A. Such a company might own some thousands of acres of land in Minnesota, other thousands in Iowa, and so on throughout the Nation wherever they had their widely spread farm-mortgage loans. That insurance company would receive for each individual farm it owned a payment for the landlord's share of the land entered under the allotment plan. Inevitably that company's checks, in the aggregate, would be large and they would be large in any individual county in which it owned a large number of acres. Had such companies been barred from benefits under the original Triple A Act by an amendment similar to the Hope amendment, they would not have cooperated. Their entire acreage would have been planted to corn, wheat, or cotton, as the case might be, thus defeating the program and giving holders of extensive acreage, or numerous farms, an advantage which would have enriched them and ruined cooperation. There are undoubtedly many sections of the United States where large acreages are held by corporations, as well as individuals, and on these holdings they did receive fat checks; but, I repeat, their cooperation was necessary to a successful control program.

This large-scale operation is the type of organization which prevails in sugar production. It is true that benefits are passed on to tenants and laborers, but the processor or corporation owner probably received too much. I was shocked to read of the amounts paid to land owners in our insular possessions, but I know no remedy except to spread ownership by just such measures as the Triple A.

THE PROGRAM WAS COOPERATIVE AND DEMOCRATIC

The Triple A Act of May 1933 was locally managed and enforced. Programs were conducted in almost 3,000-actually 2,951—of the 3,071 counties of our country. The farmers in the 96 percent of cooperating counties very certainly enjoyed a large measure of security under the act, but indirect results undoubtedly were felt by the noncooperating 4 percent in the "marginal" counties which were not concerned with production of basic crops. In the cooperating counties the farmers organized, elected their own officials, and appointed their own committees. Instructions and blanks were furnished by the Department of Agriculture. The farmers who accepted the terms of the contract made out their applications which were presented to the committees composed of neighboring allottees. The statements for crops grown or animals raised for the previous 5 years, upon which the benefits were based, were furnished to these committees and carefully studied by the members. Such statements were always supported by sufficient evidence. The farms were then surveyed under committee supervision. The amount to be paid to each allottee was calculated by the local committee and approved by a State committee. It was again checked by auditors in Washington. Whether Jim Jones drew $700 or $2,700 was not figured out in Washington. That was done locally by farmers who knew his land, his crops, and his business reputation. If there had been any fraud or wrong, it would have been discovered and checked by the local committee and its advisors. It is inconceivable that farmer groups and extension agents throughout the country would have entered into any conspiracy to defraud our Government. Secretary Wallace and his assistants had nothing to do with details and enforcement, except as arbitrators settling disputes and as paymasters. The work was supervised by county agents under the extension service of the agricultural Departmental consultation with farm leaders and farmers was a progressively important feature of Triple A policy When the first emergency programs were formulated, pressure of time left little opportunity to sound out the sentiment of individual farmers, but advisory delegations of farm leaders took a vital part in shaping the act of 1933. As soon as that act came into operation, the Democratic basis of the program was broadened by the formation of the aforementioned county control associations for the basic commodities for which voluntary control programs were undertaken. The executive committees of these associations became the administrators of the details of the program. There were approximately 4,600 such associations in operation in 1935.

In addition to their county control associations, farmers had a further opportunity for the democratic expression of opinion in the referenda, which provided for direct polls of producers of five of the basic commodities. Six referenda were held in 1934 and 1935 among producers of wheat, cotton, tobacco, corn, and hogs, resulting in a vote for continuance of production-control measures varying from 67 to more than 95 percent of the total. The total vote of signers and nonsigners cast in these referenda was 4,288,510. Continuance of production-control measures was favored by 3,707,642 voters.

Agricultural history affords no better example of real cooperation than the enforcement of the Triple A Act of May 1933. In fact, I have stated on this floor that the value to the farmers in teaching them cooperation was worth all that it cost. This experience of acting together in community and county groups, functioning in a national program, was shared, between 1933 and 1936, by at least half of the Nation's six and one-half million farmers. Wonderful, far-reaching, and permanently effective must be the results of this real achievement, which marks an epoch in our social history.

PUBLICITY FOR LISTS OF BENEFICIARIES

The question of giving out information regarding payments received by individuals who signed the contracts under the Triple A was often considered by the Department. From the beginning the Administration has held that the individual contract signer was entitled to protection from those who might make unethical use of the information if it were made public. The contracts were an agreement between the Secretary of Agriculture and the contract signers, and were held in confidence except to the county committees and the officials in charge. The Administration felt that they should not expose the individual records to possible commercial or other exploitation by giving out contract data for the press. This definite policy was announced by Administrator Davis on April 15, 1935, when he clearly stated that only cooperating governmental agencies, such as the Internal Revenue Service, should have access to the records of the county productioncontrol associations. I repeat, I do not fear publicity. The strongest objection to a detailed report at this time is the fact that such a demand would retard the work of making payments now due the farmers, and would take money needed for more important things. Surely we all agree that we should not interrupt the orderly procedure upon which farmers are dependent. My offices has each year a flood of letters asking investigation of delayed payments. These delays work great hardship on those who have depended upon prompt receipt of the pledged funds, and are costly to participants. Indeed, my criticism would be directed toward that defect in the system which has been responsible for the postponement of payments expected and taken into account when farmers were making financial arrangements. The great expense involved in the task of segregating, by amounts and recipients, payments on over 3,000,000 contracts would seem to be entirely unjustifiable. It would be necessary for the Department to identify related agencies, and there would be endless investigation, resulting only in further wrangling over operations closed and finished.

There is involved no question of integrity, possibly some question of judgment, and certainly a question of future procedure. Some now seeking the information which would be so costly failed to suggest publicity or limitation when the act was under discussion. I have investigated this matter in some detail, and as I have learned of the time and staff requirements for such a piece of work I have become convinced that it would be entirely without general benefit to persist in this proposal.

OBVIOUS REASONS FOR DEMANDING PUBLICITY

Our vehement and forceful colleague from New York and the inquiring Senators possibly have not considered all aspects of this matter. Some of them are so intent on making campaign issues they surrender their judgment and fairness to party necessities. We all know how hard it is for our friends in opposition to formulate a campaign, and we do not begrudge them a few issues. We only ask that they shall not unreasonably interfere with the rights of others not parties to this dispute and just emerging from an economic battle in which they have been terribly wounded.

Did our New York colleague ask for an investigation when Hoover's Farm Board dumped a half billion into a so-called solution of the farm problem and practically wasted all of it? Did our colleague demand a hauling out of old figures in times when there were four thousand million dollars drained out of the United States Treasury by income-tax refunds to big corporations? No; his party was deaf to all pleas. Their inquiring minds were not then awakened. It makes a great deal of difference whose ox is being gored. To make political capital, to retard the work of getting out benefit payments to those who have earned them, to try to make sentiment against the farmers' friend who now lives in the White House—these are the reasons for House Resolution 426.

Some of our colleagues on the other side question the sincerity and judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture in this matter. I want to say of the able man who holds that position that the farmers of this country have never had in that high office a more sympathetic friend and a more devoted and cooperative leader. Honest, upright, hard working, believing thoroughly in cooperation, he has carried out his family tradition for public service. He sees clearly the dangers which threaten our civilization through forcing farmers to peasantry. He seeks action which will permanently improve the farm outlook.

COST OF THE TRIPLE A

The total expenditures under the Agricultural Adjustment Act from its inception May 12, 1933, through January 31, 1936, were approximately $1,487,000,000. About forty-four millions of this amount were disbursed in the form of processing-tax refunds and need not be considered here. Of the $1,443,000,000 remaining, approximately one thousand one hundred and ten million has been disbursed to farmers as rental and benefit payments under production-adjustment contracts. There has been expended under the surplus removal, drought relief, and disease eradication programs, together with the trust-fund operations, an additional $252,000,000. The balance of approximately $81,000,000 was used for administrative expenses.

The processing and related tax collections made during the period from May 12, 1933, to January 31, 1936, total $969,000,000, and after the deduction of forty-four millions for tax refunds, there is a balance of approximately $925,-000,000, which represents net tax collections. The net processing-tax collections are slightly more than 83 percent of the amount disbursed in the form of rental and benefit payments, and approximately 68 percent of the disbursements under Agricultural Adjustment Administration programs, exclusive of administrative expenses. The net tax collections represent about 64 percent of the $1,443,000,000 expended under programs and for administrative expenses by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The administrative expenses represent about 5.6 percent of the $1,443,000,000 in disbursements.

The amount expended by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, over and above the amount derived from processing taxes, has been made available through various appropriations. Approximately, the difference between the amount paid as rental and benefit payments to farmers, and the amount collected in processing taxes, is represented by taxes that were impounded, due to court decisions, since July 1935, and up until the time of the Supreme Court decision in the Hoosac Mills case. Had the normal collection of taxes been made during this period, the amount paid to farmers, plus administrative expenses, would have been approximately offset by the total amount of tax collections.

Never was there a more satisfactory return for money collected for a specific purpose than from funds collected under the Triple A law through processing taxes.

RETURNS FROM THE TRIPLE A PAYMENTS

The Triple A plan worked when help was needed. It put the farming world on its feet, and that prosperity stimulated the Nation. The present hopeful outlook is, then, due to this emergency legislation which served its purpose. Great changes have taken place in the agricultural situation during the past 3 years. We have had reported to us the higher prices paid farmers, the gains in railway-freight traffic, 38.8 percent in the first year of the program; increased demand for goods used principally by farmers, 75.1 percent; and a gratifying improvement all along the line in industry and commerce.

Cash income from farm production in the years 1932-35, including benefit payments, is estimated by the Department as follows:

Year	Cash income including benefits	Increase over 1932	Index of prices paid	Increase in pur- chasing power over 1932
1932 1933	$4, 377, 000, 000 5, 409, 000, 000 6, 267, 000, 000 6, 900, 000, 000	Percent 24 43 58	107 109 123 125	Percent 21 25 35

The magnitude of this operation is shown by the following table giving the number of adjustment contracts accepted by the Secretary of Agriculture, through January 6, 1936, by commodities and by years:

CONTROLLED PRODUCTION FUNDAMENTAL

The object of the Triple A Act was not only to pay benefits to farmers but also to control surplus agricultural production. This means control of the supply of those commodities of which we produce annually an exportable surplus and a heavy carry-over. Many believed, and still believe, that no successful farm program can be worked out unless production is controlled. The control or removal, through subsidy, of that burdensome surplus must now be sought through other plans. The problem presses for solution. Without foreign markets and exports through world-trade arrangements, our producers will still be crushed by supplies of cotton, wheat, hogs, and other commodities which will break the market. What agency is to decide who shall produce and how much each shall be allowed to contribute to our great store of food and textile crops? We hope for a home consumption which shall, through economic readjustment, more justly distribute these goods among our own people. Until we have resumption of foreign trade and increased domestic use, we must rely upon some form of voluntary and cooperative control. We have now been told by the Supreme Court that such control is unconstitutional. Pending a constitutional amendment which will grant the Congress a clearly defined right to legislate for the general welfare, in a changing economic and social order, we must seek the desired ends by other means.

THE NEW FARM PROGRAM—LET US PULL TOGETHER

The new farm program, like the Triple A, was necessitated by emergency, and time was not given for working out permanent legislation, because the death blow to the Triple A demanded immediate action by Congress. The next 2 years under the program recently devised will give opportunity for studies toward the permanent program to take the place of the Triple A. During these years we must study the farm problem with renewed earnestness, and we must base decisions upon scrutiny of all returns. Changes in world conditions, especially in world trade, will influence the final program. The farmers of America are fortunate in having in the White House, and in the person of the Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet, men who are friends proven by word and action. These men have by their courageous leadership broken the chains by which this country was bound as a result of the unfortunate experiments of the former administration. Benefits to the farming world are reflected in most other lines of activity. While the Triple A Act is dead as a result of the Supreme Court decision, it will in the future be referred to as the first act drawn for the benefit of those who make a basic contribution as producers through agriculture. This act, in the administration of which farmer cooperation was sought, did even more than its framers had dreamed it could do. All political parties should forget party lines while strengthening and supporting funamental legislation for our common welfare.

The new farm program is based on soil conservation and prevention of erosion. Any thinking and observing man who has inspected the rolling farm lands after a summer rain does not need the added testimony of dust storms to convince him of the necessity of such a program. It is estimated that the $470,000,000 appropriated for the coming year for benefit payments to farmers, who assist the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out this program, can be saved each single year in conservation of the soil.

Let us forget our petty differences. Let us omit farm legislation from our campaign propaganda, and let us agree to put no hindrance in the path of those who are attempting to restore to us our customary American prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I now quote the letter from my farm neighbor and commend it to my colleagues as a case more typical of Triple A than the few great payments reported today. Such a statement is inspiring and helpful. It will clear the air. It will help us to conduct our future discussions on farm aid with the farmer in mind.

AN AVERAGE FARMER'S OPINION OF THE A. A. A.

I am a farmer of the ordinary variety, not what is termed a tenant farmer, neither am I the landed landlord, I am the "in between" variety.

We live on a farm of 240 acres, about 3 miles from La Grande, Oreg., a town of about 8,000 population, in a fertile valley where a crop failure from natural causes is about as unknown as a snow storm in July. In addition to the 240 acres which we own (or rather we have an equity in it, we hope) I rent 320 acres adjoining my own land, and another farmer and myself have rented adjoining my own land, and another farmer and myself have rented 240 acres more of good land about one-half mile from my own farm, making a total of about 800 acres, about half of which is average farm land and about half is pasture.

When I said that I was an ordinary farmer, I mean in more ways than one; I probably am an average farmer all around. I raise good crops, have the average quality of livestock, not the best, but not the worst that you see in tour of farms and ranches.

When I traded for this farm in 1926, I assumed the indebtedness against it, some $50 per acre, which was not too high at that time, and not nearly as high as some land of inferior quality and location, the mortgage to run some 20 years, payments of interest and principal to be paid semiannually. I started right in with diversified farming, raising lots of hogs, milking quite a few cows, raising lots of chickens, gradually building up a small herd of stock cattle, raising wheat, oats, rye, barley, and alfalfa hay. What could be more diversified? For the first few years I was able to meet my land-bank payments promptly when they became due, What could be more diversified? For the first few years I was able to meet my land-bank payments promptly when they became due, pay my taxes promptly, pay my labor bills each week, and, in fact, meet all of my obligations in general, and then "boom I faw down." And believe me that is the right term, I did begin to "faw" down on every obligation that I was supposed to meet. My taxes went unpaid, my land-bank payments and interest became past due and had to be extended, I had to quit buying any machinery, or to do any repairing only what was absolutely necessary. The only thing that I did keep paid up was my labor bills and that was some job. In fact, I went around with the seat of my pants out most of the time, but the men got their pay.

While these conditions actually did happen a little gradually, it seemed as though they came over night. Even though they were gradual, I kept kidding myself and thinking that they would were gradual, I kept kidding myself and thinking that they would change the other way for the better any day, and that prices we were receiving for our products and livestock would soon start on the uphill climb. A carload of hogs was raised, fed, and exhibited by me at the A carload of logs was raised, ied, and exhibited by me at the Pacific International Livestock Show in Portland, Oreg., in 1926, and were awarded grand champion ribbon and prize money, and sold to Swift & Co. for $15 per hundredweight. In 1931 I was awarded the same place on a carload lot of about the same quality and weight, and they were sold to Swift & Co. for $6.50 per hundredweight. In the intervening years I was awarded the same class each year and the hogs sold from $13.50 down to $11.50 per hundredweight. Taking the $6.50 per hundredweight for the hogs was an example of what was happening, and one of the many reasons why I could not meet my obligations. The same was true of butterfat, steers that I had to sell, poultry, eggs, and anything that we had to dispose of to try and pay our bills and meet our obligations.

Our income was not enough to meet them; so we could see only one thing to do, to increase production to a point where we could have enough money coming in to balance things up; and that, we thought, would cure our ills; but it merely shoved us over the hill a little closer to the poorhouse. In 1932 I raised about 800 hogs, had about twice as many steers to feed and sell as normally, raised more chickens, and milked more cows. Surely with all of this to sell I could meet my obligations, below the description to sell I could meet my obligations. this to sell I could meet my obligations, help my daughter to get through school, and maybe buy my wife a new hat; but it was not to be that way. My obligations stayed right where they were; I could not meet them; my daughter went to work instead of to school, and my wife dyed the feather on her old hat and sneaked could not meet them; my daughter went to work instead of to school, and my wife dyed the feather on her old hat and sneaked an army button from my mackinaw coat to keep the feather company and fool her friends. Everything I had to sell was sold far below the cost of production; the hogs sold for as low as $2.65 per hundredweight when they weighed about 200 pounds, the steers went the way fat steers go, at from $4.10 to $4.65 per hundredweight, after being grain fed for about 4 months in Portland, Oreg., netting me about 50 cents less than prices mentioned. We produced a lot of butterfat and sold it for 11 cents per pound, case after case of eggs went for 10 cents per dozen, and poultry was not worth the effort. The lower prices went the more we tried to produce, to raise the necessary amount of money to go around. Labor was cheap—yes, far too cheap—but yet it was lots harder for me to dig up the $1 per day that I was forced to reduce to than it was to pay the $3 per day that I was forced to reduce to than it was to pay the $3 per day that I had paid many, many times in former years. No matter how many corners we cut, how many things we did without, things kept getting worse; less money coming in to pay with, everything selling below the cost of production. There is only one place that we did not cut down on sharply, and that was food. We have always made our eggs set the table; in other words, have traded eggs for groceries; and as well kill our own meat, pork and beef, together with poultry, we always have plenty to eat. As I said, I have gone around with the seat of my pants out many times, but my stomach was full.

About the time that things looked the worst, and after I had exhausted all means and ideas that I could work out to make things meet—borrowed on all of my life insurance and worked my credit to the limit—along comes the plans for controlled production. I, like thousands of others, said that it would not work, that it could not. I went to the meetings; I was ready to try anything that sounded feasi tion. I, like thousands of others, said that it would not work, that it could not. I went to the meetings; I was ready to try anything that sounded feasible or not, with the hopes that it might work. And, notwithstanding all things said to the contrary, it has worked—worked for the benefit of all farmers that were willing to cooperate with their fellow farmers. First the wheat production control associations were organized and got to working, and I am very sincere when I say that I saw more cooperation and good work done than in any thing I ever saw a bunch of farmers try to run. Of course, the basis for all this was furnished by the Agricultural Administration, but the local organizations were set up and run by the farmers themselves, and all regulations were and run by the farmers themselves, and all regulations were enforced by them.

Next in our county came the corn-hog control program, and, like the wheat program, it actually did work for the farmers' benefit. I have heard and read so many times how much more the farmer would be getting for hogs if the processing tax was not in effect. This is being written 3 weeks from the day that the opinion was handed down by the Supreme Court, and as yet I have failed to notice any material gain in the price of hogs to the producer. We only had two programs in effect in the county, the wheat control and corn-hog control, yet these two branches of the Triple A put over $200,000 in circulation in this small county during the year 1934: the payments for 1935 were slightly less. Go into Triple A put over $200,000 in circulation in this small county during the year 1934; the payments for 1935 were slightly less. Go into La Grande, our county seat, and ask the merchants what they thought of it and whether it increased their business, how many more men were put back to work; ask the tax department of our county government what it did for their collections. I know the answer too well, it was like throwing a life-belt to a person in deep water. The water was getting too deep for me, I know, and deep water. The water was getting too deep for me, I know, and it was a lifesaver.

I paid all of my back and current taxes on the farm and personal property, paid most of my delinquent land-bank payments and interest, and will pay all of my forced extension when I get what is due me on my 1935 contracts, and I have faith enough in the present administration to believe that I will get it. I had picked up most of the stray ends and was on the road back to where I was about 6 years are. Now I do not know where the road picked up most of the stray ends and was on the road back to where I was about 6 years ago. Now I do not know where the road leads to, if they open the way permanently for increased production. I think I know, though—back to where we were a few years ago, days and nights of worrying about how this and that were ever going to be paid.

Some will say that the drought and other things of nature had most to do with the improvement in prices and condition, but I am still giving the Triple A credit for most of my personal gain, and I do not believe that it has hurt any one individual enough to make them suffer for my gain. I have figured processing taxes on all articles taxable used on our farm and it amounted to less than $9 per year, less than 75 cents per month. This small amount spread among an average of six people is indeed insignificant.

Again, some will say that I should have had enough laid aside during the good years when we were getting from $10 to $15 per hundredweight for hogs and a like amount for cattle and other things that we produced to protect myself when the dynamite went off. I will ask these same people if they ever ran a ranch of any size, with fences to repair, machinery to buy, a thousand and one things that have to be done, and they all take labor and cash.

Now things have gone "boom" again; the Supreme Court has decided that it is all wrong. The main bone of contention all along has been that we were taxing one class of people to benefit another class. Granted that we were, was it not indirectly helping all classes of people? How about the new cars that were being sold to farmers, new farm machinery by the hundreds of carloads, more repairs being done to farm buildings, dozens of things that are directly and indirectly making more labor turn-over and putting more cash into circulation, helping hundreds of industries both directly and indirectly? Are not all of our taxes based similarly, along the same lines that the processing taxes were based, taxing one class to benefit another? Do not part of the taxes that I pay on my farm and equipment go to protect the man that lives in town in a rented house or the single man that resides at a boarding house or a hotel? Do not part of my taxes go to support a country school that I have never had a child attend? What is the primary difference between that and taxing a sack of flour or a cured ham that I may receive a benefit check to increase my income to a point where I may meet my land payments and such necessary items? I was not hoarding this money; I was putting it back into circulation. I have not the desire to accumulate enormous wealth or large land where I may meet my land payments and such necessary items? I was not hoarding this money; I was putting it back into circulation. I have not the desire to accumulate enormous wealth or large land holdings or great herds of cattle. I want to receive enough for my products to be able to live without continual worry about whether I am going to lose my ranch or be unable to meet my obligations, enough to give my children an ordinary education, to be able to go through life like an average ordinary person, and I want to work for it all, not have it given to me. But I cannot do it on $3 hogs, 11-cent butterfat, and $4 steers, nor can any other farmer, though he work 24 hours a day. It's too far below the cost of production in this day and age, and the more he produces the more we will go in the red. They say volume counts, but it counts the wrong way when one is producing below cost. When I received my different benefit checks never had I the feeling that I was receiving something for nothing, rather I had the feeling that I had earned it and was getting nearer my just dues than I had been getting for 4 or 5 years.

COMMENDATION OF SERVICES OF CONGRESSMAN MARTIN DIES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two letters received by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and an excerpt from the Congressional Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say something in regard to the splendid services rendered by my friend and colleague Martin Dies, of Texas, in behalf of the payment to World War veterans of the remainder due them on their adjusted-service certificates.

MARTIN DIES was a member of the so-called Patman steering committee of 22 House Members who were selected to take every parliamentary step possible to obtain passage of a measure to pay in cash the adjusted-service certificates. As a member of this committee, Congressman Dies attended every meeting and cooperated to the fullest extent possible in securing passage of a suitable bill. As the only Texas member of the powerful Rules Committee, he was largely instrumental last session in obtaining a rule to permit consideration on the floor of the House of the Patman bill and the Vinson bill. He was selected as a member of the committee to confer with Congressman Vinson and Congressman McCormack, and also Commander in Chief James E. Van Zandt and National Commander Ray Murphy, of the American Legion, to bring about a complete understanding and agreement among the different factions with a view of securing passage of a suitable bill. As a result of this conference the Vinson-Patman-McCormack bill was agreed upon, and all factions united to secure its passage. The agreement entered into between these respective parties established complete harmony among the proponents of the legislation and caused early passage in the House and Senate and its enactment into law.

Congressman Dies voted in favor of the cash payment of the remainder due on the adjusted-service certificates each and every time the bill came before the House for a vote. The veterans and their dependents do not have a more loyal and steadfast friend than Congressman Dies, and the veterans owe him a debt of gratitude.

His splendid work on the Rules Committee and the steering committee had much to do with the final passage of this compromise measure. In addition to his constructive work in behalf of the cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, Congressman Dies voted in favor of the independent offices appropriation bill which restored the compensation taken from the veterans.

I desire to insert in the Congressional Record, along with my remarks, expressions of gratitude, and appreciation to Congressman Dies from James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and from Ray Murphy, national commander of the American Legion, and from Congressman Fred Vinson, of Kentucky, coauthor of the bill.

In addition to your untiring work to bring the bonus payment about, I want you to know that we also are fully aware of your uncompromising fight against the alien influences in this country. DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Please accept this rather belated appreciation of the loyal and effective service you rendered in connection with the passage of the bill for immediate payment of the adwith the passage of the bill for immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates. I started out from Washington the day after the bill became law and have been so constantly in travel since that time that I have been compelled to delay acknowledgment of your good work.

I realized that you were unselfish in your support of this legislation, and that in giving it your support you rallied to its cause many Members who might have wished otherwise to support some other form of payment plan. For your willingness to cooperate I am deeply grateful.

[Excerpt from remarks of Hon. Fred Vinson of Kentucky, in the House of Representatives Jan. 13, 1936]

House of Representatives Jan. 13, 1936]

In conclusion, I want to express my appreciation for the splendid cooperation we have received from the members of the Committee on Ways and Means. They, at all times, have been very considerate of the veterans' interests. Particularly do I want to thank our chairman, Hon. Robert I. Doughton, who has been of most valuable assistance in the preparation of the bill and its expeditious consideration. The veterans of this country are indebted much to Speaker Byrns for his friendly cooperation—a highly important service—in our arriving at "a united front." Also, we must not overlook the friendly attitude of the important Committee on Rules, which has enabled the bill to come up at this time. The committee appointed by the Patman conference, composed of Congressmen Colmer (chairman), of Mississippi; Connery, of Massachusetts; Hancock, of North Carolina; Dies, of Texas; Scrugham, of Nevada; and Berlin, of Pennsylvania, assisted Texas; Scrugham, of Nevada; and Berlin, of Pennsylvania, assisted materially in enabling this measure to come to the floor of the House with a united front, and their efforts in this respect are appreciated.

TOBACCO ROAD

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, first I read this brief excerpt | from this morning's edition of the Washington Herald:

TOBACCO ROAD TRAGIC TALE OF GEORGIA BRUSH COUNTRY-DISTINGUISHED AUDIENCE GREETS CALDWELL CLASSIC AT NATIONAL WITH COUNTLESS CURTAIN CALLS

A barren land that knows no God as we know Him, that marvels no more than the animals over birth and death, where romantic love between people is unheard of—that is the brush country of Georgia through which wends Erskine Caldwell's Tobacco Road so vividly dramatized by Jack Kirkland. The play opened last night at the National for a week's run.

The subject is completely foreign to the experiences of average life, and as it first unfolds you shrink from the violence of its unadorned truth. But as the play progresses the fact is inevitably driven home that this is life—life as it is lived today by far too many people in these United States.

These people have no schooling as a violence to the complete of t

These people have no schooling, no religious training, no code of right or wrong. They live by the most primitive instincts shorn of even the dignity savages achieve in their native haunts through form, ceremony, and tradition. The simplest human instincts of pity and hope are killed. There is only one love—the land.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked this time to request my colleagues of the House of Representatives to either see this most infamous, wicked, and damnable play, or talk with someone who has seen it, and to join with me in requesting the district attorney of the District of Columbia and the Commissioners of the District to have the presentation of the play stopped in this city today. The mayor of Chicago declined a few weeks ago to permit this infamous and wicked play to be presented in the city of Chicago. It was written by a young man, the son of a Presbyterian minister, of high-school age, before he went to college. It is predicated on conditions which are as far from the truth and the facts as the east is from the west. It is based on a condition that never existed, based on conditions supposed to exist in my congressional district. There are millions of tenant farmers in this country, there are thousands of them in my district, and some of them are today working their tobacco on their farms, and as their humble representative I resent with all the power of my soul this untruthful, undignified, and unfair sketch of southern life, which it is said is worse than savagery 200 years ago.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEEN. I decline to yield for the moment. There is not a word of truth in it. I denounce it and resent it. The play is well acted, I am told, and the actors are doing a good job. You cannot buy tickets for it. They are sold

I want to thank Miss Rhoda Milliken, of the women's division of the Metropolitan Police Department, who went down last night and saw the play, and who this morning recommended to the district attorney that most of this play be deleted or cut out. She said to me this morning that if that were done, there would not be enough left for anybody to go and see. I hope my colleagues will bear in mind that it does not represent the conditions existing among the people of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, the play entitled "Tobacco Road", and taken from the book Tobacco Road, is a reflection on the life of the tenant farmers of America. It is a reflection on their families. It is not consistent with the facts and conditions on which it is purported to be based. The illustrations are filth, debauchery, vulgarity, and flirtations with immorality.

In addition, the observer gets the idea, just as is illustrated in the article in today's Washington Herald, that the people of the brush country of Georgia know no God and that they marvel no more over birth and death than animals. The article states that these tenant sharecroppers have no schooling, no religious training, no code of right or wrong. The article continues to state that they live by primitive methods which would lower the dignity of savages 200 years ago. It is not only a reflection on the sharecroppers of lessly "all in" financially, the less chance they have to con-

Georgia but on sharecroppers and humble workers throughout the entire Nation.

It is true that living conditions are not as desirable among the poor people of the country as we would like to see them. Living conditions among tenant and sharecroppers in Georgia are not what any of us would like to see them; however, I did not think I would ever live to see the time when untruthful conditions would be depicted as being true and then commercialized by those who want to make money. It would be bad enough if the real conditions were commercialized in a drama and staged for the world to look at, but when poor and innocent people who are doing the very best they can are held up to ridicule and scorn and commercialized it is then time to call a halt.

Of all times and places that this play should not be shown it is at the present time in the Nation's Capital when thousands of visitors from every part of the country come here to attend the cherry-blossom festival. Thousands of them attending this show will carry back with them to their homes the impression that Georgia sharecroppers live in a barren land where there is no God, where there is no romantic love, no religious training, no schooling, no standards of right or wrong. They will carry back with them to their homes the impression that sharecroppers in Georgia are living in environments inferior to savages 200 years ago.

For the thousands of sharecroppers and their families who are not in the Nation's Capital to defend themselves against this infamous, vile, and wicked web into which they have been woven by those who would commercialize upon them, I am calling upon the bar of public opinion and public justice to render its decision against the appearance of Tobacco Road in the Nation's Capital.

SEED LOANS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota that he may address the House for 5 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, this Congress passed an appropriation of $50,000,000 for seed for needy farmers of the United States. The President vetoed the bill on the theory that it was not necessary; and the work of delivering the seed was turned over to the Resettlement Division. In the Northwest States today it is impossible for a farmer to get seed for these reasons: First, in order to qualify under the Resettlement Division a farmer is required to do two things in the application, either of which is inconsistent with the other. For example, the first thing a farmer must do is convince the Administrator beyond any reasonable doubt that he is financially "all in"; that he cannot get any relief from anyone, and he has absolutely nothing financially. At the end of that application he must then convince the Administrator that, notwithstanding his financial condition, he will be able to pay back the loan. [Laughter.]

We find such a case in history, the case of Scylla and Charybdis. The ancients tell us there was a huge rock off the coast of Italy called Scylla, and in close proximity was a whirlpool called Charybdis. The ancient pilots used to dread this spot. If they turned too much to the right they would strike Scylla. If they went too much to the left they ran into Charybdis. In either case the ship was lost. That is the situation of the farmers of the Northwest. The more they try to convince the Administrator that they are hopevince the same Administrator that they cannot pay back the bill. If this country today were at war with some foreign country, it would not be 24 hours until there would be enough seed to plant every farm in this country. It would not take 24 hours. We saw that happen before. But I say to you today, Mr. Speaker, that we are in a war now. We are in a war against this depression, and we cannot afford to have these farms lie idle another year because there is

I understand the Senate is going to take some action on a new bill to be introduced in the Senate that would provide money for this seed, but I think the time is too late now for legislative action. I am sure that if wheat is not planted in North Dakota within the next 2 weeks, there is no use planting it, because the hot winds will take it as they did this year. What we need now is executive action. I think the Members of this House who are in the majority ought to use their influence to have an Executive order issued to make this seed wheat available to the farmers of this country now when they need it. One dollar spent today will take the place of a thousand dollars later on if this wheat is furnished now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I yield. Mr. WOLCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the same thing will not be accomplished by taking from the Speaker's table the House bill that was vetoed, and passing it, notwithstanding the objections of the President?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes, that can be done; but I am not making any statement that reflects on the President or the administration or anyone else. I simply call attention to the fact that there are 15,000 farmers in my State alone who cannot qualify under the provisions of the Resettlement plan. Let me state further that in order to qualify they must budget their affairs up there, public and private. A man's wife must go to town. She must agree to the budget.

The affairs of that house are under the control of the Government as long as that loan is outstanding. We have a great many farmers who are not "all in" financially. They have something left, but they have no money. They cannot come in under the Resettlement Division. I have at least a hundred letters from those who did qualify. They were told, "You are a fit subject for the Resettlement Division, but you cannot convince us that you can pay back the loan." So in my State we have 15,000 farmers in that condition. Outside of North Dakota there are probably another 15,000 in Montana and South Dakota. I say it demands action by this Congress now. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The purpose of Congress, as I understand, in passing this seed-loan bill, which we have been passing for a number of years, was to come to the relief of those farmers who did not have local credit and who could not obtain it. It was passed in order that they might secure loans from the Government for the purpose of buying seed. As I understand it, the issue that has been presented in the gentleman's section is that there are a number of applicants for these seed loans who are on the relief rolls, and they want to continue on the relief rolls and at the same time secure a seed loan. Does the gentleman think that would be a fair thing for the credit of the Government to undertake, to give a double subsidy, so to speak?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. I wish to say there is no one in North Dakota receiving relief except through the Works Progress Administration. No one is receiving any work under the Works Progress Administration except he was on relief last year. If a farmer, through personal pride and a little extra effort, has been able to keep off of relief until this year, there is no place in North Dakota where that farmer can get any

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will not the gentleman admit that there has been a very great deal of criticism, particularly upon the part of the opposition, about this whole seed-loan program? And is it not a fact this administration, upon its recommendation, secured passage of a law setting up a permanent Government agency through which farmers who could qualify for credit could obtain loans? Is it true or is it not?

Mr. BURDICK. I say the administration is entitled to a great deal of credit. That is the first time it was ever done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to assure the gentleman, and I want to assure those who are interested in making these seed loans, because I know what I am talking about, that there is no disposition upon the part of those administering these loans to work any undue hardship upon farmers needing these loans. The gentleman talks about putting them on the spot about their credit and the probability of their repayment. I think it is entirely reasonable that when the Government is extending these loans to farmers that the Government has the right to go into the question of the probability of their being able to repay the loans. If this has been done out in the gentleman's section, I think it is an entirely reasonable regulation; but I want to assure the gentleman. to assure this House, and to assure the country, that there is no disposition upon the part of those administering these seed loans to work any undue hardship upon any deserving farmer. [Applause.]

Mr. BURDICK. I believe that is true, but as the thing works out in practice, we find letter after letter and telegram after telegram coming to our desks from people who have gone to the Resettlement Division, have qualified, but finally the loans fell through because the officials thought the applicants could not repay the loans.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I want to say to the gentleman we have at least 8,000 farmers in Colorado under what they call subsistence grants, which are virtually starvation grants, and which took the place of mortgage loans to drought farmers on relief, and who should have remained on relief. It was a travesty to place them under loans. These farmers have no money or means whatever with which to buy seed. They have got to be furnished seed by the Government or they will be on relief for another year, even though we have a season out there that would produce a crop.

Mr. BURDICK. My suggestion to the House is that the leadership of this House and those responsible for this part of the administration use their influence with the Executive of this Nation and have this difficulty cured by a proclamation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am forced to object to the request.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman's objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the precedent set by the gentleman from Texas I want to serve notice that there will not be granted any unanimous consent from the Democratic side either until we have this straightened out.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the ventilation is terrible, there is something offensive in the air that smells like spoiled cheese from Potsdam.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is not stating a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not stating a point of

While the Congress has provided since section 3 of the act of March 3, 1817 (3 Stat. 366), which was carried forward as section 236, Revised Statutes, that all claims and demands against the United States should be settled and adjusted by the accounting officers, this act of March 2, 1919, authorized the Secretary of War to settle certain classes of claims where the contracts had not been entered into in accordance with law, and it also authorized the Secretary of the Interior to adjust, liquidate, and pay certain net losses in connection with the production, or preparing to produce. Secretary of the Interior to adjust, liquidate, and pay certain net losses in connection with the production, or preparing to produce, either menganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in compliance with the request or demand of certain agencies of the Government. It will be noted that this act of March 2, 1919, was prior to the Budget and Accounting Act of June 10, 1921 (42 Stat. 24), establishing the General Accounting Office and reenacting as section 305 thereof the above referred to section 3 of the act of March 3, 1817. It seems to have been unfortunate that the act of March 2, 1919, deported as to these particular claims from the settled procedure

It seems to have been unfortunate that the act of March 2, 1919, departed as to these particular claims from the settled procedure in the settlement and adjustment of claims against the United States; that is, by conferring authority on the administrative officers whose acts gave rise to the claims to settle and adjust them instead of requiring that the claims be settled and adjust them instead of requiring that the claims be settled and adjust them cacordance with the established procedure—that is, by the accounting officers of the United States on the basis of administrative reports as to the facts—with right of claimants to institute suit against the Government, as in other somewhat similar cases when the claimants were dissatisfied with the settlements so made. It would seem that otherwise meritorious claims should not be considered followed the course of follows of claims and their attorneys to follow the course of follows.

denied because of failure of claimants and their attorneys to follow the proper procedure in the filing of suits in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or because the original claimants may have died before settlements were effected in the cases, but as the Secretary of the Interior reported in his letter of March 19, 1935, which was published in the above referred to House Report 1820 accompanying this bill, these claims arose in 1918–19, or approximately 17 years ago, and while the Government appears to have adjusted nearly all other claims arising in the World War, these particular war-mineral claims continue to claim the time and attention of the Congress and administrative agencies of the Government.

It is suggested that paragraph 2 of section 1 of the bill, as above quoted, be amended to read as follows:

quoted, be amended to read as follows:

"Upon petition to the Secretary of the Interior in such abated suits and in claims wherein no suits were filed under the said amendment the Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to review all such claims upon the basis of any newly discovered evidence or facts not before his predecessors and in the light of any decisions of the courts in similar cases; and in accordance with the provisions of the said act, as amended, to make reports and recommendations to the Comptroller General of the United States as to the additional amount, if any which the said Secretary may helieve the additional amount, if any, which the said Secretary may believe should be allowed to the respective claimants and the Comptroller General shall settle and adjust said claims upon a fair and equitable

It would seem that the time has come to end the expense to both the United States and claimants, as well as the expenditure of time and effort of officers and employees of the Government in the con-sideration of these war mineral claims, and it is believed that the adoption of the above-suggested amendment will go far toward accomplishing that purpose.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL, Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice; the gentlewoman from Arizona is absent for the moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Objection is heard.

This bill requires three objections. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLEAN, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts objected.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, before the next bill is taken up I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may address the House

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF PRATTVILLE, ALA.

The Clerk called the resolution, House Joint Resolution 241, to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Prattville, Ala.

The SPEAKER. This resolution requires three objections. Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ECONOMIC STUDIES OF FISHERY INDUSTRY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8055, to provide for economic studies of the fishery industry, market-news service, and orderly marketing of fishery products, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DRISCOLL, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts objected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say that the only objection I have to the bill is the fact that it provides for an unlimited amount of personnel outside the civil-service classifications. If the bill is amended in this respect, I think it may be passed.

Mr. BLAND. I took that matter up with the Bureau of Fisheries, and I think all of these employees will come under the civil service.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The bill specifically states that they will have the power to appoint and remove, as well as fix the necessary compensation of the employees. There is no provision that these employees shall come under the civil service.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to an amendment of that

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the bill be passed over without

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say that I happened to be walking down Twelfth Street and at the Twelfth and F Streets intersection I passed Woolworth & Co.'s store here in Washington, in which I observed in the window many cans of fish. As I looked at these cans of fish, I noticed they were practically all imported. I thought to myself, are we importing all the fish in this country and not taking care of our own fisheries?

Now, may I ask, is this bill going to enable an investigation of the fisheries of this country, so that eventually we will give a privilege and a preference to our own fishermen in this country and give the business to our own people, or are we going to continue to import all the fish that we use?

Mr. BLAND. This bill would not help importations. I am as much opposed to these importations as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This bill would not relate to that at all. It deals with extension of service and assistance, such as exists in the Department of Agriculture for agricultural products. It would enable our domestic fishermen to obtain better prices and information with reference to markets in the disposition of their own fish.

Mr. RICH. I would like to say here that you cannot gain any more information or help our fishermen unless you stop the importation of these foreign fish. Otherwise we can never take care of our American fish industry.

Mr. BLAND. I am opposed to trade agreements that would increase the importations of fishery products.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say this bill authorizes an appropriation of $200,000, which the Department reports is not in accord with the President's financial policy. I would request the committee to give some consideration to that matter between now and the time the bills on the Consent Calendar are called again.

Mr. BLAND. The committee has given some consideration to that, and additional consideration will be given.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. My attention was diverted a few minutes ago in conversation with some Members. A bill has been introduced by my colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs] with reference to the Prattville, Ala., anniversary. This bill was laid on the table. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs] is now engaged in an impeachment proceeding before the Senate. It is a rather unusual course to table a bill appearing on the Consent Calendar. I therefore ask unanimous consent, under the circumstances, that the order tabling the bill be vacated and the bill restored to the calendar without prejudice until the gentleman who introduced the bill may be here to be heard. He would be here except for the fact he is in the exercise of the business of the House in connection with an impeachment proceeding before the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] asks unanimous consent that the order whereby House Joint Resolution 241, to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Prattville, Ala., was laid on the table be vacated and the bill restored to the calendar and passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am very sorry to be obliged to do so under the circumstances.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOURS OF DUTY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10193, to amend the act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law No. 275, entitled "An act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees, and for other purposes", approved August 14, 1935, shall be construed in its application to those employees of the mail-equipment shops covered therein to mean that the 40 hours per week of labor established by the act shall be compensated for at the same rate which had theretofore been allowed by law for 44 hours per week.

SEC. 2. This act shall be retroactive in effect to and including October 1 1935.

October 1, 1935.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "same", insert the word "weekly."

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

I strongly desire to express to my colleagues in the House the appreciation of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for permitting this very humanitarian piece of legislation to be considered in the House today. This is not in any sense a partisan measure. It affects 192 employees in the mail-equipment shop. If these employees have any party affiliations-and this fact could be checked-I suspect it could be shown that a majority of them are or have been affiliated with the party represented by the present minority in the House. But this circumstance entered in no way into the committee's consideration of the bill which comes before you unanimously reported and supported by our committee.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. MEAD, the chairman of our committee, I know would be happy if he were here at this moment to tell you of his gratification at the action of the House in taking this bill up for consideration. He is not here for the reason that he was the guest last evening in Buffalo of a wonderful testimonial banquet given in his honor by the postal employees of his home city. Sixteen hundred of these employees and citizen guests filled to overflowing the great banquet hall of the Hotel Statler; and just to witness the affection and esteem in which our chairman is held in his home community much more than repaid the four members of his committee who made the long trip to Buffalo and return in order that we might be present on that great occasion.

Chairman Mean is now on his way back to his duties here; but at his request I returned here this morning, necessitating my departure from Buffalo before the banquet was concluded, and he asked this of me, because of his special interest in the advancement of this legislation, and in other legislation for the welfare of postal workers, and of the pilots and men employed in the air-transport industry.

When consideration of the pending bill was last sought on the floor of this House Mr. MEAD urged its adoption, and in answer to an implied criticism that postal employees are overpaid, he stressed the fact that the efficiency of the postal employees had greatly increased during recent years. In the meantime there have been prepared three graphic charts showing the progress of this increase in efficiency. These graphs or charts are mounted on a display board here in the Speaker's lobby, and I commend them to the attention of every Member. If you will examine them you will see that they afford a striking comparison of the postal employees' efficiency as it improved from 1908 to 1930. They are based on complete data available for the years 1908, 1910, and 1912, and the years 1926-30, inclusive; and if data were available for the period since 1930 I am sure it would show continued improvement.

These charts have been carefully prepared, and their accuracy checked by the research staff of the American Federation of Labor, at the request of and in collaboration with Mr. Gilbert Hyatt, legislative representative of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks. If you will look at them, particularly the one in the center on the display board, you will see a graphic illustration of the increased efficiency of the manpower of the postal service.

It is not generally realized that the extent of services and the rate of output of the Post Office Department has been enormously increased during the past 30 years. Nor is it generally known that this drastic increase in postal activity has been absorbed by a force of employees never augmented in proportion to the added activity.

During the period of 1908-12, the hours of work of postal employees averaged 10 hours per day for the service as a whole. On a full-time basis this meant 2,910 hours of employment for each employee per year. In the next period for which data is available, 1926-30, the 8-hour day was in effect and the annual full-time hours per employee were 2,120. On this basis we find that productivity per employee per hour increased between 1908 and 1930 by 135.8 percent. This meant that each postal worker for each 100 units handled per hour in 1908 had to handle 235.8 units in 1930. This increase of productivity per employee, without the corresponding increase in employment, is shown by the red line in graph I.

We see that while actual employment increased between 1908 and 1930 from 177,469 to 274,014, possible employment on a 40-hour basis could have ranged from 270,102 to 521,836. In other words, in 1930 the number of employees required on 1908 basis of output on a 40-hour week would be almost twice the number of workers actually employed in 1930.

Without separating out the technological factor, the same comparison between the actual employment and the employment possible on a 40-hour week, assuming the technological basis of 1908, is made in graph II, where identical data is presented by a line graph, better illustrating the relation between the actual and the possible trends.

I am sure that you will find a careful study of these charts to be very instructive, not only as proof of what has been accomplished in the postal service, but as pointing the way to greater progress in the solution of our general problems of unemployment and industrial efficiency, if advantage is taken by industry generally of the progressive advances and the far-sighted program of limitation of hours which has been so successfully put into practice by the greatest business and industrial institution in the world—the United States Post Office Department.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday marked the third anniversary of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he must speak on the bill before the House.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCormack). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, in order to conserve time, I do not want to rise to a question of personal privilege and consume 1 hour of the time of this House.

On Friday last I moved to strike out the last word on an appropriation bill that had something to do with post offices, or so some could construe it, and during the course of that argument I asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] some questions concerning an editorial in a paper that goes through post offices. The gentleman answered a few of the questions, and I was at the office all that day waiting for any call that might come and then, to my surprise, when I read the Congressional Record the next day I found that the gentleman from Texas had revised my remarks without my permission.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes, I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will not find one word in his remarks that I revised, not one.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If I do not so find it, I am going to apologize to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Not even a syllable.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Not a syllable? If the gentleman from Texas is so blind, I will say this on my own responsibility, unless I am entirely mistaken, and I think I was conscious at the time I was on this floor, the gentleman was asked whether he preferred a night rider in Washington to a "red rider."

Mr. BLANTON. And I told you I preferred night riders to "red riders" if the "red riders" were "reds."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is correct; but right after that the gentleman from Texas went on to say:

Mr. Blanton. The Post and its editor, Karl Schriftgiesser-

Mr. BLANTON. I said they are Russian Communist sympathizers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The Post goes through the post offices. Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the last two words are "1st, 1935", and the gentleman is not speaking of the last two words.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I want to point out-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington will suspend until the Chair rules on the point of order.

The gentleman from Washington will proceed in order and discuss the committee amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I simply want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this did not happen in 1935. I would not have objected to it at that time.

I am quoting from page 4928 of the RECORD:

Mr. Blanton. The Post and its editor, Karl Schriftgiesser, know that I have never belonged to the Ku Klux Klan, and that in the zenith of its power one of its high kleagles ran against me for Congress, and I carried every county in my district against him by a big majority.

Mr. Speaker, I ask any Member of the House whether he recalls hearing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], on Friday last, make that statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman say at that time, "Why does the gentleman not answer the question?" referring to the question he asked me about night riders?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And about the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And did I not tell the gentleman I had never been a member of the Ku Klux Klan?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And that is all you did say; but you put this other in the Record in addition to that and you know the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I told the gentleman that I had never been a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. You have been here 20 years and know the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knew I had never been a member of the Ku Klux Klan when he asked that question.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I did not know whether you had or not, but the point is you revised my remarks without my permission or the permission of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not revise one word of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Did you say that on the floor of the House?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I told the gentleman I was not a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is not a Member here that will corroborate your statement.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not right; I know what I said. You admitted it a moment ago what I said. I was not going to let the gentleman stand up here and intimate that I had been a member of the Ku Klux Klan when I had never been a member of the klan in my life.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I did not say you were.

Mr. BLANTON. And I called his hand when he tried to put that in the Record, and I called the hand of that Russian Communist reporter of the Washington Post, Karl Schriftgiesser.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, after this performance I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas should be ashamed of himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not do that. The feeling over here has passed away and we want to do some business on the Consent Calendar this afternoon.

Mr. TABER. We are tired of this performance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the gentleman wishes to assist us in getting through the business today, and we have a right to proceed with the Consent Calendar.

Mr. TABER. We have not been proceeding with the calendar, we have had disorder, and if we are to have disorder we might as well have a quorum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I cannot control the gentleman's judgment, but I hope he will not insist on the point of order. These things are coming up constantly, and we cannot prevent them, but we do want to get on with the consideration of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. McCormack]. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed and the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF VESSEL FOR PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3013) to provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

EXTENDING THE BENEFITS OF THE EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIRE-MENT ACT OF MAY 24, 1928

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2265) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object. Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.
Mr. THOMASON. I fear the gentleman from Washington does not understand the provisions of this bill, because there has been a lot of misconception about it. When the bill came up on the Consent Calendar 2 weeks ago, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] offered an amendment affecting all retired emergency officers. I understand he will not offer that amendment today because it is not germane, and he is for this bill. I would like to say to the gentleman from Washington that this covers only a very few provisional officers, and a careful reading of the report will disclose that only 10 provisional officers would be affected, and in no event more than 42.

There were a lot of these fine young men taken into the Army as provisional officers. They were not Regular officers and they were not emergency officers. Many of them rendered the same distinguished service as other officers who fought side by side with them. They have no status today and cannot avail themselves of the benefits of emergency officers' law, although they have permanent and direct service-connected disability. I have in mind two fine officers in my home town, Captain Chaffee and Captain Griffin. I have another friend at Alpine, Tex., and there are just a few scattered over the country. They are not being treated fairly and it is rank discrimination.

Although these few provisional officers have rendered just as fine service as any regular or emergency officer, yet they have no standing whatever under the retirement emergency act. I submit to the Members of the House that those men are entitled to the relief proposed by this bill. I am opposed to the opening up of the cases of all these retired emergency officers, but I repeat that a reading of the report from the Veterans' Bureau, as well as the War Department, will show that only a very few deserving young provisional officers are affected, and that the cost for the first year would not exceed $10,000.

Mr. TABER. Does this change in any way the provisions that now exist with reference to the granting of this retirement proposition?

Mr. THOMASON. I cannot say what effect it would have on other veteran legislation except that the report itself signed by General Hines, on page 3, says:

It has been impracticable to furnish a satisfactory estimate of the potential number of provisional officers who might be eligible to benefits if this proposed measure should be enacted into law, but it can be stated that a check with the War Department of the disallowed claims of emergency officers indicates that 42 provisional officers have been denied retirement pay under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act. The War Department has informally advised the Veterans' Administration that 2,468 provisional officers were honorably discharged from service prior to 1922.

As you know, the provisions of Regulation No. 5, promulgated pursuant to the act of March 20, 1933, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, place certain restrictions upon entitlement to emergency officers' retirement pay, so that many persons heretofore entitled It has been impracticable to furnish a satisfactory estimate of the Congress, place certain restrictions upon entitlement to emergency officers' retirement pay, so that many persons heretofore entitled will not receive benefits under present limitations. Considering this fact, it is conservatively estimated that this bill would cost approximately $10,000 the first year over and above the compensation now being paid and would affect 10 provisional officers. Since it appears from a reading of the bill that it does not contemplate payment of benefits prior to date of application, it would seem that no retroactive payments would be made, so the estimate of cost is presented on that basis.

Coming as that does from the Veterans' Bureau, signed by General Hines, I would say to my friend from New York that it does not open up the field, and that these few provisional officers are the only ones who would be affected by this bill. I hope the gentleman from Washington will not object, so that we can debate the bill on its merits. The bill has passed the Senate and has the approval of the House Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not usually give reasons for objecting, but my reason for objecting to this matter, and I may be the only one that will object, is this: There has been too much consideration given to officers of the last war, as well as officers of previous wars, while the men who actually did the fighting have been forgotten too often. I object to this, even if I am the only one to object.

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11040) to deport certain aliens who secured preference-quota or nonquota visas through fraud by contracting marriage solely to expedite entry to the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TAX EXEMPTION, OLYMPIC GAMES, LOS ANGELES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11327) to exempt from taxation receipts from the operation of Olympic Games if donated to the State of California, the city of Los Angeles, and the county of Los Angeles.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That no Federal income tax or gift tax shall now or hereafter be imposed upon any present, past, or future members of the Xth Olympiade Committee of the Games of Los Angeles, U. S. A., 1932, Ltd., in respect of any surplus of moneys received by such committee from the operation of the Olympia Games in California in 1932 and donated (1) by such committee, or any of its members, to the State of California, or (2) by such committee, or any of its members, through the Community Development Association, Ltd., to the city of Los Angeles in such State or the county of Los Angeles in such State.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8474) to provide for the creation of the Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial National Monument on Put in Bay, South Bass Island, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand this memorial is partly completed, and this is just a continuation of it, carrying out part of the plans.

Mr. FIESINGER. Oh, the monument has been completed for many years. This bill is merely for the Government to take over the maintenance of it.

Mr. TABER. And that will cost how much?

Mr. FIESINGER. I do not know exactly what the amount is.

Mr. TABER. The cost will be about 10 times what it was before.

Mr. DEROUEN. It will be a very nominal sum.

Mr. TABER. I think I shall object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit this to go over without prejudice?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make that request. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

DISABILITY PAY FOR ALIEN EMPLOYEES, PANAMA CANAL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4991) authorizing superannuation disability pay for alien employees of the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill would grant a pension to aliens who are not citizens of the United States. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina and Mr. McFARLANE also objected.

REMOVAL AT GOVERNMENT EXPENSE OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3472) to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874). The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHULTE, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. BLANTON objected.

REPATRIATION OF CERTAIN NATIVE-BORN AMERICAN WOMEN CITIZENS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2912) to repatriate nativeborn women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON, Mr. SCHULTE, and Mr. THURSTON objected.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentlemen reserve their objections until I can make an explanation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in the discretion of the gentlemen who have objected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we insist on the objection. Mr. GEARHART. I may say this same bill was agreed to last year by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. But since then I have found out a great deal about this immigration office that ought to be stopped.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections have been

Mr. GEARHART. May I ask that the bill go over without prejudice for 1 week?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, because the three objections stop the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections have been heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TO REPATRIATE NATIVE-BORN CITIZENS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3023, to provide for citizenship to persons born in the United States, who have not acquired any other nationality by personal affirmative act, but who have heretofore lost their United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent under the laws of a foreign country, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FADDIS, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. STARNES objected. PERIOD OF RESIDENCE REQUIRED OF ALIEN HUSBAND AS PREREQUI-SITE TO NATURALIZATION

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 336, to clarify the provisions of section 4 of the act of May 24, 1934, with regard to period of residence required of an alien husband of a citizen of the United States as a prerequisite to naturalization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON, Mr. SCHULTE, and Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina objected.

SPECIAL MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10670, to amend section 11 of Public Law No. 30, approved April 10, 1935, to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand this additional $90,000 is asked for, with the distinct understanding that this is the last money which will be asked to carry on this Commission.

Mr. BLOOM. That is the understanding before the committee.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, has this thing not gone along three or four times on that same basis?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. TABER. This has been going on for years. Mr. BLOOM. No. Just once. They received $90,000 first, and they found out that $90,000 would not go far enough to compel all the claims. However, this is money merely advanced. The Government today has in the Treasury $1,000,000 to repay this $90,000 and the previous $90,000, or $180,000 altogether, so this is merely an advance by the Government, and the money will be returned out of the first moneys received. They already have that much money.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the life of this Commission expires in about another year?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are required.

There being no other objections, the Clerk will report the

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act approved April 10, 1935, entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934" (Public, No. 30, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by substituting for the figures "90,000", in the second line thereof, the figures "180,000."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF NORTH DAKOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6499, referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a letter I have received from the Comptroller General on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES Washington, March 30, 1936.

Hon. John J. Cochran

Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Executive

Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.
My Dear Mr. Chairman: Further reference is made to your letter of March 16, 1936, acknowledged March 17, requesting a report on bill H. R. 6499, Seventy-fourth Congress, entitled "A bill referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement", which bill, as amended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, was reported favorably to the House of Representatives Aupure 5, 1935

The bill as amended is, excepting the title, identical with S. 1786, Seventy-fourth Congress, which passed the Senate July 29, 1935, and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, July 31, 1935. The title of H. R. 6499 should be and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, July 31, 1935. The title of H. R. 6499 should be amended so as to conform to the body of the bill.

S. 326, Seventy-third Congress, a bill having the same general purpose as the pending bill, was passed by the Congress, but vetoed by the President on May 10, 1934 (p. 8587, Congressional Record). However, that bill proposed to submit the involved claims to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement, which has been the procedure in cases involving Indian claims. The present pending bill would submit the claims to the Congress. In his veto message the President said:

"The principal claims of these Indians were settled by a treaty ratified by the Indians and by the act of Congress of April 21, 1904, whereby $1,000,000 was appropriated for the benefit of the Indians, and under which they executed a release of all claims whatsoever held by them against the United States.

"If such releases and settlements are ignored or deprived of their legal effect in this instance, an undesirable precedent would be created for applications for similar relief for other Indian tribes. This would require the Court of Claims and Supreme Court to pass upon questions of governmental policy in dealing with the Indians, and upon the propriety or impropriety of the Government's action in specific cases. These are questions of a political nature which, heretofore, Congress has consistently refused to remit to the courts for review."

The act of Congress referred to by the President is found in Thirty-third Statutes 194, and it provides, in part, as follows:

"* and be it further enacted that the sum of $1,000,000 "* * and be it further enacted that the sum of $1,000,000 be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of said amended agreement when ratified and accepted as aforesaid by said Indians: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be paid until said Indians in general council lawfully convened for that purpose shall execute and deliver to the United States a general release of all claims and demands of every name and nature against the United States, excepting and reserving from such release the right of said Indians to the tract of land particularly mentioned, described, and set apart by the Executive order of the President, dated June 3, 1884, and their right to individual allotment as provided in said amended agreement * * *."

On June 18, 1924, the President vetted a similar bill 5, 3626.

On June 18, 1934, the President vetoed a similar bill, S. 3626

(73d Cong.), stating:
"While the purpose of this is good, it does not cure the objections raised by me in the veto of a similar bill, S. 326, on May 10, 1934."

The provision contained in section 3 of the bill relative to the Government's right of set-off appears to be objectionable in that it is not in language which has heretofore been interpreted by the Court of Claims, and therefore it is impossible to foresee the interpretation which the court will place upon this provision, and in that the requirement that the amounts to be set off must be "proved to have been heretofore paid or expended directly for said band or bands of Indians" imposes upon the Government a heavy hurden of proof. Such a provision probably would have heavy burden of proof. Such a provision probably would have the effect of eliminating as possible items of set-off practically all disbursements which have been made under gratuity appropriations. In connection with a somewhat similar provision, Mr. George T. Stormont, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of Indian suits, made the following statements in a in charge of Indian suits, made the following statements in a memorandum:

"Amendment no. 2: This would put upon the Government a burden of proof which it could not possibly sustain and would have the practical effect of nullifying the section. These gratuities, it must be remembered, extend back a hundred or more years, and the persons who actually delivered the moneys or the goods have long since died, so that with reference to the great bulk of the gratuities, probably 80 or 90 percent, it would be simply impossible to obtain direct evidence that the Indians actually received the goods or articles purchased for them gratuitously by the Government. To illustrate: Suppose the Congress, 20, 30, 50, or more years ago, appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of beef cattle for an Indian tribe. The Government records would show the appropriation and would show that the money was forwarded to the particular Indian agent, and there our proof would stop. The agent, who would be the only person who could testify competently to the actual delivery of the cattle to the Indians, is dead, and we would simply be unable to prove that the cattle were delivered to the Indians."

The furnishing of proof that moneys were paid or expended directly for the cattle nor proof with the cattle were delivered to the Indians.

cattle were delivered to the Indians."

The furnishing of proof that moneys were paid or expended directly for the said Indians would be further complicated by the fact that the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians were affiliated with other tribes of Indians, as shown by an examination of the reports of the Commissioners of Indian Affairs.

Accordingly, it is recommended that the provision relative to set-off following the semicolon in line 25, page 8, of the bill and including the first five lines on page 9, be struck out, whereupon if the bill is enacted there will be for application to this matter by the Court of Claims the general provisions relative to set-off in cases involving claims of Indian tribes or bands contained in section 2 of the act of August 12, 1935 (49 Stat. 596). Or if it be deemed advisable to include in the bill a specific provision as to set-off, there is suggested for consideration the following language in lieu of that proposed to be struck out:

"The said Court of Claims is hereby directed to include in its

"The said Court of Claims is hereby directed to include in its report a statement of the amount of money which has been expended by the United States gratuitously for the benefit of the said band or bands of Indians, with such exceptions as are specified in section 2 of the act of August 12, 1935 (49 Stat. 596)."

If amended as herein suggested, this office knows of no objection to enactment of the bill H. R. 6499 other than those hereinabove suggested for the consideration of the Congress. If the bill is suggested for the consideration of the congress. If the birds is enacted and the claims of the said Indians submitted to the Court of Claims as contemplated, the preparation of the necessary report by this office covering disbursements which have been made by the Government to these Indians under gratuity appropriations would require the services of six persons for a period of approximately

Sincerely yours,

R. N. ELLIOTT,
Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been twice vetoed by President Roosevelt, once in the Seventy-third Congress and once in the Seventy-fourth Congress. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SETTLEMENT OF OUTSTANDING CLAIMS AGAINST CHAPMAN FIELD. FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4670, to authorize the Attorney General to settle outstanding claims against Chapman Field, Fla., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object. Mr. Speaker, a proposed committee amendment which appears on page 2 appropriates the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of this bill. The committee has stricken the words "authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000 for such purpose" and seeks to make an appropriation for $5,000. I do not have any particular objection to this bill, but I do think we should protect the rules of the House in these matters, and as a matter of principle this appropriation should be considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I have no objection to the bill itself, but I intend to make a point of order against the committee amendment if the bill is passed by unanimous consent, and I am convinced my point of order will lie, so that it will authorize an appropriation rather than appropriate the

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to say to the gentleman it has been the policy for the Comptroller General to settle claims of this character, and not the Attorney General of the United States. That is what the Comptroller General's office is set up for. I think this bill ought to be amended so as to make it read "the Comptroller General" rather than "the Attorney General." I am satisfied to see the bill passed, but would like to see it amended.

Mr. WILCOX. I am not the author of this bill, but this particular field is in my district, and I am somewhat familiar with the circumstances.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, there has been some confusion about this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment, until I can make a short explanation? I will say that "the Attorney General" was placed there instead of "Comptroller General" because it is litigation pending in the courts of Dade County, Fla., involving the title, and this was simply to authorize the Attorney General to settle the suit.

Mr. TABER. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not want this to go over, I will object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11072, authorizing the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see the gentleman interested in this bill present. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. WALTER. I am interested; it is my bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I had in mind another gentleman from Pennsylvania who was interested in the bill.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman withhold his request? Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withhold my request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WALTER. I may state to the gentleman from Michigan that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson] is very much interested in this bill. He is a member of the committee and voted for it. As a matter of fact, he urged its passage very strenuously. This bill does not create a permanent judgeship, but is designed to relieve a very bad situation in Philadelphia. One of the three judges has not been sitting for some time, with the result that approximately 2,000 cases are on the calendar unfinished. This bill merely provides for the appointment of a judge whose term shall continue until the death, resignation, or removal of one of the three sitting judges.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would suggest to the gentleman that there appears to be a misunderstanding about this bill. I think under the circumstances it would be best to ask that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

WAMSUTTER, WYO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3761, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain land to the town of Wamsutter, Wyo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to cause patent to issue to the town of Wamsutter, Wyo., for the northeast quarter northwest quarter section 34, township 20 north, range 94 west, of the sixth principal meridian, Wyoming, under the provisions of sections 2387 to 2389 of the Revised Statutes having reference to town sites: Provided, That the coal deposits contained in the land are reserved to the United States, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEDAL COMMEMORATIVE OF TEXAS INDEPENDENCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10906, to authorize the Director of the Mint to prepare a medal commemorative of Texas independence, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, a bad condition has risen through the creation of coins for the commemoration of one thing or another. Information has come to the members of this committee that a very small number of such coins are issued, and that soon these 50-cent pieces are sold for $60 and $75. It has turned out to be a racket. Now, I understand this particular bill is just to make a little change and no additional coins are to be issued. Is that right?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, no; this is not the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman from Washington that his statement cannot be correct, because the bills are so worded as to require the coining of at least 25,000 50-cent pieces, and lately we have raised the number to 50.000.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What do these 50-cent pieces sell for afterward?

Mr. COCHRAN. Some sell for as low as 60 cents. Naturally there is a small premium to cover cost of special coinage.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And some for a few dollars, too.
Mr. COCHRAN. That was long ago, if it ever existed; long before they started coining them in sufficient numbers. The committee is now protecting the coin collectors.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is not long before they sell for $50. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The author of this bill is our colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners], who is now engaged in the trial of the Ritter case over in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Calendar No. 625, S. 3413-

Mr. WALTER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALTER. What disposition was made of Calendar No. 624?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman refers to his bill, the Chair understands it was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the objector withdraw his objection and that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That was done.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I may state the reason for this request is that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is conducting the impeachment trial. He ought to be here before we pass on the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection? The author of the bill is engaged in the impeachment proceedings against Judge Ritter, and I do not think it is quite fair to object to the bill in his absence.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I had in mind that the gentleman was referring to Calendar No. 617. He refers to Calendar No.

624?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is right; it was the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, Calendar No. 624, be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to the passage of the bill and I am going to continue to object to it. I can see no reason why it should go over without prejudice. It puts the United States Mint into the business of making medallions for this centennial.

It is only a step from there to making badges for conventions.

CONVENTION BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES IN RE WHALING

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3413, an act to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection. I may say that I have no particular objection to the bill except that it brings in the Navy and compels the Navy to act as a police force in the operation of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; the enforcement is in the Coast Guard and Bureau of Customs, not the Navy, and the Coast Guard is under the Treasury Department. The Navy is not involved except on request in emergency from Secretary of Treasury to Secretary of Navy. It is the Commerce Department and the Coast Guard which is primarily involved. The Coast Guard, I may say, has boats patrolling these waters at the present time. This will not involve any additional expense to enforce the treaty. We had a hearing at which the Coast Guard was represented, also the Commerce Department and Bureau of Fisheries. As I stated, the Coast Guard is not under the Navy Department but under the Treasury Department. We thought this was appropriate and that we would have this additional enforcement without any added expense.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the Coast Guard under the Navy Department?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; it is under the Treasury Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Section 9 provides for cooperation by the Secretary of the Navy. That means nothing then?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point is that the Coast Guard must do what the Secretary of the Navy tells them to do. They have guns, cannon, and everything else, and they could start a war themselves.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is so wrong in theory that I cannot believe it to be true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Navy has nothing to do with the Coast Guard. I may say that the committee sought a means to enforce this treaty without any additional cost. The Commerce Department has certain boats doing patrol work. The Coast Guard also has certain boats. We were trying to place the enforcement upon these various governmental departments where there would be no additional expense incurred, and since they already have the patrol boats in the waters where whaling is done we thought they could accomplish the task of enforcement. We had quite extensive hearings, which were attended by representatives of the various departments of the Government. The hearing on this bill before the committee consumed something like four, five, or maybe six different meetings of the committee. We think we have worked out a good bill and one which will be effective in carrying into effect the terms of this treaty; we have improved the bill—as it passed the Senate-in several particulars. We also considered the constitutional feature and I believe if the gentleman knew of the exhaustive hearings we had and the fact we have gone into this matter very carefully and considered it from every angle he would not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am in sympathy with the endeavors of the committee along this line. The gentleman will recall that for a good many years we have been protecting the Army and the Navy of the United States against the possibility of having to do police work in the enforcement of standing laws. During prohibition there were repeated attempts to enlist the Navy in the enforcement of the Prohibition Act. As I read section 9 of this bill, if the Secretary of the Navy is compelled to cooperate, the only way he can do so is to bring a battleship, cruiser, or some other ship of the Navy into play in connection with the enforcement of this act. I may say to the gentleman that as far as I am personally concerned, that is my only objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not think it is contemplated that this should be done. The only purpose was to have the various departments involved granted concurrent power in connection with the enforcement of this act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman's committee wants to consider the matter, having this in mind, then I have no objection to the bill going over without prejudice for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I feel sure if the gentleman was aware of the fact the Navy Department had appeared before the committee and indicated that they were satisfied the gentleman would not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It may be entirely satisfactory to the Navy Department, but as American citizens and as a Congress we should protect the armed forces of the United States against such legislation, whether they want it or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. This is not designed to place any additional burdens upon the Navy in connection with the enforcement of this act. The Coast Guard and the Commerce Department will be the only two departments involved, and it is only in an emergency that the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to request the Secretary of the Navy to cooperate in enforcement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the gentleman realize that under this bill the Secretary of the Treasury could compel every officer in the Navy to pick up every whaling boat in these waters, bring them in and be responsible for the prosecution of those men in our district courts?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is it not possible one of these boats might run into a Japanese whale of some kind?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would rather the gentleman objected to the consideration of the bill; then the next time it comes up for consideration it will require three objections.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts objected.

THE GREENBRIER RIVER IN WEST VIRGINIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3383, to provide a preliminary examination of the Greenbrier River and its tributaries in the State of West Virginia, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Greenbrier River and its tributaries in the State of West Virginia, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE CHEAT RIVER IN WEST VIRGINIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3384, to provide a preliminary examination of the Cheat River and its tributaries in the State of West Virginia, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Cheat River and its tributaries in the State of West Virginia, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE POTOMAC RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3385, to provide a preliminary examination of the Potomac River and its tributaries with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Potomac River and its tributaries, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE MARAIS DES CYGNES RIVER, IN KANSAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8301, to authorize a supplemental examination of the Marais des Cygnes River, in the State of Kansas, with a view to the control of their floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a supplemental examination to be made of the Marais des Cygnes River, in the State of Kansas, with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "supplemental" and insert "preliminary"; in line 6, strike out the word "their" and insert the word "its"; and amend the title.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following order from the Senate of the United States:

In the Senate of the United States sitting for the trial of the impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida

Apprt 9 103

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate to the House of Representatives an attested copy of the answer of Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, to the articles of impeachment, as amended, and also a copy of the order entered on the 12th ultimo prescribing supplemental rules for the said impeachment trial.

The answer and the supplemental rules to govern the impeachment trial were referred to the House managers and ordered printed.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

AMENDMENT OF THE SHIPPING ACT OF 1916

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3467, amending the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I anticipate this is for the purpose of making some correction in the bill, and I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the penalty of the bill is a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $3,000, and under all the interpretations of all the courts that I know anything about, this means that in order to enforce the act a civil suit must be brought for the collection of such fine.

Mr. BLAND. I am not sure about that, but that shall be taken into consideration. The purpose of asking that the bill go over is that there is some objection made to the bill that seems to have some merit and is now being considered by the Shipping Bureau.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, furthermore, I trust there will be some further hearings held in reference to the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I would not be able to promise that now, but I think there will be unless these objections are met.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, should not the bill, under the circumstances, be rereferred to the committee?

Mr. BLAND. For the present, I do not think that is necessary. It may be amendments will be agreed on that will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11454, to incorporate the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report on this bill states as follows:

It is the judgment of the committee that the activities of this organization bring it within the rule which the committee has strictly adhered to, that it will limit its recommendations of Federal incorporation to organizations national in scope and which assist the execution of some express or implied power in the Constitution or some governmental function thereunder.

It is encouraging, Mr. Speaker, to read such sound doctrine coming from the Committee on the Judiciary. The practice has developed of Government officials organizing under State law corporations for the purpose of carrying on purely Federal functions. I know of 30 such corporations and have reason to believe there are many more, which have been organized under the laws of the State of Delaware. It is alleged that the stock of these corporations is held for the benefit of the Government of the United States. The fact remains that Federal employees have absolutely no authority to create these corporations, and the practice is a subterfuge, which has been used to create agencies to spend money and engage in activities not authorized by law.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield at that point, that is one of the reasons the incorporation should be desirable. If such organization has a Federal charter, then, of course, its records are available for any Government investigation or inspection.

Mr. McLEAN. I take it, then, that the gentleman agrees with me that the incorporation by Federal officials of corporations under the laws of the State of Delaware, or any other State, for carrying on Federal functions, violates the laws of the United States. Such corporations should be incorporated by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WALTER. I agree entirely with what the gentleman says.

Mr. McLEAN. The incorporation of these bodies under the State of Delaware is a violation of the fundamental law and our conception of government under the Constitution. As stated I know of 30 companies that have been incorporated in Delaware that have had allocated to them as invested capital millions of dollars which have been spent without the consent of or appropriation by the Congress of the United States. This method of carrying on the affairs of the Government does violence to our fundamental law and is wrong in principle.

Mr. WALTER. But what the gentleman says does not apply to this organization.

Mr. McLEAN. I realize that. This act is very well drawn; it puts the Government in a position to know who the incorporators are. All of its records will be available in a Federal office and one can readily ascertain who are the officers of this corporation, and other facts incidental to corporate activity. The bill requires a report to Congress of the activities of the corporation, and Congress will be informed what has been done with the money entrusted to its care.

But that is not so with corporations that have been incorporated under State law. I have no objection to the enactment of this bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following persons, to wit: James E. Van Zandt, Altoona, Pa.; Bernard K. Kearney, Gloversville, N. Y.; Scott P. Squyres, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Robert B. AMERICA AND THE WORLD WAR, APRIL 6, 1917

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Members of Congress, this is neither the time nor the occasion for long speech or debate and controversy. Today we honor our great leader, the immortal La Follette, master statesman these last 50 years of American politics. Yes; La Follette and that great company which followed him and his disciples, among whom I had the privilege to be one of the least.

THE BRAVE AND GALLANT GENERAL SHERWOOD

We remember Gen. Isaac R. Sherwood, last of the Grand Army of the Republic; Congressman and United States Senator William E. Mason, of Illinois; Col. Edward C. Little, of the famous Twentieth Kansas, Spanish-American War hero. These and Senator Lane, of Oregon; Senator Gronna, of North Dakota; Senator Stone, of Missouri, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate; Senator Vardaman, of Mississippi; and Senator Norris, most able and distinguished of our Senators today, standing shoulder to shoulder with Robert M. La Follette, on that fateful Good Friday morning when the American people were crucified on the cross of war.

These 6 United States Senators and 50 Congressmen-56 in all-what is the judgment of history today? Coming in on the train from Philadelpia this morning I had ample time to search the great papers of the country, their editorial pages and news articles. Not one of them spoke in praise or sought to interpret the World War, except the New York Sun, and this is the statement of the editorial in the New York Sun:

EDITORIAL ON WORLD WAR, NEW YORK SUN, APRIL 6, 1936

It may not be said that history has yet given its final verdict, but 19 years after we can at least see that however mixed may have been their motives, however inadequate the arguments they used, the fear of these 56 that the Great War would neither bring "ultimate peace" nor the "liberation" of all peoples have been better realized than the lofty hopes of those who overwhelmed

And that is the editorial in a great New York newspaper on the 6th of April 1936-19 years after our declaration of war.

The war lords, the munition makers, the international bankers, and war profiteers had their day, but history is having its day now, and the judgment of history will be harsh and unrelenting upon their guilty heads.

In the train of that war we have today 15,000,000 unemployed; 20,000,000 in relief lines; billions of unpaid European war debts: a national debt which neither we nor our children nor our children's children will ever see paid. That is the price of adventure into foreign lands and into quarrels and intrigues we do not understand and never will understand.

OUR VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

How lofty then the pronouncements of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln who warned us, "Why stand upon foreign ground?" I take it this is an appropriate time to venture these few remarks on April 6, 1936, and now while we are considering this very bill dealing with matters concerning veterans of foreign wars, I want to say that I have always supported the veterans of all wars and always will. If the veterans want this bill I am for it. They served in time of war and duty demands that we remember them in times of peace. But why call our boys into foreign service? We will defend our own soil; there let us stop.

The greatest state paper of all time—the Washington Farewell Address-oh, why do we give only lip service, why not follow his advice-Washington was a wiser patriot than any of these who are now-listen.

THE FAREWELL WORDS OF WASHINGTON

Nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here

Europe has a set of primary interests which to use have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enuities. ships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an effi-cient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maximum no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

sary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commer-Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them conventions; when the properties that present port them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested rayors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought

That is real Americanism and it is good enough for any real red-blooded American.

THE FOREIGN POLICY OF WASHINGTON AND JEFFERSON

Remember that American foreign policy for a century and a half followed the straight course laid down by Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, and every President down to and including the first administration of the war President. That policy was friendship for all, trade with all, and entangling alliances with none.

The President and the Congress elected in 1916 on the solemn pledge to keep America out of the World War immediately proceeded to betray that pledge and plunged America into the quarrels of Europe, from which our forefathers wisely emigrated in order that they might build a new nation, free from kings and emperors, European conscription, war taxes, and wars.

This departure from the Washington-Jefferson foreign policy was a colossal blunder and a crime against the American people, and so long as those who plunged us into that disaster continue in power we will never extricate ourselves from this panic.

FIFTY-SIX MEMBERS OF CONGRESS VOTED AGAINST OUR ENTRY INTO THE

Two years ago there were 8 Congressmen out of 50 and 1 United States Senator out of 6 remaining in Congress who voted against America entering the World War: Almon, of Alabama; Britten, of Illinois; Church, of California; Dill, of Washington; Frear, of Wisconsin; Knutson, of Minnesota;

Lundeen, of Minnesota, in the House; and United States Senator George W. Norris, in the Senate. After serving in the House during the War, Congressman Dill, of Washington, was later elected United States Senator, and served there some 12 years.

In the present Congress only three of these eight remain: The senior Senator from Nebraska, George W. Norris, the noblest Roman of them all; the able dean of the Minnesota delegation, who has served continuously in Congress for some 19 years, Harold Knutson, of Minnesota; and your servant, ERNEST LUNDEEN.

COST OF THE WORLD WAR

On Armistice Day, November 11, 1928, Calvin Coolidge, then President, made this statement: "When the last soldier and the last dependent of the soldier has disappeared over the horizon the World War will have cost America more than $100,000,000,000."

SHALL WE ENTER ANOTHER WORLD WAR?

America is again on the road to war. The greatest peacetime war preparations in the history of this world are now under way in these United States. No nation at any time in the history of the world has ever indulged in such tremendous building for war. War for what? War against whom? Who is going to attack us? Oh, yes; I see we are going to deliver the deciding blow on other continents-Asia, Europe, or Africa. Our Army is to be the policeman of the earth. We are going to decide for other nations how they are going to govern themselves. A most dangerous and destructive international policy. Every nation and every empire in the world attempting anything like that went crashing into the dust of the ages.

DEFEND OUR OWN SOIL-THERE LET US STOP

We want America to live. We need only such preparations as will defend our own soil. Thrusting ourselves into the quarrels of other nations will never settle those quarrels and will only injure ourselves. We are again on the road to war. We traveled that road 19 years ago. Speak now before it is too late.

"SAVE THE WORLD FOR DEMOCRACY"-"END ALL WAR"

April 6, 1917, we went to war, they said to "Save the world for democracy"; to "end all war", to erect a League of Nation structure with a sovereignty over our sovereignty and a flag over our flag, inevitably imposing dictation from Europe. Not a single Congressman can be found who will rise on this floor and defend his voting for war. Selfish, ignorant, and stupid men plunged America into the abyss of the World War. We financed that war and brought America's financial structure into collapse and chaos.

THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE IS OUR SPHERE OF ACTION

I am glad I opposed America's entering that war. I am glad that there is no blood on my hands, and I pledge the American people most sincerely and solemnly that I will never be party to plunging the youth of America into the wars of Asia, Europe, and Africa. The Western Hemisphere is our sphere of action-North and South America and the outlying islands; that is sphere enough for us. We are losing heavily in South American trade. We need to extend our influence and trade there. More than 90 percent of the trade of the United States is within our own borders. Here we can build solidly and upon a sure foundation for future success, prosperity, and real national greatness.

DO NOT DESTROY AMERICAN DEMOCRACY ON THE BATTLEFIELDS OF EUROPE

America will work its way out. Of that I am sure. We must not make that blunder again, lest we may not work our way out another time. It may then be forever too late. If you wish to imperil American democracy, send our armies into a second world war, and you may see forms of government yet undreamed of. The Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln foreign policy is the north star of our foreign affairs. It ought to be good enough for any real red-blooded American. Friendship with all nations; trade with all nations; entangling alliances with none.

On April 6, 1936, we again call the roll.

SENATORS WHO VOTED AGAINST ENTRY INTO WORLD WAR Gronna, La Follette, Lane, Norris, Stone, Vardaman.

REPRESENTATIVES WHO VOTED AGAINST ENTRY INTO WORLD WAI

Almon, Bacon, Britten, Browne, Burnett, Cary, Church, Connelly of Kansas, Cooper of Wisconsin, Davidson, Davis, Decker, Dill, Dillon, Dominick, Esch, Frear, Fuller of Illinois, Haugen, Hayes, Hensley, Hilliard, Hull of Iowa, Igoe, Johnson of South Dakota, Keating, King, Kinkaid, Kitchin, Knutson, La Follette, Little, London, Lundeen, McLemore, Mason, Nelson, Randall, Rankin, Reavis, Roberts, Rodenberg, Shackleford, Sherwood, Sloan, Stafford, Van Dyke, Voigt, Wheeler, and Woods of Iowa.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ADJUSTING COMPENSATION OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE OFFICIALS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10267) to provide for adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to adjust the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections chief cierks, assistant chief cierks, and cierks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents, Railway Mail Service, to correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia. Any appropriation now or hereafter available for the payment of the compensation of employees in the Railway Mail Service shall be available for payment of compensation in accordance with the rates adjusted in accordance with the rates adjusted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CREDITING LABORERS IN POSTAL SERVICE WITH SUBSTITUTE SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10930) to credit laborers in the Postal Service with any fractional part of a year's substitute service toward promotion.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Act No. 366, entitled "An act to provide time credits for substitute laborers in the Post Office when appointed as regular laborers", approved August 27, 1935 (U. S. C., 1934, title 39, sec. 101), is amended to read as follows:

"That section 5 of the act entitled 'An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing aries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes', approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1053; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 101), is amended by adding thereto a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Whenever any substitute laborer, watchman, or messenger is appointed to a permanent position as laborer, watchman, or messenger, the substitute service performed by such laborer, watchman, or messenger shall be computed in determining the eligibility of such person for promotion to grade 2 on the basis of 306 days of 8 hours constituting a year's service. Effective at the beginning of the first quarter following approval of this act, all laborers, watchmen, and messengers who have not progressed to grade 2 shall be promoted to that grade, provided they have the necessary credit of 306 days of 8 hours each constituting a year's substitute service will be included with service as a regular laborer, watchman, or messenger in the Postal Service in determining eligibility for promotion to the next higher grade following appointment to a regular position. Effective at once following approval of this act, all laborers, watchmen, and messengers who have not progressed to grade 2 shall be promoted to that grade, provided they have the necessary credit of 306 days of 8 hours each constituting a year's service."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, in the parentheses after figures "1934", insert "edition, Supp. I", and on page 2, line 3, in the parentheses, strike "1053" and insert "1060."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS TO CLACKAMAS COUNTY, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9485) to convey certain lands to Clackamas County, Oreg., for public-park purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The Secretary of the Interior, in making his report on this bill, made certain recommendations concerning an amendment which would protect the Government. I notice that although consideration was undoubtedly given to his amendment, it was not recommended by the committee. I am wondering if the committee can explain why the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior was not followed in that

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will be glad to explain. The recommendation in the Secretary's report to the Public Lands Committee seems to be a formal suggestion which is invariably made by him on any bill of this kind. The matter came up and was thoroughly considered by the committee, and the committee did not concur in the Secretary's suggested amendment. Bills conveying public lands of this character to municipalities for park purposes and for watershed protection, and so forth, have usually been approved by our committee in the form in which this bill is written. The Government is thoroughly protected under the provisions of this bill, and it does not place upon the municipality the unnecessary hardship which the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior would incur. The Secretary of the Interior always makes this suggestion, but you will not find it incorporated in any of the bills of this kind which have been reported out of our committee during the past two sessions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue a patent to Clackamas County, Oreg., on behalf of the United States, for the southeast quarter southon behalf of the United States, for the southeast quarter southwest quarter, the northeast quarter southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter southeast quarter section 11, township 4 south, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, containing 120 acres, more or less, on condition that such county shall accept and use such lands solely for public-park purposes; but if such county shall at any time cease to use such lands for public-park purpose, or shall permit the use of such lands for any other purpose, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate them, they shall revert to the United States: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States, its patentees, or their transferees, the right to cut and remove therefrom the merchantable timber reserving to Clackamas County, Oreg., when such sale is made under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), a preference right to purchase the timber at the highest price bid.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF PUBLIC LAND BY SCAPPOOSE, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9654) to authorize the purchase by the city of Scappoose, Oreg., of a certain tract of public land revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent, upon payment of $2.50 per acre, or fraction thereof, to the city of Scappoose, Oreg., for the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 11, township 3 north, range 2 west, Willamette meridian, containing approximately 80 acres, subject to all valid existing rights at the time of the filing of the application by the city of Scappoose: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States, its patentees, or their transferees, the right to cut and remove therefrom the merchantable timber, which in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior may be cut and removed without material damage to the city reservoir, reserving to said city of Scappoose, when such sale is made under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916, a preference right to purchase the timber at the highest price bid.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TERM OF DISTRICT COURT AT PANAMA CITY, FLA.

UNIFORM OCEAN BILLS OF LADING

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1152, relating to the carriage of goods by sea.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every bill of lading or similar document of title which is evidence of a contract for the carriage of goods by sea to or from ports of the United States, in foreign trade, shall have effect subject to the provisions of this act.

TITLE I

SECTION 1. When used in this act—
(a) The term "carrier" includes the owner or the charterer who

(a) The term "carrier" includes the owner or the charterer who enters into a contract of carriage with a shipper.
(b) The term "contract of carriage" applies only to contracts of carriage covered by a bill of lading or any similar document of title, insofar as such document relates to the carriage of goods by sea, including any bill of lading or any similar document as aforesaid issued under or pursuant to a charter party from the moment at which such bill of lading or similar document of title regulates the relations between a carrier and a holder of the same.

(c) The term "goods" includes goods, wares, merchandise, and articles of every kind whatsoever, except live animals and cargo which by the contract of carriage is stated as being carried on deck and is so carried.

(d) The term "ship" means any vessel used for the carriage of goods by sea.

(e) The term "carriage of goods" covers the period from the time when the goods are loaded on to the time when they are discharged from the ship.

RISKS

Sec. 2. Subject to the provisions of section 6, under every contract of carriage of goods by sea, the carrier in relation to the loading, handling, stowage, carriage, custody, care, and discharge of such goods, shall be subject to the responsibilities and liabilities and entitled to the rights and immunities hereinafter set forth.

RESPONSIBILITIES AND LIABILITIES

Sec. 3. (1) The carrier shall be bound, before and at the beginning of the voyage, to exercise due diligence to—
(a) Make the ship seaworthy;

(a) Make the ship seaworthy;
(b) Properly man, equip, and supply the ship;
(c) Make the holds, refrigerating and cooling chambers, and all other parts of the ship in which goods are carried, fit and safe for their reception, carriage, and preservation.
(2) The carrier shall properly and carefully load, handle, stow, carry, keep, care for, and discharge the goods carried.
(3) After receiving the goods into his charge the carrier, or the master or agent of the carrier, shall, on demand of the shipper, issue to the shipper a bill of lading showing among other things—

(a) The leading marks necessary for identification of the goods as the same are furnished in writing by the shipper before the loading of such goods starts, provided such marks are stamped or otherwise shown clearly upon the goods if uncovered, or on the cases or coverings in which such goods are contained, in such a manner as should ordinarily remain legible until the end of

(b) Either the number of packages or pieces, or the quantity or weight, as the case may be, as furnished in writing by the

had no reasonable means of checking.

(4) Such a bill of lading shall be prima-facie evidence of the receipt by the carrier of the goods as therein described in accordance with paragraphs (3) (a), (b), and (c) of this section: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as repealing or limiting the application of any part of the act, as amended, entitled "An act relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce", approved August 29, 1916 (U. S. C., title 49, secs. 81–124), commonly known as the Pomerene Bills of Lading Act.

Act.

(5) The shipper shall be deemed to have guaranteed to the carrier the accuracy at the time of shipment of the marks, number, quantity, and weight, as furnished by him; and the shipper shall indemnify the carrier against all loss, damages, and expenses arising or resulting from inaccuracies in such particulars. The right of the carrier to such indemnity shall in no way limit his responsibility and liability under the contract of carriage to any person other than the shipper.

(6) Unless notice of loss or damage and the general nature of such loss or damage be given in writing to the carrier or his agent at the port of discharge before or at the time of the removal of the goods into the custody of the person entitled to delivery thereof under the contract of carriage, such removal shall be prima-facie evidence of the delivery by the carrier of the goods as described in the bill of lading. If the loss or damage is not apparent, the notice must be given within 3 days of the delivery. Said notice of loss or damage may be endorsed upon the receipt

Said notice of loss or damage may be endorsed upon the receipt for the goods given by the person taking delivery thereof.

The notice in writing need not be given if the state of the goods has at the time of their receipt been the subject of joint survey or inspection.

In any event, the carrier and the ship shall be discharged from In any event, the carrier and the ship shall be discharged from all liability in respect of loss or damage unless suit is brought within 1 year after delivery of the goods or the date when the goods should have been delivered: Provided, That if a notice of loss or damage, either apparent or concealed, is not given as provided for in this section, that fact shall not affect or prejudice the right of the shipper to bring suit within 1 year after the delivery of the goods or the date when the goods should have been delivered.

In the case of any actual are apprehended loss and delivered.

In the case of any actual or apprehended loss or damage the carrier and the receiver shall give all reasonable facilities to each other for inspecting and tallying the goods.

other for inspecting and tallying the goods.

(7) After the goods are loaded the bill of lading to be issued by the carrier, master, or agent of the carrier to the shipper shall, if the shipper so demands, be a "shipped" bill of lading: Provided, That if the shipper shall have previously taken up any document of title to such goods, he shall surrender the same as against the issue of the "shipped" bill of lading, but at the option of the carrier such document of title may be noted at the port of shipment by the carrier, master, or agent with the name or names of the ship or ships upon which the goods have been shipped and the date or dates of shipment, and when so noted the same shall for the purpose of this section be deemed to constitute a "shipped" bill of lading.

(8) Any clause, covenant, or agreement in a contract of carriage

(8) Any clause, covenant, or agreement in a contract of carriage relieving the carrier or the ship from liability for loss or damage to or in connection with the goods, arising from negligence, fault, or failure in the duties and obligations provided in this section, or lessening such liability otherwise than as provided in this act, shall be null and void and of no effect. A benefit of insurance in favor of the carrier, or similar clause, shall be deemed to be a clause relieving the genilar from liability.

relieving the carrier from liability.

RIGHTS AND IMMUNITIES

Sec. 4. (1) Neither the carrier nor the ship shall be liable for loss or damage arising or resulting from unseaworthiness unless caused by want of due diligence on the part of the carrier to make the ship seaworthy, and to secure that the ship is properly manned, equipped, and supplied, and to make the holds, refrigerating and cooling chambers, and all other parts of the ship in which goods are carried fit and safe for their reception, carriage, and preservation in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 3. Whenever loss or damage has resulted from unseaworthiness, the burden of proving the exercise of due diligence shall be on the carrier or other persons claiming exemption under this section.

(2) Neither the carrier nor the ship shall be responsible for loss or damage arising or resulting from—or damage arising or resulting from—

(a) Act, neglect, or default of the master, mariner, pilot, or the servants of the carrier in the navigation or in the management of the ship;

(1) Act or omission of the shipper or owner of the goods, his agent or representative;

(j) Strikes or lockouts or stoppage or restraint of labor from whatever cause, whether partial or general: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to relieve a carrier from responsibility for the carrier's own acts;

(k) Riots and civil commotions;

(k) Riots and civil commotions;

(1) Saving or attempting to save life or property at sea; (m) Wastage in bulk or weight or any other loss or damage arising from inherent defect, quality, or vice of the goods;

(n) Insufficiency of packing;
(o) Insufficiency or inadequacy of marks;
(p) Latent defects not discoverable by due diligence; and
(q) Any other cause arising without the actual fault and privity of the carrier and without the fault or neglect of the agents or servants of the carrier, but the burden of proof shall be on the person claiming the benefit of this exception to show that neither the actual fault or privity of the carrier nor the fault or neglect of the agents or servants of the carrier contributed to the loss or damage.

(3) The shipper shall not be responsible for loss or damage sustained by the carrier or the ship arising or resulting from any cause without the act, fault, or neglect of the shipper, his agents, or his servants.

(4) Any deviation in saving or attempting to save life or property at sea, or any reasonable deviation shall not be deemed to be an infringement or breach of this act or the contract of carriage, and the carrier shall not be liable for any loss or damage resulting therefrom: Provided, however, That if the deviation is for the purpose of loading or unloading cargo or passengers it shall, prima pose of loading or unloading cargo or passengers it shall, prima facie, be regarded as unreasonable.

(5) Neither the carrier nor the ship shall in any event be or become liable for any loss or damage to or in connection with the transportation of goods in an amount exceeding $500 per package lawful money of the United States, or in case of goods not shipped in packages, per customary freight unit, or the equivalent of that sum in other currency, unless the nature and value of such goods have been declared by the shipper before shipment and inserted in the bill of lading. This declaration, if embodied in the bill of lading, shall be prima-facie evidence, but shall not be conclusive on the carrier. on the carrier.

By agreement between the carrier, master, or agent of the carrier, and the shipper, another maximum amount than that mentioned in this paragraph may be fixed: Provided, That such maximum shall not be less than the figure above named. In no event shall the carrier be liable for more than the amount of damage actually surfaced. sustained.

Neither the carrier nor the ship shall be responsible in any event for loss or damage to or in connection with the transportation of the goods if the nature or value thereof has been knowingly and fraudulently misstated by the shipper in the bill of lading.

fraudulently misstated by the shipper in the bill of lading.

(6) Goods of an inflammable, explosive, or dangerous nature to the shipment whereof the carrier, master, or agent of the carrier, has not consented with knowledge of their nature and character, may at any time before discharge be landed at any place or destroyed or rendered innocuous by the carrier without compensation, and the shipper of such goods shall be liable for all damages and expenses directly or indirectly arising out of or resulting from such shipment. If any such goods shipped with such knowledge and consent shall become a danger to the ship or cargo, they may in like manner be landed at any place, or destroyed or rendered innocuous by the carrier without liability on the part of the carrier except to general average, if any.

SURRENDER OF RIGHTS AND IMMUNITIES AND INCREASE OF RESPONSI-

SURRENDER OF RIGHTS AND IMMUNITIES AND INCREASE OF RESPONSI-BILITIES AND LIABILITIES

5. A carrier shall be at liberty to surrender in whole or in part all or any of his rights and immunities or to increase any of his responsibilities and liabilities under this act, provided such surrender or increase shall be embodied in the bill of lading issued to the shipper.

The provisions of this act shall not be applicable to charter parties, but if bills of lading are issued in the case of a ship under a charter party they shall comply with the terms of this act. Nothing in this act shall be held to prevent the insertion in a bill of lading of any lawful provision regarding general average.

SPECIAL CONDITIONS

SPECIAL CONDITIONS

Sec. 6. Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding sections, a carrier, master or agent of the carrier, and a shipper shall, in regard to any particular goods be at liberty to enter into any agreement in any terms as to the responsibility and liability of the carrier for such goods, and as to the rights and immunities of the carrier in respect of such goods, or his obligation as to seaworthiness (so far as the stipulation regarding seaworthiness is not contrary to public policy), or the care or diligence of his servants or agents in regard to the loading, handling, stowage, carriage, custody, care, and discharge of the goods carried by sea: Provided, That in this case no bill of lading has been or shall be issued and that the terms agreed shall be embodied in a receipt which shall that the terms agreed shall be embodied in a receipt which shall be a nonnegotiable document and shall be marked as such.

Any agreement so entered into shall have full legal effect: Provided, That this section shall not apply to ordinary commercial shipments made in the ordinary course of trade but only to other shipments where the character or condition of the property to be carried or the circumstances, terms, and conditions under which the carriage is to be performed are such as reasonably to justify a special agreement.

SEC. 7. Nothing contained in this act shall prevent a carrier or a shipper from entering into any agreement, stipulation, condition, reservation, or exemption as to the responsibility and liability of the carrier or the ship for the loss or damage to or in connection with the custody and care and handling of goods prior to the loading on and subsequent to the discharge from the ship on which the goods are carried by sea.

SEC. 8. The provisions of this act shall not affect the rights and obligations of the carrier under the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, or under the provisions of sections 4281 to 4289, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or of any amendments thereto; or under the provisions of any other enactment for the time being in force relating to the limitation of the liability of the owners of seagoing vessels.

TITLE II

Sec. 9. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting a common carrier by water to discriminate between competing shippers similarly placed in time and circumstances, either (a) with respect to their right to demand and receive bills of lading subject to the provisions of this act; or (b) when issuing such bills of lading, either in the surrender of any of the carrier's rights and immunities or in the increase of any of the carrier's responsibilities and liabilities pursuant to section 5, title I, of this act; or (c) in any other way prohibited by the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended.

SEC. 10. Section 25 of the Interstate Commerce Act is hereby amended by adding the following proviso at the end of paragraph 4 thereof: "Provided, however, That insofar as any bill of lading authorized hereunder relates to the carriage of goods by sea, such bill of lading shall be subject to the provisions of the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act."

SEC. 11. Where under the customs of any trade the weight of any bulk cargo inserted in the bill of lading is a weight ascerany bulk cargo inserted in the bill of lading is a weight ascertained or accepted by a third party other than the carrier or the shipper, and the fact that the weight is so ascertained or accepted is stated in the bill of lading, then, notwithstanding anything in this act, the bill of lading shall not be deemed to be prima-facie evidence against the carrier of the receipt of goods of the weight so inserted in the bill of lading, and the accuracy thereof at the time of shippent shall not be deemed to have been guaranteed by the shippen.

by the shipper.

SEC. 12. Nothing in this act shall be construed as superseding any part of the act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vesany part of the act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property", approved February 13, 1893, or of any other law which would be applicable in the absence of this act, insofar as they relate to the duties, responsibilities, and liabilities of the ship or carrier prior to the time when the goods are loaded on or after the time they are discharged from the ship. charged from the ship.

SEC. 13. This act shall apply to all contracts for carriage of goods by sea to or from ports of the United States in foreign trade. As used in this act the term "United States" included its districts, territories, and possessions: Provided, however, That the trade. As used in this act the term "United States" included its districts, territories, and possessions: Provided, however, That the Philippine Legislature may by law exclude its application to transportation to or from ports of the Philippine Islands. The term "foreign trade" means the transportation of goods between the ports of the United States and ports of foreign countries. Nothing in this act shall be held to apply to contracts for carriage of goods by sea between any port of the United States or its possessions, and any other port of the United States or its possessions, and any other port of the United States or its possessions, Provided, however, That any bill of lading or similar document of title which is evidence of a contract for the carriage of goods by sea between such ports, containing an express statement that it shall be subject to the provisions of this act, shall be subjected hereto by the express provisions of this act: Provided further, That every bill of lading or similar document of title which is evidence of a contract for the carriage of goods by sea from ports of the United States, in foreign trade, shall contain a statement that it shall have effect subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 14. Upon the certification of the Secretary of Commerce that the foreign commerce of the United States in its competition with that of foreign nations is prejudiced by the provisions, or any of them, of title I of this Act, or by the laws of any foreign country or countries relating to the carriage of goods by sea, the President of the United States may, from time to time, by proclamation, suspend any or all provisions of title I of this act for such periods of time or indefinitely as may be designated in the proclamation. The President may at any time rescind such supports.

periods of time or indefinitely as may be designated in the proclamation. The President may at any time rescind such suspension of title I hereof, and any provisions thereof which may have been suspended shall thereby be reinstated and again apply to contracts thereafter made for the carriage of goods by sea. Any proclamation of suspension or recission of any such suspension shall take effect on a date named therein, which date shall be not less than 10 days from the issue of the proclamation.

BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10922, to provide for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, in the absence of the author or sponsor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO SETTLERS OF HOMESTEAD LANDS DURING 1936

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9997, granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask if this is the same bill which we have been called upon to pass every year for the last 4 years? Does it differ in any way from those bills?

Mr. GREEVER. There is no difference at all.
Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the purpose of the act is so that they will keep their rights, even though during the period of the depression they have had to seek a livelihood, or part of a livelihood, in other pursuits and have had to leave the land temporarily for that purpose?

Mr. GREEVER. That is it exactly. It is where they have to leave their homesteads in order to obtain work for the necessities of life. That is what the bill provides.

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman yield further?
Mr. GREEVER. I yield.
Mr. COSTELLO. The Secretary of the Interior has recommended an amendment to the bill. Would the committee be willing to accept that amendment, that is, that payments should be made on the lands, rather than defer

Mr. GREEVER. I may say the committee did not feel that that amendment should be made.

Mr. COSTELLO. But the committee did consider the amendment at the time?

Mr. GREEVER. Yes; the amendment was considered by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar year 1936 should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself or family or in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself or family or to provide for the education of his children, may, upon filing with the register of the district his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons, showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar year 1936, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of fallure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entryman holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder. relief granted hereunder.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONSENT CALENDAR

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES OF HOT SPRINGS NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9183, to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the Hot Springs National Park in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill providing that the Federal Government may acquire additional lands to increase the Hot Springs National Park. I would like to ask the gentleman who is sponsoring this bill what increased amount of money will be required of the Federal Government?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The approximate value of the lots involved in this bill is $15,000, but I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania it is not expected that the Government should bear that burden. The Chamber of Commerce of the City of Hot Springs contemplates the purchase of the lots, with the aid of the Department, but they cannot purchase the lots, or the Government cannot acquire title until it is authorized to do so, even though the lots are given.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman mean that the Chamber of Commerce of Hot Springs is going to see that these lots go to the Federal Government without any cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not say that. I say they are working in cooperation with the Department and will expect to make a substantial contribution.

Mr. RICH. But the gentleman expects some of the departments of Government to make a contribution of this money to purchase the property.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will say to the gentleman that the appropriation is already made. No new appropriation will be required for the purpose, but the Government has expended on this park at the place where we desire to acquire these interests approximately $200,000 to improve it within the past year. There is no adequate entrance to the park. The only purpose is to make it possible for the Government to extend the boundaries so that a proper entrance can be provided.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that, but the Hot Springs National Park is a great area of ground at the present time. We keep adding to these national parks for the purpose of increasing the size of them. Every time we increase the size of them we have additional expense. If the Chamber of Commerce of Hot Springs, Ark., or some other person or persons, is going to see that this land is donated to the Federal Government, I will not object, but if the gentleman cannot give me that assurance, I will have to object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not want to make any statement that will mislead the gentleman. It is my impression that the chamber of commerce is going to make a contribution, together with the Department, and in that way acquire the property. Now, the city wants to contribute as well as the Government and jointly acquire the property which is needed. I am sure the gentleman, if he understood the local situation, would heartily endorse this from the standpoint of patriotism and pride of country. There is no use in spending a lot of money in having these parks and then not having a suitable or appropriate entrance. It is for the interest of the Government as well as for the citizens of Hot Springs.

Mr. RICH. We tried to get that information in our committee hearings, and I was unable to get the information as to what this was going to cost. I think we ought to be able to get that information before we allow this bill to be enacted

Mr. McCLELLAN. I believe the gentleman is in error and was not present at the committee hearing when this bill was considered.

Mr. RICH. I think I was present when this bill was considered on March 19 in the Public Lands Committee. Several similar bills were considered at the same time and we did not know what the cost would be. This is what I am trying to find out now.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken, for I presented the bill myself and the gentleman was not there. No question was raised about the cost. I think the gentleman has confused this with some other bill.

Mr. RICH. I would not want a misstatement on my part to appear in the RECORD, but I may state to the gentleman that I have been present at almost every one of the Public Lands Committee hearings, and the members on the Public Lands Committee will bear me out in this statement. I have only missed a meeting when I was in attendance at some other committee. I do not think, however, I have missed any Public Lands Committee meetings this year. What I have been trying to find out is what the cost of these various improvements will be, and it is very difficult to get the amounts. Each year we add to the national parks it costs for maintenance additional money. I am trying to get from the gentleman a statement as to how much this will cost the Federal Government.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about being present when this bill was taken up.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman can tell me whether the Federal Government is going to have to shoulder all of the cost involved in this project, I wish he would.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may say to the gentleman that the cost should not exceed $15,000. The people there are very much interested and want to cooperate. They are trying to do what the gentleman would expect to be done if this were a park in the gentleman's district.

Mr. RICH. Will they pay half of it?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no authority to bind them, but I think that is the situation.

Mr. RICH. If it does not cost more than half of the $15,000, under the gentleman's assurance, I will let the bill

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have stated the true purpose and intention of all concerned as I understand it to be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundaries of the Hot Springs Na-Be it enacted, etc., That the boundaries of the Hot Springs National Park in the State of Arkansas be, and the same are hereby, extended to include the following land, to wit: Lot 11, block 101; lot 5, block 185; lot 6, block 186; lots 5, 6, and 7, block 187; and lots 1, 2, 3, 6, and 15, block 188, United States Hot Springs Reservation, as surveyed, mapped, and plotted by the United States Hot Springs Commission, and any of such lands when acquired by the Secretary of the Interior on behalf of the United States shall be and remain a part of the Hot Springs National Park, subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto. all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEN. HIGINIO ALVAREZ

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11961, authorizing an appropriation for the payment of the claim of Gen. Higinio Alvarez, a Mexican citizen, with respect to lands on the Farmers Banco in the State of Arizona.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of Mr. WOLCOTT. Rule XIII, clause 1, paragraph 3, dealing with reference of bills to calendars, reads:

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

A calendar of the House to which shall be referred all bills of a private character.

This is a bill of a private character and, in my opinion, clearly comes within this rule and should be on the Private Calendar instead of the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, if I may be heard on the point of order, this is not a private bill but is a bill that interests the Government of Mexico and other individuals. The Government has taken over the property, and to get possession of it, is to pay part of this money to the Government of Mexico and the other part, $5,000, to General Alvarez.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In this case, though, Mexico acts merely as the agent or trustee of the claimant, Gen. Higinio Alvarez.

Mr. BLOOM. I maintain the bill is properly on the Consent Calendar, for one of the claimants under the bill with whom the Government of the United States must settle is the Government of Mexico.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The claim in this case rises between the Government and an individual upon the question of the boundary line between Mexico and the United States. Due to a flood in 1905 by which the course of the Rio Grande River, which constitutes the boundary line, was changed a dispute occurred between the United States and Mexico over the boundary.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. With the indulgence of the Chair, I ask the gentleman from Michigan upon what theory he considers this a private bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is a bill for the settlement of a claim of Gen. Higinio Alvarez.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

In the opinion of the Chair, this is a public bill. It provides that part of this money shall be paid to the Government of Mexico.

The Chair reads from page 204 of Cannon's Procedure:

A bill which applies to a class of individuals as such, of which, though for the benefit of individuals, includes provisions of general legislation, is a public bill.

Examples are then given; for instance:

A bill to indemnify a foreign government for injury to its nationals.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that this is a public bill and is properly on the Consent Calendar.

The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall, of course, be guided by the ruling of the Chair; but, inasmuch as I was honestly of the opinion that it was a private bill and not properly on the calendar, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PARTICIPATION BY THE UNITED STATES IN THE NINTH INTERNA-TIONAL CONGRESS OF MILITARY MEDICINE AND PHARMACY IN RUMANIA

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 538, to provide for participation by the United States in the Ninth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy in Rumania, in 1937; and to authorize and request the President of the United States to invite the International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to hold its tenth congress in the United States in 1939, and to invite foreign countries to participate in that congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TERM OF DISTRICT COURT FOR WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA AT SHAWNEE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11994, to provide for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma at Shawnee, Okla.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a term of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma shall be held annually at Shawnee, Okla., on the first Monday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Shawnee are furnished without expense to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8293, to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been pending here a long time. For years I have had considerable to do with the Longshoremen's Compensation Act. I understood when this bill was referred back to the Judiciary Committee the last time it was on the calendar, it was for the purpose of further consideration in reference to a proposal that I advanced at that time and before to the committee to strike out the limitation of $7,500 for death or injury, a most outrageous provision which the committee did not endorse in its report of a year ago. It is not consistent with any compensation law in America, and the committee should consider that provision and strike out subdivision (m) of section 14 before they report the bill again.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to state that the limitation of $7.500 was placed in the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It was placed in the bill under a misapprehension. In the report which the committee brought out in August 1935 the limitation was deliberately stricken out of the bill after hearing.

Mr. WALTER. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Take the case of a young longshoreman 21 years of age. He is injured for life, and under this limitation he would receive only $7,500. This is not done in New York, Oregon, Massachusetts, or any other maritime State, or, as a matter of fact, in any of 17 States in the Union.

Mr. Speaker, this bill should be defeated rather than passed with this limitation in it, and all longshoremen legislation for which we have worked for years might well be defeated if the limitation is not taken out of this bill. When we passed the Longshoremen's Act, Mr. Graham, then chairman of the Judiciary Committee, made a statement that the limitation would not affect payments covering permanent total disability cases. That was not the fact. It has been the experience since then that if you pay for death or permanent disability only $7,500, you might as well not have any Longshoremen's Compensation Act, for which some of us have fought for a great many years. If you are not going to put that in, some of us are going to try to obstruct the passage of this bill. I thought the committee was going to report it again today without this limitation. If the committee will accept an amendment to repeal subdivision (m) of section 14, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. WALTER. I may say I have asked unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. I certainly cannot speak for the committee and agree to the amendment which the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The committee is very familiar with the amendment and has had it brought to its attention before.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Why not let the bill pass and offer an amendment; then put it up to a vote.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Walter] that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF THE NAME OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11642, to change the name of the Department of the Interior to be known as the Department of Conservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this bill is too important to be brought up on the Consent Calendar, and I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has the bill (H. R. 8293) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act been passed over without prejudice?

The SPEAKER. It has been passed over without prejudice.

SELECTION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1997, to amend Public Law No. 425, Seventy-second Congress, providing for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State Park System, approved March 3, 1933.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I want to study the bill a little more. I do not know as I shall object to it when it comes up for consideration again.

Mr. BURNHAM. I may say that this bill was passed by the Seventy-third Congress and has the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not care whether it passed 50 Congresses. It may have been a bad bill in the first place.

Mr. BURNHAM. I would like to say to the gentleman, however, that this bill has been recommended favorably by the Secretary of the Interior to the Seventy-third Congress. It passed one Congress and has been favorably recommended to this Congress.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Sometimes too much pressure is put on the Secretary of the Interior as well as other secre-

Mr. BURNHAM. I have never been able to put any pressure on the Secretary of the Interior. This land has been ceded to the State of California for park purposes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State Park System", approved March 3, 1933, is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided tauther. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER NEAR OGDENSBURG, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10925, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. There is a similar Senate bill (S. 3971) on the Speaker's desk and, without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk reported the Senate bill, as follows:

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE WHEELER-HOWARD ACT TO THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9866, to extend certain provisions of the act approved June 18, 1934, commonly known as the Wheeler-Howard Act (Public Law No. 383, 73d Cong.; 48 Stat. 984), to the Territory of Alaska, to provide for the designation of Indian reservations in Alaska, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 5, 7, 8, 15, 17, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and react entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes", approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), shall hereafter apply to the Territory of Alaska: Provided, That Indian-chartered corporations in Alaska may be organized and carry on business without regard to residence on any Indian reservation or reservations.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate as an Indian reservation any area of land which has been reserved for the use and occupancy of Indians or Eskimos by section 8 of the act of May 17, 1884 (23 Stat. 26), or by section 14 or section 15 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1101), or which has been heretofore reserved under any Executive order and placed has been heretofore reserved under any Executive order and placed under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior or any bureau thereof, together with additional public lands adjacent thereto, within the Territory of Alaska, or any other public lands which are actually occupied by Indians or Eskimos within said Territory: Provided, That the designation by the Secretary of the Interior of any such area of land as a reservation shall be effective only upon its approval by the vote, by secret ballot, of a majority of the residents thereof who vote at a special election duly called by the Secretary of the Interior upon 30 days' notice: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right-of-way, or other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such owner, claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of the land so occupied. occupied.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF TEXAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10317, providing for a change in the design of the 50-cent pieces authorized to be coined in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of independence of the State of Texas.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, within the year the entire State of Michigan and the Michigan delegation in Congress were interested in getting a 50-cent piece coined in celebration of the centennial of the admission of Michigan into the Union.

At that time the Department and the Secretary opposed this desire of the State of Michigan. I notice now a great many of these bills are coming along. Is there one rule for some and another rule for others in this respect?

Mr. SOUTH and Mr. COCHRAN rose.

Mr. MAPES. I yield first to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COCHRAN. I wanted to answer the gentleman's statement, which had reference to the action of the committee having such matters in charge, and I think I can answer the statement for the committee, being the ranking member.

Mr. SOUTH. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that this is a bill that was passed in 1933, providing for the coinage of one million and a half 50-cent pieces. The bill now under consideration does not increase the number, but simply provides that the design on the reverse side of the coin may be changed so that the total number of coins will remain the same.

Mr. MAPES. There have been several bills of this general nature passed recently. Why should this design be changed?

Mr. SOUTH. For the purpose of expediting and facilitating the sale of this large number of coins; I may say to the gentleman the money is used for the purpose of constructing a memorial museum building on the university campus at Austin, Tex. The Federal Government has already contributed $300,000 and it will be a magnificent building. The regents of the University of Texas are handling the matter and the American Legion is behind it. There will not be a dollar wasted or a dollar go to any special concern for the profit of any individual or any concern other than for the erection of this magnificient building.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman was instrumental in getting this bill passed originally, I congratulate him and I am wondering how he accomplished it.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman refers to 1933?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; or at any other time.

Mr. SOUTH. I did not have the honor of being a Member of this distinguished body at that time and can claim no credit for it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman there has not been one of the bills referred to the Committee on Coinage. Weights, and Measures that has not been favorably reported when the Member introducing the bill requested it be reported.

I personally have handled such bills on the floor of the House for a number of Members on both sides of the aisle and secured their passage. I handled three bills early in the | across the Waccamaw River at or near Conway, S. C.

last session. There have been bills brought in and passed at this session. So far as I know, no matter who introduced a bill, it has been reported without delay if the Member requested the committee to make a report.

Mr. MAPES. I think the knowledge of the gentleman from Missouri is quite limited. If he will examine the files of the committee, I think he will find that his statement does not apply to the Michigan situation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that when the Michigan delegation took this up they were informed that the program for the coinage of 50-cent pieces was completely through for the year, and there would be no further issue of 50-cent pieces. Out of deference to the Secretary of the Treasury, we as good soldiers—as Michigan residents always are-took our medicine.

Mr. COCHRAN. Permit me to ask the gentleman to try and find one favorable recommendation from the Treasury Department for the coinage of 50-cent pieces. You will not find one, and Congress has been passing such bills for

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to say that I commend the act of the Treasury Department. There are a good many manufacturers who manufacture badges and medals, and their people are out of work. These people come here and get the Government to do it. How do you expect the people to be employed if you are continuously getting the Government into business, turning out these badges, medals, and so forth?

Mr. COCHRAN. The factories are not going to coin 50-cent pieces. That work can only be performed by the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not only 50-cent pieces, but medals and badges that you ask the Government to issue which would give employment to the people.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri, as he seems to be an authority on the subject, if this ignoring of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury continues up to the President. Does the President ignore the recommendations of his Secretary of the Treasury? Has any of these bills become a law or has the President refused to sign them?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have been on the committee 9 years, and the committee has overruled the objections of the Treasury Department for those 9 years, and bills have been passed for Members on both sides of the aisle, signed by Presidents, both Republican and Democrats, in the face of Treasury opposition. Several such bills were signed in the last Congress, including the original bill which the pending measure amends.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT WELDON SPRING, MO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9273) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Weldon Spring, Mo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Weldon Spring, Mo., by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1931, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 24, 1934, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from March 3, 1935.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING PANAMA CANAL

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2288, to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is that the matter concerning which we had a rule pending since the last session, and on which the Senate has recently acted?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the same matter, with the exception that the bill on which the rule is pending has three sections. Two deal with the rates and the time of going into effect. Section 2 of that bill provides a commission to study the Panama Canal rules and make a report. The Senate, when it considered the matter, defeated a bill similar to the one on which the rule has issued and enacted a bill substantially the same as section 2 of the former bill. I may say to the gentleman that the War Department, realizing the importance of getting action, realizing that it would not be possible to pass the other bill, as the Senate has defeated the bill as originally introduced, desires to have this bill passed. I may say further that the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who introduced the bill which came before the Committee on Rules and on which the rule issued, is present and unites in the request that this bill be passed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I ask this: This bill, as I understand, only goes to the investigation?

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Which is one feature of the bill introduced by the gentleman from California?

Mr. LEA of California. That is true; yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, there was a great deal of anticipated objection to the bill which was reported out of the Rules Committee. Does the gentleman know how the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] stands on the bill which provides for just the investigation feature?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHL-BACH] is in favor of the bill. He was present when it was reported out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint a Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint a neutral committee of three members, for the purpose of making an independent study and investigation of the rules for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal and the tolls that should be charged therefor and hold hearings thereon, at which interested parties have full opportunity to present their views. Such committee shall report to the President upon said matters prior to January 1, 1937, and shall make such advisory recommendations of changes and modifications of the "Rules for the Measurement of Vessels for the Panama Canal" and the determinations of tolls as it finds necessary or desirable to provide a practical, just, and equitable system of measuring such vessels and levying such tolls. Members of such committee shall be paid compensation at the rate of $825 per month, except that a member who is an officer or employee of the United States shall receive no compensation in addition to his compensation as such officer or employee. Such committee is authorized to appoint such employees as may be pecessary for the execution of its functions ployees as may be necessary for the execution of its functions under this act, the total expense thereof not to exceed $10,000.

Passed the Senate February 24 (calendar day, March 12), 1936.

EDWIN A. HALSEY, Secretary,

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER AT DELAWARE WATER GAP

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 655, H. R. 11402, authorizing the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission of the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct. maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point near Delaware Water Gap.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission of the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Delaware River at a point suitable to the interests of paylington. waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission of the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey all such rights and powers to enter upon the state of New Jersey all such rights and powers to enter upon the lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or exprepriation of property for publishing the state of the same as in the condemnation or exprepriation of property for publishing the same as in the condemnation or exprepriation of property for publishing the same as in the condemnation or exprepriation of property for publishing the same as in the condemnation or exprepriation of property for publishing the same as in the condemnation of expressions. same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission of the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 9, strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VENUE OF STOCKHOLDERS' SUITS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2524, amending section 112 of the United States Code, Annotated (title 28; subtitle "Civil suits; where to be brought").

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman withhold that request for a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will withhold it; but I want to look into the matter. There is no rush about it.

Mr. MILLER. There is no rush about it, except there are a lot of minority stockholders being deprived of any right at all. A subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary has given very careful consideration to this bill, as well as the full committee. We have tried to work out a bill that will really afford some relief to oppressed minority stockholders in corporations.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, there is no objection to its going over for 2 weeks, is there?

Mr. MILLER. I think it is a very important matter.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I know, but these minority stockholders have been without any rights for nigh on these many years.

Mr. MILLER. That is true; but that is no justification for allowing them to continue without any rights.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have not had a chance to look into the matter yet.

The gentleman ought to be willing to take Mr. MILLER.

the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not know who I would rather take the judgment of than the judgment of the gentleman from Arkansas, but I would like this to go over for 2 weeks so that I can look into it.

Mr. MILLER. I have no other alternative if the gentleman insists, of course.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, let it go.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That except as provided in sections 113 to 117 of this title, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in sections 113 to 118 of this title, no civil suit shall be brought in any district court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant: Provided, That in cases where there is more than one defendant, suit may be brought in any district where any of such defendants resides, but the court shall, upon petition transfer such suit to the district where the convenience of all the parties will be best subserved, and process in such cases may be served on any defendant who resides in any other district than the one in which such civil suit is brought by service in the district where such other defendant resides or may be found.

With the following committee amendment:

strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 and insert:

"Sec. 51. Civil suits; where to be brought: Except as provided in the five succeeding sections, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in the six succeeding sections."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment. The substitute merely adds the words that section 51 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., Annotated, title 58, sec. 112), be amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute amendment for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER as a substitute for the committee amendment: Strike out all of lines 3, 4, and 5 and all of line 6, through the word "title", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That section 51 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 58, sec. 112), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 51. Civil suits; where to be brought-except as provided in the five succeeding sections, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in the six succeeding sections."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute amendment

The substitute amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Further committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, beginning with the colon, strike out the entire remainder of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "except that suit by a stockholder on behalf of a corporation may be brought in any district in which suit against the defendant or defendants in said stockholders' action, other than said corporation, might have been brought by such corporation and process in such cases may be served upon such corpora-tion in any district wherein such corporation resides or may be found."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "An act to amend section 51 of the Judicial Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 112)."

RIO GRANDE CANALIZATION PROJECT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11768, authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to ask a question. The report states that "the total diversion by Mexico has been estimated to be at times largely in excess of treaty allotments." This is followed by the statement: "There have likewise been unauthorized diversions from the upper Rio Grande in the United States." This, of course, means Colorado, but I do not find anything in the bill touching the upper waters of the river or affecting them in any way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is no intention to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It seems to me, in view of this fact, that this statement in the report is rather gratuitous.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Somebody must have had something in mind when this statement was placed in the

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am not asking that, if the gentleman please. I am willing that the bill go through, but I do not think a statement like that should appear in the report when there is nothing in the bill dealing with the upper Rio Grande. I am not, however, objecting to the bill on this ground, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit, this is a bill brought in at the request of the State Department. The Rio Grande is a meandering river. Something should be done. Last fall $1,000,000 damage was done to property in the valley through which it passes.

The Secretary of State points out that this bill is necessary to preserve Government as well as private property, and, potentially, life itself. I see no reason to pass the bill over, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw his request.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish to ask the author of the report what purpose the statement serves in the report that there have been unauthorized diversions in the upper Rio

Mr. SHANLEY. That statement covers the meandering nature of the river in America. It is no reflection at all on the State of Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And it certainly has no effect on this bill, has it?

Mr. SHANLEY. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Those upper waters are not involved in any way in this bill?

Mr. SHANLEY. Absolutely not.
Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves the expenditure of $3,000,000. It should be looked into a little more carefully before we authorize such an expenditure by unanimous consent. For this reason, I renew my request that the bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LAWRENCE, ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10631, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

There being no objection, the Cierk read the bill, as follows: Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y., authorized to be built by the New York Development Association, Inc., a corporation organized under and by virtue of the membership corporation law of the State of New York, its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1929, and heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 13, 1931, and further heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved April 15, 1932, February 14, 1933, February 26, 1934, and February 20, 1935, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 26, 1936.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, can a bill that is passed over without prejudice be brought up under suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

PROPERTY BEQUEATHED TO THE UNITED STATES BY JOSEPH PENNELL. DECEASED

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 526, to authorize the Librarian of Congress to accept the property devised and bequeathed to the United States of America by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress, with the advice and consent of the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board and the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, is hereby authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, the property devised and bequeathed to the United States by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased (which will was admitted to probate by the register for the probate of wills and granting of letters of administration in and for the city and county of Philadelphia, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, on the 24th day of June 1926), upon the terms and conditions set forth in the said will, if, in their judgment, such acceptance would be to the best interests of the judgment, such acceptance would be to the best interests of the

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS TRUST FUND BOARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11849, to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third paragraph of the act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The Board is hereby authorized to accept, receive, hold, and administer such gifts, bequests, or devises of property for the benefit of, or in connection with the Library, its collections, or its service, as may be approved by the Board and by the Joint Committee on the Library." mittee on the Library.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS UPON CERTAIN HARBORS. RIVERS, AND INLAND WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10308, to amend article 3 of the "Rules Concerning Lights, etc.", contained in the act entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States", approved June 7, 1897.

"An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States", approved June 7, 1897, is amended to read as follows:

"ART. 3. A steam vessel when towing another vessel or vessels alongside shall, in addition to her side lights, carry two bright white lights in a vertical line, one over the other, not less than 3 feet apart, and when towing one or more vessels astern, regardlss of the length of the tow, shall carry an additional bright white light 3 feet above or below such lights."

With the following committee amendment:

the rivers emptying into the Gulf of Mexico and their tributaries, this article shall not affect the signal lights used on towing vessels which propel the tow by pushing at the rear of the tow."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF VARIOUS CREEKS IN STATE OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11793, to authorize a preliminary examination of various creeks in the State of California with a view to the control of their floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Canal Creek, Fahrens Creek, Black Rascal Creek, Bear Creek, Miles Creek, Owens Creek, Duck Creek, Mariposa Creek, Little Deadmans Creek, Big Deadmans Creek, and Burns Creek in the State of California, with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROMOTION AND MAINTENANCE OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 754, to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes", as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 997), entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes", is hereby amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "And provided further, That the coastwise laws of the United States shall not extend to the Virgin Islands of the United States until the President of the United States, after a full investigation of the local needs and conditions, shall, by proclamation, declare that an adequate shipping service has been established to such islands and fix a date for going into effect of the same.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 1, insert the words "And provided further", and on page 2, line 4, after the word "States", strike out the words "after a full investigation of the local needs and conditions, shall, by proclamation, declare that an adequate shipping service has been established to such islands and fix a date for going into effect of the same" and insert the following: "shall, by proclamation, declare that such coastwise laws shall extend to the Virgin Islands and fix a date for the going into effect of same."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF PASSAIC RIVER, N. J.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Passaic River in the State of New Jersey, with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT OF 1933

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9484, to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman will explain the purpose of this bill.

Mr. PIERCE. I shall be pleased to do so. This is the same bill that passed the Congress last August, but the Senate amended it by what is known as the Sheppard amendment. On account of the Sheppard amendment the bill was vetoed by the President. The President is willing to sign this bill, and I understand there will be no amendment to the bill if it is passed at this session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the gentleman whether it will be necessary to raise the amount of capital which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to raise?

Mr. PIERCE. No; and it will not require any new appropriation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I notice there is no provision in the bill stating that the capital of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not be raised by this amount. Has the money already been made available?

Mr. PIERCE. There is money available in the present fund.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I happen to have presided over the hearings on this particular bill, and I may state that out of the $125,000,000 that was first allocated for the various purposes stated in section 36 there remains about $4,000,000 available. A great many nonprofit operating companies, organized, however, as private profit companies, wish to reorganize, and they have been denied access to this fund, either because they have not needed refinancing or they have no right to come in, inasmuch as section 36 provided that only nonprofit companies could come in. Under the language of that particular section as drafted here, the scope is broadened to take care of a lot of projects which should be made eligible, but cannot come in because of certain legal technicalities with respect to their organization.

Mr. PIERCE. Companies to be eligible under the present law are required to be organized at the time the original act was passed. This bill will allow new companies to be organized that may buy out the old companies that may want to sell. This cannot be done now on account of the legal technicalities involved.

The R. F. C. sent up their principal solicitor, who appeared before the subcommittee of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kleberg], together with Mr. Schram, who is at the head of the Reclamation Service of the R. F. C. They stated they had pending a few marginal projects that could not be aided as the law now stands.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand, all of the original commitment of $125,000,000 has been lent except about $4,000,000?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the percentage of repayment?
Mr. KLEBERG. It is very high and they are getting along

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is there going to be needed any additional capital by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance this bill?

Mr. PIERCE. None.

Mr. KLEBERG. I did not go into that because that was not involved in the proposed legislation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that since the original bill was before the Banking and Currency Committee this is the first time we have had any intimation that any such bill was to be passed and, of course, we are constantly protecting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation against bills that would compel them to increase their capital against their wishes.

Mr. KLEBERG. The R. F. C. Board, including the chairman, is for this bill, I feel, because of the chairman's statement to me.

Mr. PIERCE. And also the chief solicitor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as |

Be it enacted, etc., That the first two sentences of section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans as hereinafter provided, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $125,000,000, including commitments and disbursements heretofore made, to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts, mutual nonprofit companies and incorporated water users' associations duly organized under the laws of any State, and to or for the benefit of political subdivisions of States which have or propose to purchase or otherwise acquire projects or portions thereof devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands for agricultural purposes. Such loans shall be made for the purpose of enabling any such district, political subdivision, company, or association (hereafter referred to as the "borrower") to reduce and refinance its outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with any such project; or, whether or not "borrower") to reduce and refinance its outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with any such project; or, whether or not it has any such indebtedness, to purchase, acquire, construct, or complete such a project or any part thereof, or to purchase or acquire additional drainage, levee, or irrigation works, or property, rights, or appurtenances in connection therewith, and to repair, extend, or improve any such project or make such additions thereto as are consonant with or necessary or desirable for the proper functioning thereof or for the further assurance of the ability of the borrower to repay its loan: Provided, That it is not intended that additional lands will thereby be brought into production." duction.

Sec. 2. Such section is further amended by striking out the sentence therein which reads as follows: "When any loan is sentence therein which reads as follows: "When any loan is authorized pursuant to the provisions of this section and it shall then or thereafter appear that repairs and necessary extensions or improvements to the project of such district, political subdivision, company, or association are necessary or desirable for the proper functioning of its project or for the further assurance of its ability to repay such loan, and if it shall also appear that such repairs and necessary extensions or improvements are not designed to bring new lands into production, the Corporation, within the limitation as to total amount provided in this section, may make an additional loan or loans to such district, political subdivision, company, or association for such purpose or purposes."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "State", insert "or Territory."
Page 2, line 4, after the word "States", insert "and Territories."
Page 2, line 20, after the word "Provided", strike out "That it is not intended that additional lands will thereby be brought into production" and insert "That the terms of this act shall not permit additional or new land to be brought into production."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL RIFLE AND PISTOL MATCHES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10763, to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the National Defense Act", approved May 28, 1928.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not sure that the report on this bill complies with the Ramseyer rule. I am inclined to believe that the Ramseyer rule is broad enough to cover such cases, and under that rule existing law should have been set forth in the report. I have objected heretofore to several bills for this reason. I do not like to object to a meritorious bill simply because some rule has not been complied with.

I assume the bill simply adds the words "Coast Guard" to the several units of the Government which participate in these matches. If this is the only purpose of the bill, I have no particular objection to it, but I do want to call attention to the fact that the Ramseyer rule has not been complied with in the filing of this report, and it is rather difficult for us to know from the bill and report what it purports to do unless that rule is complied with.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs, and was introduced by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Edmiston]. I can assure the gentleman that its purpose is just as the gentleman has stated, to have the Coast Guard participate in these matches. I hope the gentleman will allow the bill to pass.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan press the point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I did not make the point of order, and I do not think I shall. I simply call attention to reconsider was laid on the table.

the fact that I have objected on this account to bills heretofore and I shall be constrained to do so in the future if the Ramseyer rule is not complied with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. There is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's desk, and, without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk reported the Senate bill (S. 3860), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the National Defense Act", approved May 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 786; U. S. C., title 32, sec. 181b), is hereby amended by inserting the words "Coast Guard" after the words "Marine Corps," and before the words "National Guard", in the fourth line of said

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The House bill (H. R. 10763) was laid on the table.

COMBINATION FISHING AND FREIGHTING LICENSE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11036) to amend section 4321, Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 46, sec. 263), and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4321, Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 263), be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The form of a license for carrying on the coasting trade or fisheries shall be as follows

"License for carrying on the (here insert 'coasting trade', 'whale fishery', 'mackerel fishery', or 'cod fishery', as the case may be).

"In pursuant of title L (Rev. Stat. 4311-4390), 'Regulation of Vessels in Domestic Commerce', of the Revised Statutes of the United States (inserting here the name of the husband or the United States (inserting here the name of the husband or managing owner, with his occupation and place of abode, and the name of the master, with the place of his abode), having sworn that the (insert here the description of the vessel, whether ship, brigantine, snow, schooner, sloop, or whatever else she may be), called the (insert here the vessel's name), whereof the said (naming the master) is master, burden (insert here the number of tons, in words) tons, as appears by her enrollment, dated at (naming the district, day, month, and year, in words at length, but if she be less than 20 tons, insert, instead thereof, 'proof being had of her admeasurement'), shall not be employed in any trade, while this license shall continue in force, whereby the revenue of the United States shall be defrauded, and having also sworn (or affirmed) that this license shall not be used for any other vessel, or for any other employment, than is herein specified, license is or for any other employment, than is herein specified, license is hereby granted for the said (inserting here the description of the vessel) called the (inserting here the vessel's name), to be employed in carrying on the (inserting here 'coasting trade', 'whale fishery', 'mackerel fishery', or 'cod fishery', as the case may be), for 1 year from the date hereof, and no longer. Given under my hand and seal, at (naming the said district), this (inserting the particular day) day of (naming the month), in the year (specifying the number of the year in words at length);": Provided, That vessels of 5 net tons and over entitled under the laws of the United States to be enrolled and licensed or licensed for the coasting trade may, if and while employed exclusively on the inland waters of the United States, as defined by the Secretary of Commerce under the authority of section 2, act of February 19, 1895, be licensed for the "coasting trade and mackerel fishery", and shall be deemed to have sufficient license for engaging in the coasting trade and the taking of fish of every description, including shelifish, within such waters. That vessels operating on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters under enrollment and license issued in conformity with the provisions of enrollment and license issued in conformity with the provisions of section 4318, Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 258), shall be deemed to have sufficient license for engaging in the taking of fish of every description within such waters without change in the form of enrollment and license prescribed under the authority of that section.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 6, strike out "if and while employed exclusively on the inland waters of the United States as defined by the Secretary of Commerce under the authority of section 2, act of February 19.

Page 3, line 12, strike out "within such waters" and insert in lieu thereof "Provided further, That the provisions of sections 4364 and 4365 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 310 and 311) shall be, and are hereby, made applicable to vessels so licensed: And provided further, That."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, at this time I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a list of 10 questions asked in an editorial of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. O Mr. Speaker, this foolishness ought to stop. However, I shall not object if I can have time to answer them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MAPES. I object.

EXTENDING THE PROVISIONS OF THE FOREST EXCHANGE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9483) to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act, as amended, to certain lands so that they may become part of the Umatilla and Whitman National Forests.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within the following-described boundaries any lands not in Government ownership which are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes may be offered in exchange under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465), as amended by the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1090; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 16, secs. 485, 486), upon notice as therein provided, and upon acceptance of title shall become parts of the Umatilla or Whitman National Forests, to wit:

Willamette meridian.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object.

ERECTION OF MONUMENT TO MEMORY OF GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11854) to provide for the erection of a monument to Gouverneur Morris.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he wants more time to look into the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the people of the great State of New York should be allowed, if they wish to erect a monument to Gouverneur Morris, to do so. At this time, when we are doing everything we can to balance the Budget, which will give encouragement to putting people back to work, it is rather inconsistent and incongruous to appropriate $50,000 for a monument to Gouverneur Morris or any other great citizen, and for that reason I have asked that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor for this bill, and inasmuch as the Nation is making preparations to celebrate the sesquicentennial anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States on September 17, 1937, the State of New York, and I am certain every State in the Union, wishes to honor and respect the man who penned the final draft of the Constitution.

For the information of the gentleman, I might state that a signer of the Declaration of Independence, Lewis Morris, is also buried in the same plot of ground on which it is proposed to erect this monument. This bill does not say specifically that the amount involved in the erection of the monument shall be $50,000. It provides that so much thereof as may be required for that purpose shall be appropriated. In addition to Gouverneur Morris, who penned the Constitution, all the other members of that patriotic Morris family are buried there, and, inasmuch as the whole country is now making preparation to honor Gouverneur Morris and the other signers of the Constitution, the point raised by the gentleman, while ordinarily it might be well taken. I do not think applies now with respect to this particular proposition.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to see the gentleman from New York do every honor to Gouverneur Morris. I do not object to the city of New York or the State of New York or, under ordinary circumstances, to the Federal Government appropriating money for that purpose, but it seems to me out of keeping with the times for us to appropriate $50,000 to erect a monument to this man, although he was of tremendous value to his Nation, when so many of our people are without bread and potatoes to keep body and soul together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill going over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING MUNICIPALITIES IN ALASKA TO INCUR BONDED INDEBTEDNESS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8766) to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. For the last 2 or 3 years we have been called upon to act in specific instances wherein the municipalities in the Territory of Alaska wanted to increase their bonded indebtedness. As I understand this bill, it is a blanket bill to provide that the municipalities of Alaska may bond upon the basis of percentage of the taxable property, and so forth, to obviate the necessity of these municipalities coming here periodically to get this permission?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct in every respect.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to commend the gentleman on this bill if it will accomplish that purpose, and on the Territory of Alaska, because I have often wondered why a blanket bill has not heretofore been introduced.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In the Territory of Alaska incorporated municipalities cannot tax over 2 percent of the valuation of their property. There is no other taxation, so the bonded indebtedness could not get very high.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska are hereby authorized to incur bonded indebtedness for the construction, acquisition, extension, repair, or improvement of public works of a permanent character, including public utilities. The total outstanding bonded indebtedness of any such municipal corporation shall not exceed 10 percent of the aggregate taxable value of the real and personal property within the corporate limits of such municipal corporations: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall affect any bonded indebtedness heretofore incurred by a municipal corporation in said Territory. said Territory said Territory.

Sec. 2. No bonded indebtedness shall be incurred by any municipal corporation in the Territory of Alaska unless the proposal to incur such indebtedness be first submitted to and approved by not less than 65 percent of the qualified electors of such municipal corporation whose names appear on the last tax assessment roll or record of such municipality for purposes of municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of any such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of such municipal corporation, one of which shall be posted at the front door of the United States post office therein. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, the form of ballot, and the canvass of the returns shall be prescribed by the governing body of such municipality.

SEC. 3. All bonds so issued shall be serial in form and shall mature within not to exceed 30 years from the date of issuance thereof. Such bonds may bear such date or dates, may be in such denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, and may be redeemable or nonredeemable (either with or without premium), and may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, or principal only, as shall be prescribed by the governing body of the municipality issuing the bonds. The bonds so issued shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the governing body of the municipality issuing the same, not to exceed, however, 6 percent per annum. All such bonds shall be sold for not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the governing body of every municipal corporation which incurs such bonded indebtedness to levy or cause to be levied each year during the life of such out-nunicipal corporation which incurs such bonded indebtedness to levy or cause to be levied each year during the life of such outstanding bonds, taxes in amounts sufficient to seasonably provide for payment and to pay all interest on and the principal of such obligations as they respectively accrue and mature.

SEC. 5. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 23, after the word "payable", strike out "in such medium of payment and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RETIREMENT ANNUITIES FOR LIBRARIANS OF CONGRESS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11848) to authorize the retirement annuities for persons who serve as Librarian of Congress for 35 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I reserve my objection.

Mr. KELLER. It has not occurred to me that there could possibly be an objection to this bill, and I believe, if the gentlemen will think a moment, that he will realize the bill ought to pass. Here is a man who for thirty-seven and a half years has served this Government and given it the greatest library in the entire world. He is now in his seventy-fifth year.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield for a Fourth of July speech. Let us hear some of the reasons.

Mr. KELLER. The reason is this. When he came here there was no such thing as retirement. This is for the purpose of doing for him what we do automatically for many hundreds of others.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This is for the Librarian himself?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If he has been here that long he ought to have saved enough money to take care of himself now.

Mr. KELLER. That is not a matter for the gentleman and me to decide. They may say the same about us.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, we are about to decide it now, are we not?

Mr. KELLER. I hope we will decide it in favor of this man. Mr. ZIONCHECK. I thought this applied to everyone who worked over there. The trouble with that Library is that too many of them have been serving for too long a stretch, and if they did not serve it so long, we could probably get better service.

Mr. KELLER. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is entirely too much "efficiency" over there. I object.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12027, to authorize the execution of plans for a permanent memorial to Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman let that go over without prejudice? The chairman of the special committee does not happen to be present at this time. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LOANS BY FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION ON LANDS IN DRAINAGE. IRRIGATION, AND CONSERVANCY DISTRICTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9009, to make lands in drainage, irrigation, and conservancy districts eligible for loans by the Federal land banks and other Federal agencies loaning on farm lands, notwithstanding the existence of prior liens of assessments made by such districts, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the Federal land banks, the Land Bank Commissioner, and any lending or financing agency established by or under the Farm Credit Act of 1933, as amended, or the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, are authorized to make loans or acquire niortgages on lands in any drainage, irrigation, or conservancy district, notwithstanding the existence of any prior lien or charge arising out of an assessment for special benefits made by such district, in any case where (1) such land is otherwise eligible for a loan, (2) such assessment is payable over a puriod of years, and (3) reasonable security exists for the repayment of the loan, taking into consideration all facts and values, including the term and size of the loan, the integrity of the applicant, and the increased earning capacity of the lands arising from the improvements or benefits in respect of which the assessment was made.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That completes the Consent Calendar.

TO AMEND RAILWAY LABOR ACT

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2496) to amend the Railway Labor Act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Railway Labor Act, approved May 20, 1926, as amended, herein referred to as "Title I", is hereby further amended by inserting after the enacting clause the caption "Title I" and by adding the following title II:

"TITLE II

"SEC. 201. All of the provisions of title I of this act, except the provisions of section 3 thereof, are extended to and shall cover every common carrier by air engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, and every carrier by air transporting mail for or under contract with the United States Government, and every air pilot or other person who performs any work as an employee or subordinate efficiel of such carrier or carriers subject to its or their continuing. official of such carrier or carriers, subject to its or their continuing authority to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his

"SEC. 202. The duties, requirements, penalties, benefits, and privileges prescribed and established by the provisions of title I of this act, except section 3 thereof, shall apply to said carriers by air and their employees in the same manner and to the same extent as though such carriers and their employees were specifically included within the definition of 'carrier' and 'employee', respectively, in section 1 thereof.

"SEC. 203. The parties or either party to a dispute between an employee or a group of employees and a carrier or carriers by air may invoke the services of the National Mediation Board, and the jurisdiction of said Mediation Board is extended to any of the following cases:

"(a) A dispute concerning changes in rates of pay, rules, or writing conditions not adjusted by the parties in conference.

"(b) Any other dispute not referable to an adjustment board, as hereinafter provided, and not adjusted in conference between the parties, or where conferences are refused.

"The National Mediation Board may proffer its services in case any labor emergency is found by it to exist at any time.

"The services of the Mediation Board may be invoked in a case under this title in the same manner and to the same extent as are the disputes covered by section 5 of title I of this act.

"SEC. 204. The disputes between an employee or group of employees and a carrier or carriers by air growing out of grievances, or out of the interpretation or application of agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, including cases pending and unadjusted on the date of approval of this act before the National Labor Relations Board, shall be handled in the usual manner up to and including the chief operating officer of the carrier designated to handle such disputes; but, falling to reach an adjustment in this manner, the disputes may be referred by petition of the parties or by either party to an appropriate adjustment board, as hereinafter provided, with a full statement of the facts and supporting data bearing upon the disputes.

"It shall be the duty of every carrier and of its employees, acting through their representatives, selected in accordance with the provisions of this title, to establish a board of adjustment of jurisdiction not exceeding the jurisdiction which may be lawfully exercised by system, group, or regional boards of adjustment, under the authority of section 3, title I, of this act.

ercised by system, group, or regional boards of adjustment, under the authority of section 3, title I, of this act.

"Such boards of adjustment may be established by agreement between employees and carriers either on any individual carrier, or system, or group of carriers by air and any class or classes of its or their employees; or pending the establishment of a permanent Nationad Board of Adjustment as hereinafter provided. Nothing in this act shall prevent said carriers by air, or any class or classes of their employees, both acting through their representatives selected in accordance with provisions of this title, from mutually agreeing to the establishment of a National Board of Adjustment of temporary duration and of similarly limited jurisdiction.

"Sec. 205. When, in the judgment of the National Mediation Board, it shall be necessary to have a permanent national board of adjustment in order to provide for the prompt and orderly settlement of disputes between said carriers by air, or any of them, and its or their employees, growing out of grievances or out of the interpretation or application of agreements between said carriers by air or any of them, and any class or classes of its or their employees, covering rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, the National Mediation Board is hereby empowered and directed, by its order duly made, published, and served, to direct the said carriers by air and such labor organizations of their employees, national in scope, as have been or may be recognized in accordance with the provisions of this act, to select and designate four representatives who shall constitute a board which shall be known as the National Air Transport Adjustment Board. Two members of said National Air Transport Adjustment Board shall be selected by said carriers by air and two members by the said labor organizations of the employees, within 30 days after the date of the order of the National Mediation Board, in the manner and by the procedure prescribed by title I of this act for the selecti of the National Mediation Board, in the manner and by the procedure prescribed by title I of this act for the selection and designation of members of the National Railroad Adjustment Board. The National Air Transport Adjustment Board shall meet within 40 days after the date of the order of the National Mediation Board directing the selection and designation of its members and shall organize and adopt rules for conducting its proceedings, in the manner prescribed in section 3 of title I of this act. Vacancies in membership or office shall be filled, members shall be appointed in case of failure of the carriers or of labor organizations of the employees to select and designate representatives, members of the National Air Transport Adjustment Board shall be compensated, hearings shall be held, findings and awards made, stated, served, and enforced, and the number and compensation of any necessary hearings shall be held, findings and awards made, stated, served, and enforced, and the number and compensation of any necessary assistants shall be determined and the compensation of such employees shall be paid, all in the same manner and to the same extent as provided with reference to the National Railroad Adjustment Board by section 3 of title I of this act. The powers and duties prescribed and established by the provisions of section 3 of title I of this act with reference to the National Railroad Adjustment Board and the several divisions thereof are hereby conferred upon and shall be exercised and performed in like manner and to the same extent by the said National Air Transport Adjustment Board, not exceeding, however, the jurisdiction conferred upon said National Air Transport Adjustment Board by the provisions of this title. From and after the organization of the National Air Transport Adjustment Board, if any system, group, or regional board of adjustment established by any carrier or carriers by air and any class or classes of its or their employees is not satisfactory to either party thereto, the said party, upon 90 days' notice to the other party, may elect to come under the jurisdiction of the National Air Transport Adjustment Board.

"Sec. 206. All cases referred to the National Labor Relations

"SEC. 206. All cases referred to the National Labor Relations oard, or over which the National Labor Relations Board shall Board, or over which the National Labor Relations Board shall have taken jurisdiction, involving any dispute arising from any cause between any common carrier by air engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or any carrier by air transporting mail for or under contract with the United States Government, and employees of such carrier or carriers, and unsettled on the date of approval of this act, shall be handled to conclusion by the Mediaapproval of this act, shall be handled to conclusion by the Media-tion Board. The books, records, and papers of the National Labor Relations Board and of the National Labor Board pertinent to such case or cases, whether settled or unsettled, shall be trans-ferred to the custody of the National Mediation Board.

"Sec. 207. If any provision of this title or application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"Sec. 208. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for expenditure by the Mediation Board in carrying out the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSser] is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] to 20 minutes.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I shall take but a few minutes of the time of the House in regard to this matter, because it is so simple that it does not require much explanation. This bill merely places the Air Pilots Association under the terms of the Railway Labor Act, which provides for the settlement of disputes. The Railway Labor Act has been found so very satisfactory for the purpose for which it was originally enacted that the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce felt this would be a most satisfactory means for the settlement of disputes arising between the air pilots and their employers.

I believe all must concede that the operation of the Railway Labor Act has preserved peace in the railway industry more effectively than has ever before been possible. For that reason we believe that it is very desirable to bring the Air Pilots Association under the operation of the Railway Labor Act. That is all that this bill does; nothing more. It does not change the terms of the Railway Labor Act. It simply brings the air pilots' organization within the terms of the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. Does that include all pilots, in whatever service they may be?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Just the air pilots.

Mr. FIESINGER. In connection with the railroads?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. No; all air pilots.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not embrace the Army and Navy air pilots.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Oh, no; no.

Mr. BLANTON. It is only commercial air pilots.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Only commercial air pilots. I thank the gentleman for calling that to my attention.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the general principle of the bill, but I do think that both sides should have a hearing on a bill of this sort which affects an entire industry. The fact of the matter is that the air lines have not been heard before the committee on this bill. It is also a fact that the air lines are now carrying the mail on a fixed price per mile, maximum and minimum. While they have those contracts, the Government has made various orders which have very much increased the expense of carrying the mail, without increasing their compensation.

Doubtless the effect of this bill, owing to the demands of the Pilots Association, will be to increase the charges of the lines, and they will not have anywhere to go to get the increased compensation. Therefore it seems to me that this bill ought to be postponed. That is the reason I asked to have the bill passed over without prejudice, so that the air lines could be heard. They have not yet been heard. I think it is an unfair thing to subject them to this legislation when they have not been heard.

As you all know, most of the air lines are today running at a loss. If they can, they want to make some arrangement to get together and get themselves out of the red.

It is a young industry. It is not like the railway industry or other industries in which all the conditions are known. I think the existing lines should be left free until they have got a fair start before we pass legislation of this type. At least they should be given a full and fair hearing.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WATER USERS ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4232) to create a commission and to extend further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. McLaughlin (at the request of Mr. Coffee), for 2 weeks, on account of necessity for his presence in his congressional district for that length of time.

To Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois, for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. Moritz, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. O'LEARY, indefinitely, on account of illness. To Mr. Sirovich, for 1 week, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein two statements from the commissioners of health and labor of Puerto Rico in regard to the social security bill being a standard for the island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the policy laid down by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], I must object.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is the Potsdam policy, inaugurated Friday, effective for today only, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The Senate, sitting as a court for the trial of articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, met at 12 o'clock meridian, in accordance with the order adopted yesterday prescribing the hours of the daily sessions.

The managers on the part of the House, Hon. Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas; Hon. Randolph Perkins, of New Jersey; and Hon. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, appeared in the seats provided for them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, with his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., and R. O. Cullen, Esq., of Miami, Fla., associated with Mr. Hoffman, appeared in the seats assigned them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will open by proclamation the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

On motion of Mr. Robinson, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment for Monday, April 6, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. LEWIS. I note the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.
The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF A. L. RANKIN (CONTINUED)

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge Rankin, yesterday you were saying, as you left the stand, that the reason you paid Judge Ritter in cash, in chambers, was that it would have embarrassed you and the judge, you feared, and, second, because of the precarious condition of the bank in which the money was. Is that true?-A. That is true.

Q. Now, Judge, as a matter of fact, the First National Bank of Miami was at that time and is now and at all times intervening has been reputed to be a tower of financial strength; is not that true?-A. That is correct.

Q. You put in there thousands of dollars, which you left there for days and days?—A. That is true.

Q. Judge Rankin, if you were afraid of embarrassment for yourself or Judge Ritter if it might become known that the cash payment was made, why, then, did you not adopt the same course with respect to the other payments that you made to Judge Ritter?-A. They were out of collections that I had made for work done in cases which Judge Ritter had retained an interest in; they were very easily explainable; and the money was not paid or earned in his court.

Q. There is no endorsement appearing on any one of these checks, is there?-A. I do not understand.

Q. There is no left-hand, lower-corner endorsement, such as you put on later in the privacy of your own office in the case of the $3,000 check, to explain any of these other five checks, is there?—A. I do not recall.

Q. Not until you had got to the $200 check did you make any such endorsement; is not that true?-A. The $200 check?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not recall.

Q. That was made in September 1931, I believe. I will ask you to look at this check [the check was handed to the

(The check was also examined by Mr. Walsh, of counsel.) The WITNESS. Will you let me look at that check again,

Q. Was this endorsement in the lower left-hand corner on this check written at the time it went through the bank?-

A. To the best of my recollection it was.

Q. So by September 23, 1931, you had become aware of the fact that there was some criticism, and you put this endorsement on for the first time?-A. I do not recall that there was any criticism or that I had heard of any criticism.

Q. As a matter of fact, that was buzzing like a beehive down there, wasn't it, by the fall of 1931?-A. I didn't hear of it. At that time the best of my recollection is that I had not heard anything about any criticism.

Q. When you made this final check to him that we have in this record, January 28, 1932, for $300, you made no endorsement on that?—A. You say I made none?

Q. No .- A. I may not have made any.

Q. Although there was no obligation in writing extant, and never had been showing any obligation whatsoever on your part toward Judge Ritter, then for the first time you conceived the idea it was necessary to take a receipt for the money; is that true?—A. No; it is not true.

Q. When did you conceive the idea it was necessary to take a receipt?-A. I told Judge Ritter when I made the first payment that when I finished paying him I would take a receipt in full.

- Q. But you only took a receipt for $300, and then only on January 28, 1932, the date of that check for $300.-A. I took a receipt for $300 which, to the best of my recollection, recited also payment in full for the balance due on purchase of business.
- Q. That is right. We have no quarrel about that. What I am asking is that on that day you gave him a check which showed on its face it was for $300, did you not?-A. I did.

Q. Then for the first time you conceived the idea of taking a written receipt?—A. No.

Q. I do not mean you had not told Judge Ritter, according to your statement now, that you were going to insist upon a receipt in full when you finished the payment, but I mean that was the first time there was a scratch of the pen.-A. That is the first time a receipt was issued.

Q. Judge Rankin, we come down to April 14, 1931, when you again took cash to his office and in the privacy of his private office gave it to him, which was $2,000, which you testified yesterday you had taken, from Palm Beach $1,000 and from Miami $1,000, and taken it up to his private office and given it to him. Upon that occasion, you said yesterday, the same reasons applied for making that payment in cash as applied to the $2,500 payment which was made on December 24, 1930. Is that true?—A. That is true I testified that: ves.

Q. No bank had failed on April 13, had it?—A. Really I do not recall. The banking situation in Florida for several years was very precarious, and you could not tell one morning what was going to happen next morning.

Q. Neither one of your banks was in a precarious condition, was it?-A. The Central Farmers of West Palm Beach was supposed to be a very substantial bank. The First National in Miami was supposed to be a very substantial bank,

Q. And it was nationally known?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will you kindly allow the witness to complete his answer?

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Have you anything further to say? Counsel thought I had interrupted your answer.—A. But the very substantial banks in Florida during those years—you never could tell whenever they might have a big run on them for 2 or 3 or 4 days, and then close up.

Q. You wish to testify before these gentlemen of the High Court of Impeachment that you thought there was danger of the First National Bank of Miami failing in April 1931?—A. No; I do not testify that. I did not say that.

Q. What do you think about the bank at West Palm Beach?-A. I do not think that, either.

Q. You testified yesterday the reason you gave this money to Judge Ritter in cash was that the City National Bank of Miami had failed the day before, and then in answer to a question you said the same reasons applied to the payment in cash in privacy on April 14. What bank had failed in April?-A. Really I do not recall.

Q. Do not you know none of them had failed?-A. No; I do not.

Q. You do not know?—A. No; I do not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I deem to be pertinent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question submitted by the Senator from Utah.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Do counsel intend to offer any of the checks for the record?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. All of them.

Mr. KING. I should like to have that done.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Of course, I am just a rank amateur in proceedings of this character, and know nothing about your procedure. The reason the managers are not doing it at the time the testimony relating to the several exhibits is given is simply because we are going to offer the exhibits at once and check them off to be sure we have them in. We desire to conform entirely to the wishes of the Senate in the matter. If you prefer that we introduce them as we go along, we shall be glad to do it.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge Rankin, as I understood your testimony yesterday I believe you said from the moment of the dissolution of the partnership up until the time that you went into his private office and gave him in cash that first $2,500, neither you nor Judge Ritter mentioned anything about any indebtedness you owed him?-A. I do not recall any such testimony yesterday.

Q. I beg your pardon, sir. Is or not that true?—A. Will you ask the question again?

Q. From the time of the dissolution of the partnership Ritter & Rankin on February 15, 1929, when he ascended the bench, had you or not said anything to him or he to you about the payment of this alleged obligation?-A. I do not say that I did not mention it to him.

Q. You did so swear at Miami, did you not?—A. I may have sworn that in Miami.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily proceed to the consideration of legislative business in order to receive a message from the House of Representatives, and that when that shall have been done the Senate proceed as a Court of Impeachment with the consideration of the case of Judge Ritter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The message from the House appears elsewhere in the legislative proceedings of today's RECORD.)

The Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment resumed its session.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

- Q. What is your testimony now with respect to that matter?—A. I do not recall that I had any conversation with Judge Ritter with reference to the payment of this amount that I owed him.
- Q. I will ask you, as a matter of fact, if you do not know there never was a word said between you or by either of you on that subject from February 15, 1929, when the partnership was dissolved, up until the payment of the $2,500 in cash in chambers?—A. We discussed the question of the amount of money I should pay him for his half interest in the business. We had an agreement about it, and later on I talked to Judge Ritter two or three times before he left West Palm Beach and assumed his duties in Miami with reference to it.
- Q. You did?—A. I did. After he went to Miami, to the best of my recollection, I never did discuss it with him after he went on the bench and assumed his duties.
- Q. I will ask you if you did not swear before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House in Miami that from February 1929, at which time the partnership was dissolved, up to December 24, 1932, when you were awarded the $75,000 by Judge Ritter, Judge Ritter never called upon you for payment of the $5,000 which you said you owed him. That is correct?—A. That is correct except to this extent—that before he left West Palm Beach we did discuss it before he went to Miami; and he had taken his oath of office a few days before he went down there.
- Q. So he talked to you several times in West Palm Beach before he left for Miami about it?—A. That is the best of my recollection, that we had a conversation about it on two or three occasions.
- Q. Now, I will ask you if you were not asked this question in that hearing:
- Q. And had never discussed the matter with you during those 2 years, or practically 2 years?

And if you did not reply:

No.

A. I probably did.

- Q. Is that your testimony now?—A. It is. I do not recall that we—
- Q. What was the content of those conversations which Judge Ritter had with you with respect to this alleged debt before he left West Palm Beach?—A. Just a casual discussion.
- Q. Was he asking you to pay him?—A. No; because the understanding was that I was not to pay him until I had an opportunity to pay him. In other words, he knew that I was in debt. He knew that I was very heavily in debt at the time.
- Q. Was it contemplated that you were to pay him in installments?—A. The understanding was that I was to pay him as and when I could.
- Q. And was the understanding in your mind that that meant that you were to pay him in installments as and when you could?—A. No; I do not say that that is true.
- Q. But your testimony is that you did it that way. You did not pay Judge Ritter a dime out of the $12,500 fee that Judge Akerman allowed you; did you?—A. No; I did not.

- Q. You did not pay him a dime out of the first $2,500 fee that he alowed you in May 1930?—A. No; I did not.
- Q. You paid Walter Richardson $1,000 out of the $12,500 fee; did you not?—A. To the best of my recollection, I did.
- Q. Do you not know you did?—A. Well, I think—yes; I know I did.
- Q. Now, I want to ask you this question, sir: In the absence of fraud, averred and proven, did I understand you to testify yesterday that $50,000 in first-mortgage bonds was a condition precedent, under the terms of the deed of trust, to the institution of any suit for foreclosure by bondholders without the consent of the trustee named in the deed of trust?—A. If I understand your question—if I understand your question, I so construed the trust deed.
- Q. In other words, if there had not been something crooked, "something rotten in Denmark", it did require $50,000 of first-mortgage bonds to institute this foreclosure suit?—A. There had to be some fraud or collusion or adverse interest.
- Q. Yes, sir; and you averred fraud and collusion and adverse interest in your bill; did you not?—A. I did.
- Q. And yet, although it pended for some—how long? How long did it pend from the time you filed the bill until the final decree? A. It is still pending.
- Q. It is still pending; yet, Judge, you never have taken one word of testimony of a witness on God's earth to substantiate your claim of fraud; have you?—A. No; I have not taken any testimony. I did not have to.
- Q. And you yourself wrote a final decree in that cause exonerating Moore of any fraud?—A. I did.
- Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send up a question which I should like to have the witness asked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee submits a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

What was the net income of Rankin & Ritter for each of the 2 years that the partnership existed?

- A. I do not recall; but there is an accountant here who is a witness who has made up those statements and will have them available. I have the partnership return, income return, with me for the year 1929.
 - By Mr. Manager HOBBS:
- Q. Mr. Rankin, you swore to your income-tax return for 1928, did you not?—A. No; I meant 1928 in place of 1929.
 - Q. Is not that true?—A. I did what?
 - Q. You swore to it .- A. To mine?
 - Q. Yes, sir.—A. Yes.
- Q. You showed a net income from fees and professional services of forty-six-hundred-and-some-odd dollars, did you not?—A. To the best of my recollection, I did.
- Q. That was a 50-50 partnership, was it not?-A. Yes.
- Q. Judge Rankin's return showed the same amount, did it not?—A. I believe it did: yes.
- Q. So the total net income of the partnership for the year 1928 was less than $10,000?—A. That is right.
- Q. Although you had averred fraud against Harold A. Moore, George H. Thomas, Hayden W. Ward, Kenneth W. Moore, American Bond & Mortgage Co., Inc., W. J. Moore, and American Trust & Safe Deposit Co., each as being guilty of fraud and collusion, and so forth, in the final decree which you swore you wrote, section 24 of it recites—

That Harold A. Moore, George H. Thomas, Hayden W. Ward, Kenneth W. Moore, American Bond & Mortgage Co., Inc., W. J. Moore, and American Trust & Safe Deposit Co., are each to be not guilty of any fraud, fraudulent scheme, or conspiracy against any of the rights of the parties hereto or any of the holders and owners of any of the bonds secured by the mortgages involved herein.

Does it not?-A. That is correct.

- Q. You consented to the rendition of that decree?—A. I consented to the rendition of that decree.
- Q. And you wrote that decree?—A. And I wrote that decree; but the principal——

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky desires to propound a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do, but it is all right for the witness to complete his answer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Have you completed your answer?

The WITNESS. No; I have not completed it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Go ahead and complete your answer.

The WITNESS. The entire purpose of this suit, the entire purpose of this bill of complaint, was for subjecting the Whitehall properties to the payment of the first-mortgage bonds. Harold A. Moore's attorney came in and agreed that we could foreclose that mortgage; that we could sell the property for the benefit of the first-mortgage bondholders, the very purpose for which we filed the bill. They had consented that we could proceed with the foreclosure, and that was the reason that we agreed to exonerate them.

We made an investigation. Mr. Bemis was my client in this case. He advised with me and I advised with him with reference to this entire transaction from the inception of it. His principal purpose was to see that the first-mortgage bondholders had this property; that this property should be subjected, it should be operated, for the purpose of paying the first-mortgage bonds. They were fighting me from all sides with reference to that—the Moore interest was. They finally came in and agreed—they had filed a cross bill, after the original bill was filed, asking for a foreclosure of the mortgage, alleging default, and so forth. We had made an investigation-that is, Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeny had made an investigation-and Mr. Bemis told me that the other defendants, that the defendants in this case, were all practically bankrupt, and that we could recover no money judgment against them; and when the defendants agreed that we could foreclose this mortgage and sell it, and further agreed that the trustee under the trust deed, Harold A. Moore, would step out of the picture and have nothing further to do with it, why, then, we consented that the allegations of fraud would be-that they would be exonerated from any fraud in the final decree.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] propounds a question, which will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Barkley, as follows:

When you alleged fraud and collusion in your bill or petition, what fraud or collusion did you have in mind?

A. The allegations of the bill set out in detail the fraud and collusion. My recollection is that the trustee, one of W. J. Moore's sons and an officer of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., had bought in the property at a foreclosure sale under a third mortgage, and was in possession of it; that the trustee under the second mortgage trust deed, or the second trust deed, which we alleged in the bill, as I recallthe American Bond & Mortgage Co. was the largest holder of those bonds, and one of the officers of the American Bond & Mortgage Co. was trustee under the second mortgage trust deed, and Harold A. Moore was the trustee under the first mortgage. Harold A. Moore was an officer of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., and he was, as I recall it, the son of W. J. Moore, who was the president of the American Bond & Mortgage Co.; and the allegations of the bill were that they had, through collusion and through fraud, obtained the possession of this property for the purpose of paying off first the second mortgage or the indebtedness of the second mortgage and the indebtedness of the first mortgage, to the detriment of the first-mortgage bondholders.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

- Q. Judge, you were given 120 days' notice by opposing counsel in that case to go ahead and take your testimony and establish the averments of your bill, were you not?—A. Ask the question again.
- Q. You were given the regular statutory 120-day notice to take your testimony and establish the averments of your bill by opposing counsel, were you not?—A. Yes.
- Q. You did not do it, did you?—A. You mean I did not
 - Q. No, sir.-A. You mean I did not go to Chicago?

- Q. No, sir; I am not talking about Chicago; I am talking about what you did. You never took any testimony, did you?—A. I never took any testimony.
- Q. After that, and after you failed to do it, they gave you notice that they were going to take testimony to disprove your fraud charges, did they not?—A. I believe they did.
- Q. And they notified you that the testimony was going to be taken in Chicago on a day certain, did they not?—A. They did.
- Q. And you never went there?—A. No; I never went there. Q. They took approximately 400 pages of testimony, did they not?—A. I do not know; there was quite a document.
- Q. You were given a copy of it, were you not?—A. Of the testimony?
- Q. Yes; taken in Chicago.—A. I do not recall that I had a copy of it. I may have had.
- Q. But you never looked at it?—A. I do not recall that. Probably I did look at it if I had a copy of it.
- Q. It was filed in the case, was it not, Judge?—A. Sure it was filed in the case. If they took it in the case, they had to file it.
- Q. It was shooting at you, was it not? You said these men were crooks, and this testimony was taken for the purpose of showing they were not, and you mean to tell these gentlemen that you never read that?—A. I do not understand you. Speak more clearly, please.
- Q. I am asking you whether you ever read the testimony taken on notice given to you, due notice, in writing, on a certain day in Chicago, in this case?—A. The best of my recollection is that I have read it.
- Q. Your best judgment and recollection now is that you read it?—A. Yes.
- Q. Did you do anything about it?—A. No; I did not do anything about it.
- Q. You did not appear there and did not produce any witnesses in opposition, did you?—A. No; I did not.
- Q. You did not cross-examine a single witness?—A. No; I did not.
- Q. You did not even file cross interrogatories?—A. No; I did not.
- Q. That testimony which they put in at Chicago sort of knocked your fraud charges into a cocked hat, did they not, on its face?—A. So far as their testimony was concerned, it would, if we did not introduce any.
 - Q. You did not, did you?-A. No; I did not.
- Q. You say that Bemis was your client?—A. I do; most emphatically.
- Q. Why, then, did you file the bill in behalf of and in the name of Bert E. Holland et al., and not mention Bemis?—A. Why did I file it? Because Mr. Bemis, through Sweeny and others, had secured Mr. Holland to file this bill.
 - Q. And to employ you?-A. And to employ me.
- Q. The interests of Bemis and Sweeny had been entirely cut off by the foreclosure, had they not?—A. I did not understand you.
- Q. I said, the interests of both Mr. Bemis, who was your client—so you just said a few minutes ago—and of Mr. Sweeny, were cut off by the foreclosure, were they not, under the third mortgage?—A. Both were cut off.
 - Q. Yes.—A. By the foreclosure of the mortgage?
 - Q. Yes .- A. Yes; they were cut off.
- Q. So the clients you were representing lost out at the first start of the thing?—A. They lost out insofar as their stock that they originally held in the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. was concerned.
- Q. Judge Rankin, in spite of the fact that you never took a word of testimony to substantiate your fraud charge, and in spite of the fact that they took 400 pages, without your presence, and without so much as a cross-interrogatory to disprove them, when you came to write the final decree you said that none of them were guilty of any fraud or fraudulent scheme, did you not?—A. That was the agreement and understanding we had with the attorneys for the American Bond & Mortgage Co. and Harold A. Moore.
- Q. So you swore before; but that was not my question, if you will pardon me. My question was whether you did not write that in the final decree.—A. Yes; I wrote it in the final

- Q. You swore to the averments of the bill, did you not?-A. I did.
- Q. So, knowing that you had under oath said that they were guilty of fraud, you wrote a final decree in which you said they were not guilty of any fraud?—A. Yes; I put it in there because it was a settlement between all of the interested parties. It was a settlement and a victory for the complainants.
- Q. I have no doubt of that. You got $75,000 awarded to you as a fee in that particular decree, did you not?—A. I did. The bondholders got all the profits.
- Q. And you had agreed to split it up with opposing counsel, too, had you not?-A. I had what?
- Q. You had agreed to split the $75,000 fee up with opposing counsel?-A. I had.
- Q. Now, I want to ask you this: During the pendency of that case you swore in Miami, did you not, that you did not perform any services whatsoever after the filing of the original bill and the granting of the receivership until the final decree except to ask for an allowance of fees to yourself and to file an amended bill of complaint?—A. If I swore that, it was under a misapprehension of the question, a misunderstanding of it.
- Q. You have detailed it and corrected it in your testimony now, yesterday?—A. Ask the question again.
- Q. I will withdraw the question. Judge Rankin, that amended bill which you filed was really drawn by your stenographer, was it not?-A. No; it was not drawn by my stenographer.
- Q. Is it not a fact that all in the world you did was to tell her to include this description of some additional property and recopy the bill?—A. She recopied the bill, but I dictated the amendments to it.
- Q. All that that was, was an added description of some additional land, was it not?-A. If that was all, probably that was all that I did.
- Q. Do you not know what the amended bill was?-A. I do not recall right now. I can turn to it.
- Q. You do not recall that the only difference was the adding into the description of the property originally described in the bill of some additional property?-A. No; I do not recall that.
- Q. Judge Rankin, there was no written communication between you and Judge Ritter about this alleged debt which you say you owed him during all that time, was there?-A.
- Q. No letter to him, no communication whatsoever in writing?-A. Between Judge Ritter and me?
 - Q. Yes; or either of you?-A. No.
- Q. You testified yesterday that you were employed in the Whitehall foreclosure case after you came back from New York and that all you had been employed to do before you went up there was to give an opinion.—A. That is correct, as I recall it.
- Q. I will ask you if you did not testify down in Miami, as appears on page 54 of the transcript, as follows:
- Q. Who employed you in the Whitehall case?-A. Well, Mr. Rich-

- Q. Who employed you in the Whitehall cases—A. Well, Mr. Richardson and Mr. Ernest Metcalf.

 Q. Mr. Richardson and Mr. Ernest Metcalf?—A. Yes—came to me and talked to me about the situation at Whitehall.

 Q. When was that, Mr. Rankin?—A. They came to me and talked to me about the situation at Whitehall and wanted to know if I would be in a position to accept employment with reference to filing a foreclosure suit representing some bondholders, and I told him that I had no reason why that I could not accept employment, and at that time my recollection is they didn't discuss the details with reference to the suit.
- Q. When was that, Mr. Rankin?—A. That was in the summer or fall of 1929.
- Was it before you and Mr. Richardson went to New York? A. Yes; it was a short while before.
- Mr. Rankin, does that refresh your recollection sufficiently to enable you to say whether or not you were employed before or after the trip to New York?—A. Will you let me read
 - Q. I will be so happy to have you do so.

- (Mr. Hobbs at this point handed a pamphlet to the witness.)
- A. That statement is practically correct, as I recall, but with this explanation: That there was no actual employment, except for the purpose of foreclosing the mortgage, until after the bonds-that Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeny had secured enough bonds to bring the suit.
- Q. In other words, the employment at that time, before you went to New York, depended upon whether you could find a client?—A. Not whether I could find a client.
- Q. Or whether they could find one for you?-A. Whether they could get enough bonds to bring a foreclosure suit to protect the Whitehall property.
- Q. And so you accepted the employment, knowing that they were going to seek that, and as soon as they found it, that you were going to be actually employed?-A. I told them that there was no reason that I knew at the time why I could not accept employment for that purpose.
- Q. And you did that, and told them that with the knowledge that they were seeking bondholders to act as your client?-A. Yes.
- Q. Judge Rankin, that was before you went to New York?—A. That conversation that I had with Mr. Metcalf and Mr. Richardson was before that.
- Q. So they employed you to file a bill to foreclose the Whitehall mortgage before they went to New York, conditioned only upon their ability to find enough qualifying clients who had as much as $50,000 worth of first-mortgage bonds to act as your clients?-A. I did not consider then and never have considered that Richardson and Metcalf employed me.
- Q. You testified yesterday, did you not, that Mr. Holland never said a word to you about a fee?-A. No; he did not say anything to me about a fee.
- Q. And he never promised to pay you a dime, did he?-A. He never promised to pay me.
- Q. He did not agree or contract in any way to pay you one cent, did he?-A. No; he did not.
 - Q. He never did?-A. He never did and never has.
- Q. In your petition for allowance, my distinguished associate calls my attention, you swore and recited that he had, did you not?-A. What?
- Q. You swore in your petition for allowance of that fee that he had agreed to pay you, did you not?—A. I do not recall that I did.
- Q. All right, sir. Pass it up. Judge Rankin, I want to ask you if the interventions that you filed for these people who had placed their business in your hands at the request and solicitation of Walter S. Richardson, aggregating a total of, I believe, $4,500, or some such amount-I will ask you if Judge Ritter granted the privilege of intervening to those interveners upon your petition?-A. Yes.
- Q. He did it on the date it was presented, did he not?-A. He did, as I recall.
- Q. Now, Judge Rankin, that was in direct violation of rule 22 of Equity Practice in his own court, was it not?-A. I do not recall.
- Q. You do not know that rule 22 specifically provides that 5 days' notice shall intervene and be given before such interventions shall be permitted?-A. As I recall it, you can petition for an intervention and an order can be granted any time prior to service on the defendants, and any time up to the time that the defendants are brought into court. That is my construction of it.
- Q. I see, sir. The rule will speak for itself. Judge Rankin, when you petitioned for the fee of $15,000 which was allowed you by Judge Akerman, you presented to him, did you not, Judge Ritter's letter asking him to act in that matter, as it would embarrass him to grant you an exorbitant fee?-A. As I recall it, I presented the letter. It may have been sent over in the mail, but, as I remember, I probably carried it over.
- Q. And you gave it to Judge Akerman, did you not, while he was on the bench about to pass upon your petition?-A. That is my recollection.

Q. Then, Judge Rankin, he took that letter of Judge Ritter's and attached it to the order that he made granting you this fee, did he not?-A. Setting the fee?

Q. Yes .- A. Fixing the fee?

Q. I said he attached Judge Ritter's letter to the order that Judge Akerman made fixing your fee?-A. I do not recall that he did. I do not remember about that.

Q. And did he or not do that and ask you to take that back and leave it in the file?-A. Will you repeat the question? You are standing right beside the microphone.

Q. Did or not Judge Alexander Akerman attach Judge Ritter's letter addressed to him in which Judge Ritter had asked Judge Akerman to grant you this fee, so as to avoid any criticism of his allowing you, his former law partner, an exorbitant fee-did he or not attach that letter of Judge Ritter's to the order he made?-A. I do not know.

Q. He did not ask you to take it back and put it in the files in Miami?—A. I do not know.

Q. Judge Rankin, I want to hurry along as rapidly as I possibly can. I will skip over some of these things I wanted to ask you about. Oh, yes; you presented some affidavits of lawyers in Florida saying that your $75,000 fee was reasonable and fair, did you not?-A. I did. I presented those to the court.

Q. And you wrote every one of them yourself, did you not?-A. I wrote every one of them myself, but I left the amount and other items in there blank:

Q. That is right; but you wrote every word of them yourself?-A. Yes.

Q. You went around and told those lawyers—you took your office files around, did you not?-A. Took my files.

Q. Took your office files of the Whitehall?-A. Yes; I did.

Q. Showed them all this bundle of papers and asked them if they would sign this affidavit?-A. No; I did not ask them to sign the affidavit. I asked them if they would make an affidavit as to what was a reasonable fee.

Q. And do you mean to say that those gentlemen each happened to hit upon $75,000 independent of any suggestion from you?-A. Repeat the question.

Q. Do you mean to say that each of those gentlemen happened to hit upon $75,000 without any suggestion from you?-A. Well, I do not recall just what I said to them about it.

Q. Do you not recall, however, that you did tell them that you were asking for $75,000 and that that had been agreed upon by opposing counsel?—A. Well, I may have told them that.

Q. Did you or did you not?-A. I do not recall.

Q. You do not recall. But you did write all of the affidavits, and they are all in your covers?-A. Yes, sir; I wrote them all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk several questions, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming presents several questions. The clerk will read the first question.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

Did the court have any knowledge of the division of the fee at the time your fee was allowed?

A. I do not recall. There was a stipulation to that effect filed in the records.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Have you concluded your answer?-A. I do not recall whether that was brought to the attention of the court at the

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Present the second question.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. O'Mahoney, as follows:

On what basis did you compute your fee, and what representation with respect to it did you make to the court?

A. The amount of the property—that is, the amount involved, including principal and interest—was approximately $3,000,000. There was an upset price fixed in the final decree that the property could not be sold for less than one and one-nail million dollars. In arriving at that $75,000 as | Why did you instruct the clerk to withhold the bill until the being a reasonable fee I took into consideration the amount | respondent returned?

that was involved, the amount that the property would have to bring as an upset price at the sale, and that we had been successful in subjecting this property to the payment of the first-mortgage bonds, the very thing that we had set out to accomplish, and that 5 percent of the upset price would be a reasonable fee. That was 5 percent of one and one-half million dollars.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask that the next question submitted by me be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

Did or did not the amount you kept for yourself fully compensate you for your actual services?

A. I do not feel that it did.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I submit a question which I should like to have propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa submits a question, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. MURPHY, as follows:

If you do not recall that you suggested $75,000 to the lawyer affiants, do you recall that it was merely a coincidence that each of the lawyer affiants determined upon $75,000 as a proper fee?

A. No doubt I mentioned to the lawyers that we had agreed on $75,000 as a reasonable fee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have sent to the desk some further questions, which I ask to have propounded to

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The questions submitted by the Senator from Wyoming will be read.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

If you were not fully compensated by what you retained, why did you divide the fee? You could have retained a larger sum.

A. Because it was an end to the litigation. The attorney for Harold A. Moore, the trustee under the trust deed, had agreed that we could foreclose the mortgage and subject the property to the satisfaction of the first-mortgage bonds; and ending the litigation in that way, without having to go on and take testimony and fight it on to a final decree, I agreed to divide the fee with them on the basis of one-third to them and two-thirds to me, on whatever amount the court would allow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the next question submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. O'Mahoney, as follows:

How many judges were serving for the southern district of Florida at the time the proceeding in question was instituted?

A. I do not recall. There were three judges of the southern district of Florida. At the time, whether all the judges were in the State, I do not recall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the next question submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

Did you have any understanding with anyone as to which judge should hear the case?

A. I had no understanding with anyone as to which judge should hear the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the next question submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The legislative clerk read the next question submitted by Mr. O'Mahoney, as follows:

Did it make any difference to you which judge should hear the case?

A. None whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the last question submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The legislative clerk read the last question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

A. Because I did not care to have any publicity about it. | I did not want the American Bond & Mortgage Co. and the Harold A. Moore interests to know about the filing of the bill until the time for applying for a receiver.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire if the Senator from Wyoming has finished his questions?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager on the part of the House will proceed.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. And you wrote in that letter to the clerk, did you not?-

It is very important that we have a receiver appointed for this property immediately upon Judge Ritter's return next Tuesday. If you can possibly do so, it will be greatly appreciated by us if you will lock up this bill as soon as it is filed and hold it until Judge Ritter's return, so that we will not have any newspaper publicity before our application is heard by the judge for the appointment of a receiver.

A. Yes; I wrote that letter.

Q. So it was not immediacy of action that you wanted, but immediacy of action by Judge Ritter. Is not that true?-No: it is not true.

Q. Judge Lake Jones was sitting at Jacksonville, was he not, in the southern district of Florida?—A. I do not know if he was at the time.

Q. Judge Alexander Akerman was sitting at Tampa in the southern district of Florida at that time, was he not?-A. I do not know that he was there.

Q. Did you make any effort to find out whether either or both of them were there?-A. I do not recall.

Q. Now, about this upset price you testified to in answer to the Senator's question. You neglected to tell him, did you not, that that upset price you fixed was payable either in bonds or cash so that all that the first-mortgage bondholders had to do to buy in at the sale was to surrender their worthless bonds. Is not that true?-A. Yes; it is true, because the trust deed provided that.

Q. Why, of course. So your upset price simply meant the surrender by the first-mortgage bondholders of their bonds except the part that had been bought in by others. Is not that true?-A. Propound the question again.

Q. All the cash that had to be put up was to pay outsiders who might have acquired some of the $2,500,000 firstmortgage bonds. Is not that true?-A. All that had to be put up was bonds, except by the nondepositing bondholders, those who had not deposited their bonds with the bondholders' committee.

Q. And, Judge Rankin, you knew that the purpose of the upset price was in order that Walter Richardson, who by himself or through his family connection had bought a lot of these outstanding bonds at 3 or 4 cents on the dollar and wanted to get 60 cents for them, did you not?-A. No; I did not know anything about it.

Q. You know that is the fact, do you not?-A. No; I do not.

Q. Do you mean to tell this high Court of Impeachment that it was not at Walter Richardson's instance that you held out for an upset price?—A. Why, certainly not.

Q. Judge, you say Judge Ritter did not have read before him in open court that day the precipe filed by Shutts & Bowen dismissing their case and in there reciting that an agreement had been reached for a split of your fee?-A. Ask the question again.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the Official Reporter read the question.

The Official Reporter (James R. Wick) read the question, as follows:

Q. Judge, you say Judge Ritter did not have read before him in open court that day the precipe filed by Shutts & Bowen dismissing their case and in there reciting that an agreement had been reached for a split of your fee?

A. I do not recall. They may have read that to the court before he entered the final decree.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Do not you know it was stated by you to Judge Ritter that it had been agreed upon and that your fee was to be tion of these funds.

distributed with your fellow lawyers?-A. Yes; I believe Judge Ritter was apprised of the fact at the time.

Q. Of course he was. Now, Judge Rankin, why was it that every single time you filed a written petition after that for him to allow you first $30,000 and then $5,000-and for the purpose of refreshing your recollection I want to ask you if you do not recall that on the 27th day of December you got another $5,000 of this $75,000 fee?—A. On the 27th?

Q. Yes, sir; 3 days later, 2 days after Christmas after you got back .- A. Why, no.

Q. You did not?-A. No; but-

Q. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness had not finished his answer. Let him complete his answer.

A. The order was to pay an advance of $30,000.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Quite true, sir.—A. Mr. Richardson gave a check on the First National in Miami, as I recall it, for $25,000-

Q. That is true. You testified yesterday $30,000 .- A. And he gave me later a check for $5,000, making the total $30,000.

Q. On the 27th, approximately?-A. Yes.

Q. That is right, sir. Now we are clear on that. I simply wanted the record straight. Now, I am asking you, if you had agreed upon this split of fees, why in every single instance did you recite after that, when you petitioned for partial payment as the money would come into the receiver's hands, that it was to be in part payment of your fee for your services?-A. Well, the final decree recited that $75,000 was allowed for the solicitor for the complainants as his attorney's

Q. And I never have understood that. Why was that true. if you had agreed in advance to split it with opposing counsel and with others?-A. Why did I?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Well, I explained that a few moments ago. Q. All right, sir. We will search the records for that, and pass on, not to take up any more time. Judge Rankin, you testified yesterday that you were interviewed by a C. R. West, an agent of the Internal Revenue Bureau, who at that time lived at West Palm Beach, the same town in which you lived. and in that interview you told him that you owed Judge Ritter $5,000, and gave him the items composing it, did you not-$1,000 for furniture and fixtures, $4,000 for library?-A. Oh, I do not recall that I did.

Q. You do not recall that you did?—A. No.

Q. Then do you not know that the next time that anybody asked you about it was when Mr. Mulherin, investigator of the Judiciary Committee of the House, called on you, and you told him that it was for furniture and fixtures and for library and for 50 shares of stock in the West Palm Beach Bus Co.? You made a written statement, wrote a letter to him, did you not, telling him that?—A. I do not recall.

Q. I will show you the letter so that you may refresh your recollection [exhibiting letter to witness]. That is the only letter I am asking about.—A. There is nothing like that in

Q. Please read it. [A pause.] I beg your pardon. The letter does not show the enclosure of the statement [exhibiting enclosure to witness] .- A. No; it does not state that.

Q. It does not show that a part of the consideration-A. Oh, a part of the consideration? You did not put it that way.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg your pardon, sir. I should like to have this letter and the enclosure read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter and enclosure will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Q. Did you not swear, as appears on pages 136 and 137 of the transcript of testimony here in printed form, that you did?-A. (After examining papers.) It is the best of my recollection that I did not enclose this statement with this

Q. Judge, was not that the statement which you sent to Palmer Rosemond—that thing there, that carbon copy?—A. I sent the letter there.

Q. And did you not send that carbon copy of the statement with it?-A. I do not recall that I did.

Q. You swore in Miami as follows, did you not?

Mr. Rankin, I will get you to examine this statement [producing same] and state if that is the statement that you prepared for Mr. Mulherin.—A. Yes; that is the statement.

Then, again, where it was read to you:

Library, furniture, and fixtures, and equipment, and 50 shares of capital stock of the Palm Beach Bus Service Co., a corporation of West Palm Beach, Fla.; price agreed upon, $5,000.

That was shown to you and read to you, was it not, and I will ask you if those questions and answers were not propounded to you and given by you before the subcommittee in the hearing in Miami?—A. They probably were, and I probably testified to that.

Q. This is the first time you have ever denied it, is it not?-A. How is that?

Q. This is the first time that you have ever denied making that statement?-A. I have not denied making it yet,

Q. Did you make it?—A. The best of my recollection is I did make it; but the question you propounded to me was did I send that to Mr. Mulherin at the time I mailed this letter

Q. I beg your pardon, sir; I stand corrected. So you did have that statement prepared, and you did give it to Mr. Mulherin?-A. Whether I had the statement prepared or not I will not say, but I remember that I gave Mr. Mulherin that information practically as it is set out here.

Q. One more question that I want to ask you, about your interview with C. R. West. In that interview with C. R. West you told him that the reason that you failed to include in your income-tax return the full fee allowed you in the Whitehall case was because of the fact that you had split it with others, and that the amount that you actually kept for yourself you thought was apt to be taken away from you because of the filing of the bill attacking Judge Ritter's decision in the Whitehall case by Mr. Kirkland, and that you I return when I could have a full accounting of it.

expected it to be taken away from you-part of it-so you thought that the fair thing was to schedule only $20,000 of it in your income-tax return?-A. I do not recall that I had any conversation like that with him.

Q. What was the reason that you did not schedule it then? Let us tell the Senate as the High Court of Impeachment.-A. All right. Now ask the question.

Q. I ask you why you did not schedule in your income-tax return for the year 1930 any part but $20,000 of your taxable income?—A. My recollection is that what you stated there was true, but I do not recall making that statement to Mr. West. I do recall making a statement similar to that before the subcommittee in Miami.

Q. What I am interested in is whether or not that was true and that was your reason.—A. That was practically true.

Q. I am trying to get at the exact truth, Judge. Was it exactly true or not?-A. Will you have the question read to me again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Official Reporter will read the question.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. I ask you why you did not schedule in your income-tax return for the year 1930 any part but $20,000 of your taxable income?

A. No; it was the original question that you asked with reference to the conversation with Mr. West.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. All right, sir, pass that up. We are not talking about what you told Mr. West now. We are talking about the real reason that you did not schedule the full Whitehall fee, your part of it, in your income-tax return for 1930, which was made on the 14th day of March, 1931?-A. Well, I did schedule-to the best of my recollection I did schedule a part of it. I took the-I made an estimate of the amount that I had received, less the proportionate share of it that I had to pay out to the other attorney, and made the return on it.

Q. And your estimated amount was $20,000, was it not. Judge?-A. For that year.

Q. Yes .- A. Yes; that is the best of my recollection.

Q. How much did you take in in actual cold hard cash?-A. Oh, I do not recall now.

Q. You know it was over $40,000 though, do you not? You got $40,000 in the Whitehall fee alone, did you not, Judge?-A. What year was that?

Q. 1930.—A. 1930? Q. Yes.—A. 1930, I received $30,000, yes—yes, $45,000.

Q. $45,000. Well, that is over $40,000. That is what I asked you. You received more than double the amount that you returned in your estimate, did you not, from that case alone? I am not talking about your other income .- A. Yes; I know that.

Q. Yes. And yet you only scheduled $20,000?-A. I made an estimate of the expenses that I would have to pay out of it, with the intention that I would file an amended return at a later date.

Q. Oh, I see .- A. And before I had prepared my amended return they filed the Kirkland suit asking that all that be set aside and that I be required to repay the funds that had come in my hands.

Q. I am not interested in your income-tax return. What I am interested in is your reason. That is what I am asking you. Give me your reason, if you please, sir, why you failed to schedule.—A. Why I did not?

Q. Yes. Why did you not state the truth as to your receipts under oath in your 1930 income-tax return?-A. Well, I told him and told you why I did not.

Q. Well, tell me, please, sir, why. Tell it again.—A. I told you, sir, that I made a rough estimate in a hurry of the amounts that I had received, and made my income tax, deducting the expenses that I had incurred and the obligations to pay these other attorneys, and made a rough estimate of it and put it in there with the intention of filing an amended Connally

- Q. Why did you make it so rough, and why did you take so little time with it when you knew you had to swear to it?-A. Why did I what?
- Q. Judge Rankin, as a matter of fact, you never kept any books, did you?-A. Never kept any books.
- Q. Judge, I am asking you this way, then, if you will not give me your reason-

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that, under the order heretofore entered, the impeachment proceedings be suspended until the hour of 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1:30 having arrived, in accordance with the order heretofore entered, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2 o'clock p. m.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m., at which time it reassembled.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Coolidge Pope Radcliffe King La Follette Copeland Ashurst Austin Bachman Couzens Davis Reynolds Robinson Lewis Logan Bailey Barbour Dieterich Lonergan Russell Schwellenbach Donahey Long McGill Sheppard Shipstead Barkley Fletcher McKellar McNary Smith Black George Gerry Gibson Steiwer Thomas, Okla. Thomas, Utah Maloney Bone Brown Bulkley Glass Minton Guffey Townsend Truman Murphy Burke Hale Harrison Hastings Murray Vandenberg Van Nuys Byrnes Norris Capper Caraway Hatch Wagner Walsh Nye O'Mahoney Hayden Holt White Carey Overton Pittman Johnson

Keyes The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Have the managers on the part of the House concluded their examination of the witness?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we turn the witness over to the respondent. We may want to put him on the stand again later on one point, but at the present time we are through with the witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Do counsel for respondent desire to ask questions of the witness?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. Counsel will proceed.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF A. L. RANKIN

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Mr. Rankin, were you served with a subpena to bring in the files of your office containing the correspondence and copies of the documents filed in court so far as you have them with you?-A. I brought them along, and I have them with me.
- Q. I want to say to begin with, please, Mr. Rankin, if you do not understand clearly what I say, ask the question to be again repeated, will you please? Your hearing is quite badly impaired, is it not?—A. It is.
- Q. So I am going to ask you, please, to ask to have the question repeated at any time that you have any doubt. First, give me the file of your correspondence in the Whitehall

(The witness handed to counsel the file referred to.)

Q. Have you your office copies of the pleadings in the Whitehall case?-A. I have.

Q. Will you please hand me those?

(The witness handed to counsel the copies referred to.)

Q. Are these copies of all the pleadings?—A. They are the copies of all the pleadings; copies of all the pleadings of both the complainant and the defendant.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I should like, if I may, to have brought in the original files in the Whitehall case, which are in the lobby outside the door in the custody of the clerk of the Court. There is no objection to bringing them in, I presume?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will bring in the original files.

(The original files were brought in.)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. You still live at Palm Beach?—A. I did not understand. Q. Do you still live at Palm Beach?-A. I do; in West
- Palm Beach Q. In West Palm Beach. Do you hold any official position there now?-A. I am county attorney for Palm Beach County.
- Q. How long have you held that position?-A. Since January 1933.
- Q. Were you acquainted with Mr. Bemis in his lifetime?-
- Q. What was his position in Palm Beach? What was his business?—A. He was executive vice president of the Florida East Coast Hotel Co. that operated all of the hotels on the Florida east coast, from St. Augustine to Key West.
- Q. For what length of time had you known him before his death?-A. I met Mr. Bemis sometime in the latter part of 1927 or the first part of 1928, and I knew him up until the time of his death in March 2 years ago, to the best of my recollection.
- Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Martin Sweeny?-A. I am. Q. How long have you known him?-A. I have known Mr.

Martin Sweeny since 1929, the latter part of 1929.

Q. Prior to the bringing of the Whitehall suit, about which you have been interrogated, did you have any correspondence with Messrs. Bemis and Sweeny with regard thereto?-A. Prior to the bringing of the suit?

Q. Yes, sir; prior to the bringing of the suit. I am directing your attention to the time and I want to bring you up finally to the entry into open court.—A. I do not recall any correspondence I had with them.

Q. You were asked on your direct examination as to your employment, whether you were employed directly by Mr. Bert E. Holland or through Mr. Walter Richardson. Do you recall that?-A. I recall that.

Q. I believe your statement was that you did not recall at the time you were asked the question, which one of them it was that directly employed you either over the telephone, by mail, or by wire, did you not?-A. Yes.

Q. I am going to hand you now a copy of a letter dated October 3, 1929, and a paper that goes with it, and ask you to state whether or not you had an original letter of which that is a copy in your possession at the time you brought the suit?-A. Yes; I received a letter similar to this of which this is a copy.

Q. Have you made a diligent search of your office to find out whether or not the original of that is still in existence?-A. I have made a diligent search of the files of my office and I fail to find the original of that letter.

Q. Is this a copy of the letter which you received?—A. It is.

Q. I should like to read this letter:

A. L. RANKIN, Esq., Comeau Building, West Palm Beach, Fla.

DEAR SIR: I represent some of the holders and owners of the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. bonds on which their interest

Whitehall Building & Operating Co. bonds on which their interest has remained unpaid for more than a year, and at the suggestion of Walter S. Richardson, of this city, with whom I have had correspondence, I am sending you the numbers and denominations of these bonds.

The bonds were not purchased by me but were delivered to myself and two other parties as trustees in five different trusts of which the beneficiaries are all residents of Boston, Mass., and the other trustees and myself would like to have the proper steps taken for a petition to be filed in the proper Federal court so that, if possible, a self-appointed bondholders' committee may be appointed by the court and that the necessary steps be taken to institute by the court and that the necessary steps be taken to institute foreclosure proceedings immediately in favor of the holders of the first-mortgage bonds. A list of the numbers and denominations of first-mortgage bonds. A list of the numbers and denominations of these bonds is herewith attached and upon advice from your office we shall be pleased to deposit these at the First National Bank of Palm Beach, Fla., for use as you deem best.

I am taking these steps having in mind that it is the season of the year when this property ought to be put in shape for the coming winter.

I shall be obliged if you will keep me fully informed of the proceedings taken in this matter by writing me at my office at 73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

Very truly yours,

BERT E. HOLLAND.

With this is the following list, and I shall just read the introductory paragraph and ask you about the others:

Q. I will ask you if on October 21 Mr. Bemis sent you a copy of a letter which he had written to Walter S. Richardson, Esq., Palm Beach, Fla.:

OCTOBER 21, 1929.

Walter S. Richardson, Esq.,

Palm Beach, Fla.

Dear Mr. Richardson: Naturally, Mr. Sweeny and I are somewhat disappointed that the receivership was not immediately appointed for Whitehall, not from any personal advantage to either of us, but from the fact that we realize more than anyone else. that if there is going to be in the immediate future any rents, earnings, and profits to protect first-mortgage bonds, that the business of Whitehall must be organized within the next 10 days, or the bulk of a large business that we have tentatively booked will go to other resorts.

You must realize that the success of Whitehall, which brings about the enormous rents, earnings, and profits, is not an accident; it is because of the fact that we have by contact, connections, and consistent development brought together an enormous paying business, and unless we can keep the continuity of this business, by immediate notice to all of our patrons of our prospective business, it will be a mistake for us to try and guarantee, to secure, or receive a profitable business for this next season.

You, of course, do not visualize the business as it is possible for us to value it, but we have booked the largest and best business of any year for Whitehall, and some of the leases are extremely favorable, and unless they can be consummated within the next 10 days it is of little value in trying to organize later and make Whitehall profitable.

make Whitehall profitable.

We are anxious, if we are to be connected with Whitehall, to keep our record entirely clear; that is, for a 100-percent management, and for several reasons; principally we feel that the first-mortgage bondholders are entitled to be protected and get the interest on their bonds; secondly, we have a very personal pride in seeing Whitehall a success insofar as it will have profitable management and a progressive business, and I cannot urge too strongly upon you and Mr. Rankin the importance of immediate receivership and immediate appointment of manager.

We do not presume to advise the court, but if there is any possible way to stop further delays, we feel that this should be done. The question of who shall constitute the bondholders committee, or how many bondholders' committees, to our mind is not the first thing to be considered, but the preservation and conservation of Whitehall assets is paramount to any other consideration, and I strongly urge that Whitehall be put in a position to be organized instantly and all differences of bondholders' committees be thrashed out later.

out later.

The bankers' committee, I understand, has been formed to preserve and conserve all of the assets of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., of which Whitehall is only one small unit. The general committee of bankers such as has been formed is very valuable in order to keep all of the assets of various properties applied to the proper channels; Whitehall as a property that is not an asset and can never be operated to earn any moneys for the American Bond. It cannot earn enough to pay off any of the second-mortgage bonds or any other obligations that the American Bond holds against Whitehall, but Whitehall can pay interest on the first-mortgage bonds for this coming year as of November 1929. It can also pay taxes and insurance and for such necessary repairs and improvements that must be taken care of. Consequently I argue that Whitehall should have a local receivership and a local bond-holders' committee in order that this particular unit of the American Bond Co. be treated accordingly to the conditions that actually exist today, and not in a manner that would best suit all of the general conditions of the American Bond Co., which are to be handled by the bankers' committee.

If it could be brought about within the next week, so that the

If it could be brought about within the next week, so that the bankers' committee could feel that the plans we are suggesting are for the best—that a receiver be appointed and that the counsel connected with the receivership be acceptable, with the understanding if they would acquiesce in such an arrangement that the receivers counsel and the local bondholders' committee would work in a friendly way, such a plan would make matters would work in a friendly way—such a plan would make matters very much more agreeable and there would be less protest.

I believe that the bankers' committee occupies a very strong position before the court, but naturally they will find that every single property of the American Bond must be treated differently and that they are too far removed and have too many properties involved to give to Whitehall the immediate consideration that is now necessary.

Could you and Mr. Rankin not get some sort of a compromise Could you and Mr. Rankin not get some sort of a compromise with the bankers committee in order to allow this receivership to go on under yours and Mr. Rankin's plan, promising to work with them, etc., but still retaining unto yourselves the connection that you wish. You understand that our business is to protect Whitehall, and we do not care anything about the American Bond Co.'ss interests, as we feel, and know, that the management of the Whitehall under the American Bond Co. has not been satisfactory for reasons which you and Mr. Rankin and, I think, the court is also aware. also aware.

The bankers committee is a strong one, and will command the respect and cooperation of all American Bond Co.'s holders. We are fearful that it will be necessary for you to arrive at some compromise to get them to acquiesce in this present affair, although I would not suggest, and would not like like to see you and Mr. Rankin eliminated or your plan changed.

Mr. Sweeny and I, of course, are not in a position to discuss any matters with the bankers committee because we do not wish to complicate the situation, but we feel there must be some way of getting to the bankers committee and make them understand that we are trying to work out the Whitehall situation for the best interests of Whitehall, which we can do with your plan immediately, much better than they can possibly hope.

Yours very truly,

H. E. BEMIS.

In re Whitehall bonds.

Dear Sir: Your letter of October 11 to Whitehall, Palm Beach, Fla., has been turned over to me for attention.

This is to advise you that the writer and Ernest Metcalf filed a bill in the Federal Court for the Southern District of Florida several days ago for the foreclosure of the trust deed in behalf of a number of bondholders for the benefit of all Whitehall first-mort-gage bondholders, in which foreclosure bill we asked that a re-ceiver be appointed, in order to protect the rents, incomes, and profits from the hotel that will be derived from its operation the coming season.

We are forming a very strong bondholders' committee for the protection of all of the bondholders. We have already had a number of bondholders to send in the numbers and amounts of their bonds, asking us to join them as parties plaintiff in the suit. This we have done. If you desire to join in the suit and will send me at once the serial number and amount of the bonds held by your wife, with the request that we handle these bonds along with the bonds of all other bondholders whom we represent, we will be glad to join you in the suit.

We have applied for a receiver which will be acted on by the

We have applied for a receiver which will be acted on by the court on the 28th. If you desire to join in this suit, and in our application for a receiver, and do not have time to advise me of your wishes by mail before the 28th, you may send me a wire and I will act upon that.

Yours very truly. ALR/c

Whitehall foreclosure.

In re: Whitehall foreclosure.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation previously had pertaining to a division of attorney's fees and to satisfactory agreement as to the litigation pertaining to the Whitehall foreclosure, will make you the following proposition:

It will be agreeable with me that your firm receive one-third of whatever fee the court may allow on final hearing for a foreclosure of the trust deed or mortgage executed by Whitehall Building & Operating Co., and that I receive the remaining two-thirds of said allowance. I would be satisfied with $75,000 as a fee for services rendered in foreclosing the mortgage, and I feel, in view of the fact that there is involved in mortgage, principal and interest, the sum of approximately $3,000,000, that the court would thirds of said allowance. I would be satisfied with $75,000 as a fee for services rendered in foreclosing the mortgage, and I feel, in view of the fact that there is involved in mortgage, principal and interest, the sum of approximately $3,000,000, that the court would fix as a reasonable fee for the foreclosure of the mortgage a sum not less than $75,000, in view of the evidence which I will be able to furnish the court as to the reasonableness of such a fee, especially if we are in accord as to the amount of this fee.

This division, however, is conditioned upon the withdrawal of the counterclaim of Harold A. Moore, his resignation as trustee under the trust deed, and his consent that we proceed with the foreclosure by bondholders, in which event I will withdraw the charges of fraud, collusion, and adverse interests against Harold A. Moore as such trustee and Harold A. Moore individually.

Should the above be agreeable, I would expect the cooperation of your firm in all matters pertaining to the foreclosure.

As to the matter of the settlement of the Pick claim and the distribution of the remaining funds in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy of Whitehall, should we agree on the above proposition, I would then be willing, and consent, to the following distribution of the sum of $21,228.04, which now remains in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, namely: Settlement of claim of Albert Pick & Co. for the sum of $5,000; payment of the balance of attorney's fees due Shutts & Bowen by Harold A. Moore, as trustee, $6,500; payment to Harold A. Moore of such sums of money as he has actually and legitimately paid out for and on behalf of the Whitehall property, as trustee, in an amount not to exceed $9,305.21 (these items would have to be carefully checked and shown that they are proper charges). Balance, if any, to be paid over to the receiver for benefit of first-mortgage bondholders.

As above stated, there is now in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy $21,228.04, against which there will be some claims of

Do not know Rankins initials, and for that reason am wiring you. Stop. Please wire him in my name as follows. Quote. Have received word from my office that you do not intend Whitehall property to be sold until April nineteen thirty one rule day. Stop. Am wondering if there is not some mistake, as it was clearly my understanding, and I thought yours also, that our purpose in making agreement respecting division of fees and form of decree was to expedite sale of property and termination of receivership. Stop. Is there any reason why this plan cannot be carried out and property sold not later than October next. Stop. Am relaying this wire through my office and will appreciate your wiring me at Miami. Hon. C. D. Bowen, c/o Cushman House, Petoskey, Mich.:

Your telegram, sorry you misunderstood our agreement. In our conversations and in my letters of August 7 and 12 I thought it was made clear that Whitehall properties would not be sold until after next season's operation. My clients and I think it exceedingly unwise under present financial conditions of country to put this property up for sale; especially is it so before a refinancing plan is worked out and approved by the court. This I discussed with you in our conversations. Further, it will take receipts from next season's operation to pay fees, costs, insurance, and other claims filed against the estate. Funds now in hands of receiver grossly inadequate. Copy final decree prepared your office and other claims filed against the estate. Fulfus flow in hands of receiver grossly inadequate. Copy final decree prepared your office directly contrary to agreement expressed in letters of August 7 and 12. However, I am preparing final decree, which think will be satisfactory. This can be signed upon Judge Ritter's return, sale thereunder to be April rule day.

Judge A. L. RANKIN,

Comeau Building, West Palm Beach, Fla.

Dear Judge Rankin: In reference to our recent conversation on above subject, I beg to advise I wrote to Mr. Sweeny and he has had one or two talks with Mr. Bradley and Mr. Bradley is very anxious that Mr. Martin Sweeny, Mr. Edward Sweeny, and myself should in some way take over the entire Embassy Club property and the property to the north, so that he can be relieved of any further notoriety, etc., etc. Mr. Bradley communicated with his attorney, Judge Donnell, and also asked me to see Judge Donnell, and I have today had a conference with Judge Donnell, who will see you after your return next week, and Judge Donnell has promised to write me the latter part of next week in New York, room 508, no. 2 West Forty-fifth Street, after he has learned more fully of the present status of the Embassy Club and after his conference with you.

There is nothing further that Messrs. Sweeny or I can do until we hear further from Judge Donnell; in the meantime, we are keeping everything in reference to this matter strictly confidential.

Hoping you have had a very fine vacation, and with kind regards, beg to remain,

DEAR SIR: I wish to thank you for the information regarding the Whitehall Hotel issue and your letter of September 3. I am somewhat straightened out now, but each time I survey the situation what straightened out now, but each time I survey the situation I find a new angle presenting the same question. This time I find in a circular sent to me by one of the officials of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., on July 9, 1929, the statement that the property was sold by order of the United States District Court on June 3, 1929, and was bid in by one of the American Bond & Mortgage Co. officers. Mr. Harold A. Moore has since the sale taken possession and is holding the property for the protection and benefit of the first-mortgage bondholders. This circular is signed by Mr. Moore.

benefit of the first-mortgage bondholders. This circular is signed by Mr. Moore.

I have just written Mr. Moore in regards to the statement he made at the time I wrote you—rather Judge Halsted L. Ritter—of, and am anxious to know if he will tell me the sale has been post-poned. Do you know just about what percent of the bonds have been placed in the hands of the bondholders' protective committee? I have been told they are formed for the purpose of working out a way of saving the bondholders a heavy loss in the bankruntey.

Again I thank you for the previous information, and I assure you I will be more than pleased to be informed of any new developments.

Very truly yours,

Re: Whitehall foreclosure.

Dear Sin: This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 18 pertaining to the above matter.

It is true that there was a sale of the Whitehall Hotel properties in the summer of 1929 under a foreclosure decree instituted by the trustee of a third mortgage or trust deed on behalf of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., who was the owner and holder of all of the third-mortgage bonded indebtedness. This property was bought in at the sale by Kenneth W. Moore, a brother of Harold A. Moore, trustee under the first mortgage or trust deed, and an officer of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., and the property was held by him until I filed a bill in the Federal court on behalf of some individual bondholders to foreclose the first mortgage for their benefit and the benefit of all first-mortgage bondholders, when a receiver was appointed by the court, who took possession of the property and has held it up to the present time.

The American Bond & Mortgage Co., controlled by the Moore crowd, owned all of the third-mortgage indebtedness and a great part of the second-mortgage bonds and were endeavoring to hold possession of the Whitehall Hotel properties until they could pay off from its operation all of the second- and third-mortgage indebtedness, knowing that the property was not worth anything like the amount of the outstanding first-mortgage bondholders it became necessary for me to file a bill on behalf of bondholders alleging fraud, conspiracy, and adverse interest on the part of Harold A. Moore, the trustee under the first mortgage, and thereby secure the property, with its rents, income, and profits, for the benefit of the first-mortgage bondholders alleging fraud, conspiracy, and adverse interest on the part of Harold A. Moore, the trustee under the first mortgage, and thereby secure the property, with its rents, income, and profits, for the benefit of the first-mortgage bondholders in the hands of the court for the court's approval before a sale of the property. I am afraid the bondholders' committee will try to beat the price down so that some of their crowd will be able to buy in the property at a much less price than its real value.

I am writing you fully my views of the matter. I may be wrong, but I am forced to believe, from the movements and actions of the bondholders' committee and others associated with them, that this is true. Please excuse this long letter, but I want to be frank and open with all bondholders and give them whatever information I open with all bondholders and give them whatever information I have.

Yours very truly,

Paim Beach, Fla.

DEAR MR. BEMIS: I acknowledge receipt of your wire of the 14th relative to the Whitehall at Palm Beach, Fla., and, pursuant to our conversation of last Friday, I want to outline briefly to you our thoughts in connection with the situation which appears to our thoughts in connection with the situation which appears to exist there.

As we see the situation, there is no occasion for any great delay in connection with cleaning up the foreclosure on this property. You will recall that there was an original bill filed on behalf of Bert E. Holland et al. by Mr. Rankin, and that there was a crossbill filed on behalf of Harold A. Moore, as trustee, both of which, in the last analysis, asked that a decree of foreclosure and sale be entered in respect of this property, and, leaving aside all of the technical grounds upon which the prayer for relief in each case is based, the ultimate net result which both the bill and cross-bill seeks is the same. seeks is the same.

seeks is the same.

You will recall that we told you last Friday that it was the desire of the committee to have you and Mr. Sweeny operate the hotel for the coming season, whether you operated it through the receiver or on behalf of the committee, if it becomes the purchaser of the hotel at foreclosure sale. You will also recall that we told you at that time that we had assented to a deal between Mr. Rankin and Messrs. Shutts & Bowen relative to the amount of fees for counsel for the complainant and cross-complainant and the division of those fees between Rankin and Shutts & Bowen. You will also recall that we only consented to the amount of those fees upon the express understanding that the decree of fore-You will also recall that we only consented to the amount of those fees upon the express understanding that the decree of fore-closure be entered and the sale had and the receiver discharged during the month of October 1930. I think the exact date which we specified was the 10th of October, but we do not consider that is material, provided the matter be brought to a speedy conclusion within the next 30 or 40 days.

Now, it seems to us that it should be immaterial from Mr. Rankin's standpoint whether the decree be based on the original bill or on the cross-bill, or both, because in any event the amount of the fees payable to Mr. Rankin would be fixed, and we, representing the committee, are perfectly willing to put the arrangement with respect to them in writing so that there can be no possible misunderstanding.

You will recall that charges against Harold A. Moore, as trustee, have been made which affect Harold A. Moore personally, and have to do with his good faith and his honor, and you also know that he is unwilling that there be anything in the final decree which would intimate that proof had been made to substantiate the charges. Inasmuch as all parties are seeking the same result we see no reason why any such intimation should be put in the decree, and our suggestion is that the decree specifically state that by agreement no proof whatever was offered with respect to those portions of the original bill dealing with the charges against the trustee, but that the decree, however, be based on the allegations in both the bill and cross-bill, with respect to the failure of the mortgagor to perform its covenants and make its payments under the trust deed.

We understand that Mr. Rankin objects to having the decree

We understand that Mr. Rankin objects to having the decree provide that the proceeds of the sale be paid over to the trustee. We see no logical reason for this objection, but in case Mr. Rankin We see no logical reason for this objection, but in case Mr. Rankin persists in this objection we are willing to provide assurance of the committee that the trustee will duly account for all funds which may be paid over to him and will cause the trustee to deposit these funds in such a way that the committee or its counsel will exercise some supervision over their disbursement. You might also advise Mr. Rankin that the committee has on deposit with its depositaries more than 92 percent of all of the bonds of the issue presently outstanding, and that we feel that from the standpoint of the interest of those bondholders the continuance of this litigation and the continuance of the property. in the continuance of this litigation and the continuance of the property in the possession of the receiver is working a hardship on them and is preventing the committee from effecting any reorganization or refinancing of the property, and thereby preventing the bondholders from realizing any portion of their investment out of such holders from realizing any portion of their investment out of such reorganization or refinancing.

It is obvious that the committee is not in a position to deal with any prospective operator or purchaser of the property with the litigation in the state in which it now is, and until a final conclusion of the arguments between opposing counsel has been reached nothing of this nature can be accomplished, and furthermore, until a final reorganization is made and a new owner (or an operating company lessee under a long-term lease) is in possession of the property no comprehensive program of advertising, capital betterments, term leases, or other matter of major policy necessary for putting the hotel on its feet can be worked out.

You might also assure Mr. Rankin that in the event a fore-closure sale is held a representative of the committee will bid for the property at such sale and will be supplied with ample funds with which to make good his bid and thereby provide sufficient funds for the payment of counsel fees and other expenses attendant upon the litigation.

Re: Whitehall foreclosure.

Dear Miss Stern: Your letters of October 23d and November 4th, inquiring about the status of the above matter received. As you are probably aware, representing bondholders, I filed a suit last fall to foreclose the first-trust deed or mortgage of Whitehall Building & Operating Co. for the benefit of the plaintiffs and all first-mortgage bondholders. Under this bill I had a receiver appointed, who has been in possession of and operated the hotel last season and is making preparation for its operation the coming season, 1930-31. This operation has been under the management of the best hotel people on the lower east coast and the bondholders' interests are better protected at the present than ever before. We are making preparations to get a final decree of foreclosure and have the property sold next spring, after the close of next season's business. In this foreclosure suit by bondholders the court appointed a receiver, and thereby dispossessed the Moore interests, whom it was charged had been operating the hotel for their benefit rather than the benefit of first-mortgage bondholders. DEAR MISS STERN: Your letters of October 23d and November 4th, bondholders.

At the foreclosure sale, if we have no cash bidder, we will arrange to have the property bought in for the benefit of all first-mortgage bondholders.

Rest assured that I am doing all I can for the protection of the bondholders and to get as much out of the property for them as possible. If there is any further information you desire, please advise.

Yours very truly.

Palm Beach, Fla., November 22, 1930.

Judge A. L. RANKIN,

West Palm Beach, Fla.

Dear Judge Rankin: Mr. Bemis loaned me last night the copy

Dear Judge Rankin: Mr. Bemis loaned me last night the copy of the final decree of which you so kindly sent him. From a layman's standpoint it looks as though you have covered every point. I note that in the sale of this property you ask for a minimum price of $1,500,000, either in bonds or cash, and, as I understand this, it will be necessary for the bondholders' committee to put up two and a half million dollars in bonds of the old issue. In case they only control 93 percent of the bonds, for the balance, or 7 percent of the entire issue, they would put up 60 cents on the dollar. Furthermore, I believe it was our understanding that the bondheld by W. J. Moore, which he bought in after he knew the property was bankrupt, could not be used. This would be another $300,000 of bonds, or the equivalent of 60 cents on the dollar in cash, would have to be put up.

In other words, whoever bought the property would have to out at this figure—$1,500,000.

In other words, whoever bought the property would have to deposit in round figures about $300,000. I am just reciting these facts to see if they are correct, in case someone does bid upon the property. For I believe it is your intention eventually to put this in the hands of three trustees, for, truthfully speaking between friends, I do not believe the property in the long run would pay out at this figure—$1,500,000.

Naturally I am anxious to get to Palm Beach, so that you, Mr. Bemis, and I can go over all these various points brought up in the final decree, so as to be able, when the property is finally offered for sale, to be in a position to make a legitimate bid with a company that will have the backing of several Palm Beach men on our board, who would guarantee the bonds at a fair price. I believe this can only be accomplished by the property being put in the hands of three competent trustees who would look at it for a long pull and not from one season's extraordinary earnings.

It is not only so of Florida property but of all real-estate property throughout the United States today, that on bonds of going concerns that are earning money, would not carry the price that you have asked in this final decree. As an illustration, the firstmortgage bonds on the Berkshire, corner of Fifty-second Street and Madison Avenue, the total issue of which was only $1,350,000, are today offered to us at 60. The property has been built and in operation for 5 years and each and every year has made more than its interest and amortization. In other words, the ground rent on this property is $75,000 a year, the interest and amortization is $120,000, making a total of $190,000. In the last fiscal year we made over $290,000.

made over $290,000.

As another illustration, the first-mortgage bonds on the Florida East Coast entire properties are today selling at 35.

I am just giving you these figures and facts so that you can see the future of Whitehall in the final accounting, instead of the earnings of 2 years ago.

We have a moral obligation to the first bondholders who invested their money in this property. Naturally we would like to see them get some of their capital with a guaranteed return of it. I believe we can earn as much on the property for the first-mortgage bondholders, if not more, than any other group.

I believe I am speaking for Mr. Bemis, as well as myself, when I say that I would hate to see this property get into some hands that in the final outcome would in any way reflect upon Judge Ritter's court.

Ritter's court.

I saw Judge Harris the other day, and I wish you would send me the letters that you had from the Governor of Alabama, as it is just possible before I leave for Palm Beach I might see the Honorable James Francis Burke, of Pittsburgh, and, as you know, he has a big influence in Washington. It is just possible I might get a word in to your advantage.

With kindest regards, believe me, I am,

Sincerely yours

MARTIN SWEENY.

Sincerely yours,

West Palm Beach, Fla.

Re Bert E. Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co.

DEAR JUDGE: I understand from our McPherson that you prepared and submitted to the court a memorandum of authorities on the question of the allowances of attorney's fees to yourself as attorney for the plaintiffs in this case, the authorities which you cited tending to uphold the right of an attorney to fees out of the trust fund or estate where through his efforts an estate has been conserved, protected, or preserved. protected, or preserved

I have looked for this memorandum in the office of the deputy clerk here, but the file seems to be in the hands of the master.

clerk here, but the file seems to be in the hands of the master.

If any of the authorities cited by you purport to define, explain, or illustrate what constitutes conservation or preservation I should appreciate it if you would lend me a copy of your memorandum. We have a copy of only a part of it in our files. If you have only one office copy I shall be glad to make a copy and return it to you. I desire to refer to these authorities in connection with another case that I am handling before Judge Ritter.

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy, I am,

Very truly yours,

LSJULIAN.

L. S. JULIAN.

A. Yes; I received that letter.

Q. Did you write Shutts & Bowen under date of March 16, 1931, as follows:

MARCH 16, 1931.

SHUTTS & BOWEN,

First National Bank Building, Miami, Fla.

(Attention Mr. L. S. Julian.)

In re Whitehall foreclosure.

DEAR Sir: Enclosed I am sending you, as requested, copy of my brief in the above case in reference to application for attorney's fee for conserving assets.

for conserving assets.

I have been delayed in getting this to you on account of my office copy having been borrowed by a brother attorney here, and it was hard to locate.

I have made a copy of my office copy which I am enclosing. This covers all the law that I presented to the court on this point. There was in my original brief some additional argument added to the memorandum, a copy of which I seem to have misplaced.

If I can be of further assistance, please advise.

Yours very truly.

Yours very truly. ALR: cencl: 1.

A. I wrote that letter.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I do not want to be in the position of being technical about this matter, but I am wondering if counsel cannot get at what is now being offered without reading the letters, which are clearly selfserving. We do not want to raise the point. I am wondering if we could not shorten the proceedings somewhat. We have no objection to the testimony, but I wonder if we could not have a statement from counsel on which we might agree. I do not know how long the reading of these letters is to continue. The letters are clearly self-serving and are letters written by persons who are not called. We do not want to raise the point, but I am suggesting in the interest of economy of time whether counsel will not make a statement about the contents of the letters.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have virtually concluded the introduction of this course of correspondence.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I withdraw the suggestion to save time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest that the managers on the part of the House, it seems to me, might well enter into a stipulation respecting the facts, which would save a great deal of time. I believe from what has occurred here that a great deal of this could be agreed on without the necessity of reading this correspondence.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We have withdrawn the suggestion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The object and purpose of presenting the correspondence which we find here is to give to the Court the benefit of the course of negotiations and some idea of what did transpire as revealed by this file, without using the interpretation that counsel might put upon it by trying to get it orally. I believe it will expedite matters much more satisfactorily than trying to interrogate the witness on each particular item. I think we are undoubtedly saving time by having it read and letting the Court have the contents.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I withdraw the suggestion. I did not offer an objection. I merely offered a suggestion.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I have the attention of the managers on the part of the House? I have here the entire file in the Whitehall case, brought here by the clerk of the Court. In order to expedite matters, I had the clerk make a chronological list of all of the matters, papers, and documents contained in this file. To these we have given serial numbers marked on each document itself. I want to know if we can have an agreement with counsel on the other side or a stipulation that these shall be considered as offered in evidence. I will give the managers a copy of the list and then we can draw out any on which we wish to interrogate

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I have not consulted with my colleagues, but if counsel tells me the documents referred to constitute a part of the files in the case, we shall have no objection, I am sure.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have the statement of the clerk. I asked him to prepare it.

Judge, may we have a further agreement as to the number of papers? There are 235 papers and documents of pleadings and motions filed in this case during the time it was being attended to by Mr. Rankin. One hundred and fortynine of these papers were motions and affidavits which were filed before the 24th day of December 1930, and the balance since that date.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Who filed them?
Mr. WALSH (of counsel). A description of them is given here. That is what I am trying to avoid going into. You can check them off with this list. I should have to read it all to tell you. They run along. The list begins with the bill of complaint, and runs right through.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We have no objection. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Thank you. I knew you would

I should like to introduce the original bill of complaint, which is number 1.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will have you look at this paper which I now hand you, and have you tell the court what it is.

(The witness examined the paper.)

Q. What is that, please?—A. That is the original bill of complaint filed in the Bert E. Holland against Whitehall

Q. How many pages is it?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We will agree that it is 200

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Is that what it is? I do not

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I do not know, sir. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have not looked it up.

A. Apparently, there are 134 pages.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. We have had a list made of the papers contained in the records of the Whitehall case. I wish you would run over it as fast as you can, and tell us whether or not you attended the various hearings and attended the various matters that required an appearance in all of the motions; and did you make an inspection of all of the papers filed in this case? I ought to say that when you were asked, yesterday, what you did, I believe you stated that you might refer to the record to find out. Now we have put it in this short form, so that you can look through it-the other side have a copy of it-and give an answer to my question whether you attended to the various matters mentioned in that. Just run through it, page by page.

(The witness examined the document.)

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, with the consent of the President, I suggest to counsel that the managers on the part of the House would be willing for Mr. Rankin to take that paper with him tonight and come back on the stand in the morning for just whatever time it takes him to answer your question, and examine the paper in the meantime, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I wish to expedite matters all I can; but the importance of this matter-

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I wish to give you my reason, because there is no suggestion that I would not take in the way of saving time. Here is a man who is put on without a record of 235 different motions and matters and asked to tell

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I entirely withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). And the inference is drawn, in answer to specific questions on cross-examination in a sort of a mode as though it was not believed, that he did but one or two things. Now, I know no other way to do this; and I should like—I will do it as briefly as I can—to do it in my own way and put it in. I have tried to make it short by having him look at this list. I wish to follow this up by getting the matters in about what he was asked that were in written documents that we were not willing for any witness to interpret and that no witness could recollect.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I wish to apologize to counsel for respondent for having made that suggestion.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I know, Judge, that you are doing your best, and I hope you will think we are.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes; I know you are.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am constrained to inquire whether counsel are ready to proceed with the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Chair just inquired of the witness the length of time it would take him, the way he is proceeding, to complete his examination of the list, and he thinks it will take 20 or 30

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think the Court should be asked to delay its proceedings until the witness has completed the inspection of a memorandum which has been prepared. I think it proper to call attention to the fact that this witness has now been before the Senate since the completion of the opening statements yesterday; and while there is no disposition on the part of any member of the Court unduly to hasten the proceeding, some consideration, I think, ought to be shown, in the presentation of the testimony, to the relevancy and materiality of the testimony.

If the managers force an issue which is largely immaterial and introduce testimony which is only remotely related to the conduct of Judge Ritter, which is the subject matter of consideration in this proceeding, I respectfully suggest that it would be well for others to refrain from magnifying issues which are not primarily material.

Considering the large list of witnesses which has been published, if 2 or 3 days are to be taken in the examination of a single witness whose testimony relating to the material issues in the case is necessarily brief, if all the documents and pleadings and all the correspondence which may have taken place are to be reviewed in evidence in detail, there will be no end to the proceedings.

It is somewhat embarrassing at this juncture to make the statement which is being made, but I am doing it at the instance of a large number of Members of the Court.

Frankly, the proceedings which are in progress now are in answer to or in contradiction of testimony which apparently was unduly drawn out yesterday.

I do not think that any member of the Court feels that it would be proper to interfere with the introduction of evidence under circumstances allowing liberal latitude, but we fear there can be no end of this proceeding if we are to go on as we have begun.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, of course it would be not only a lack of courtesy for me to insist upon something which was not absolutely necessary here, but it would be very foolish for me, in view of the statement made by a member of the Court, to go in opposition to what he says a number of his fellow members of the Court think should be

I shall respectfully show my reasons for this procedure and I shall ask the consideration of the members of the Court of the necessity to introduce this testimony. In view of what was brought out here, I cannot concede that this is not of the utmost significance, and that it does not bear upon one of the charges made against Judge Ritter, namely, that an exorbitant fee was charged.

I submit to your fairness, Mr. President and members of the Court, whether it would be right as a matter of justice to allow the examination which took place yesterday to pass without permitting us completely to answer it. I shall try to be as brief as possible, but this relates to the question of the allowance of an exorbitant fee.

On the question of the reading of the letters, I say likewise that I feel that I would be neglecting the discharge of my duty if I did not insist on proceeding, and much as I should like to accept the suggestion just made, I do not feel that I would be acting with the courage with which a lawyer should attempt to act in a case of this importance, where the Court has final word, without appeal, if I did not ask permission to proceed.

I say that the charge was made, not only by direct, leading questions, but by the manner in which the questions were asked—and I do not insinuate against it, because it was very cleverly done—that this gentleman on the stand in combination with the judge and with other persons, had fomented a case. The word "fomented" was used all the way through, and the charge is that they entered into a conspiracy.

I will be as expeditious as I possibly can, but I know of no way of refuting that charge but by showing by the documentary evidence exactly what took place, what was in the mind of this gentleman, what was in the mind of Mr. Sweeny, and what was in the minds of the others who are charged with the conspiracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would rule—

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have not finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the examination of the witness should proceed, and that the witness should not take time to examine documents at length. It is the ruling of the Chair at this time that the examination of the witness shall proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, we did not hear the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling of the Chair is that the examination of the witness shall proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the manner in which it has been attempted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Court at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I be permitted to make a remark at this point?

Of course, we are all in sympathy with what the Senator from Arkansas has said. None of us wishes to sit here longer than we have to. However, the implications of the examination of yesterday are obvious to anyone who sat here and listened to that examination. Any relevant mode of refutation—we speak now not of an absolute refutation, but any relevant mode which is deemed to be appropriate—may be presented here in an endeavor to reply to what was presented yesterday.

As I understand this particular proposition, the counsel for the respondent presents here a précis, as it were; that is, he presents here a memorandum setting forth all the papers filed in the particular case which is before us. He is seeking in that memorandum merely to show the extent of that proceeding. It seems to me that that is a greater timesaver than presenting the particular documents themselves, and it may answer every purpose that counsel has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion? Why cannot counsel agree as to what the record shows, and let it be put in the record? It seems to me there cannot be any dispute as to what the record shows. I think able counsel on either side could make an agreement, and if the statement which has been offered, and which has been shown the witness is an accurate statement taken from the record, counsel on both sides ought to agree with respect to it, and save an immense amount of time,

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee was not here when a copy of this précis was handed to the managers on the part of the House. It is in their hands now. It is in the hands of the witness. As I have followed the proceedings here, it strikes me that, with the verity of the statement established by the witness, we are through with the documents, and it ought not to take any particular time to complete the examination now in progress.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely suggested primarily that the Court ought not to be required to sit while the witness is given an indefinite length of time to examine a memorandum. We certainly are entitled to proceed. I am not trying to hurry anybody; but are we to sit all afternoon until the witness can review notes which have been handed him? I think the Chair has properly held that the examination of the witness should proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I make a statement, Mr. President? I know that you would not cut me off, and I had not finished what I was saying when the Presiding Officer made his ruling. May I be permitted, with the consent of the Court, to finish what I had to say?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You may.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I was going to say that the only way I know how to proceed with respect to the question of the exorbitant fee—and I have the right to proceed in that manner—is to take out the documents one at a time and ask the witness whether he appeared at such time and place, and whether he prepared the papers, and then epitomize when I get through by asking him how much of his time it took for 14 months to do those things.

In order to try to make it short, I have prepared this memorandum. I was asked by a member of the Court adjacent to the counsel table whether this witness had seen it. My answer was that this witness had never seen this memorandum, because it was a big job to complete it. I tried to get it done a week ago, and I have been probably most of that time trying to get it in order. My idea was, in order to get through, that I would ask the witness to look it over, and if the Court insists on it I will ask him to pick out the particular proceedings or hearings and matters he attended to, in order to shorten the examination of the witness.

I did not raise the question that this witness was one who was called by the other side. We allowed the managers on the part of the House to cross-examine him, on the theory, of course, that the matter was of such moment, and the former relations of this gentleman with the judge were so important, that they ought to be investigated in the very best possible way they could be investigated.

Therefore I had no objection to the cross-examination which was conducted; but I do claim that it is the right of this man, in justice, to show just what was done in this case. I will make it as brief as possible. Goodness knows, I do not want to stay here any longer than necessary, and I know it would be very foolish for me to go through a performance before a practical court and jury, composed largely of lawyers, and do anything that a lawyer ought not to do in the introduction of evidence, not only as to its order but as to its integrity and substance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Court is whether the witness shall be permitted time to examine at length the memorandum which has been furnished to him. The witness advises the Chair it will probably take him 15 or 20 or possibly 30 minutes to do so. The Chair will submit the question to the Court. [Putting the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, why cannot the witness, when the Court is not in session, have exhibited to him and looked over any papers about which counsel afterward desires to interrogate him? Why hold the Court while the witness reads something which he could have read last night?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the "noes" are in the majority. The counsel for the respondent will proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel, addressing Mr. Rankin). Please give me the list, then. That is my only recourse.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you whether or not you prepared this paper entitled "Bill of complaint for foreclosure of trust deed or mortgage, appointment of receiver, and other relief."—A. I prepared that.

Q. Did you prepare and file the document marked "no. 2", being Petition for Intervention by Eugenia J. Schopps?—A. I prepared that with the assistance of Mr. Metcalf. I also prepared the bill of complaint with his assistance.

Q. Did you prepare this document which I hand you, marked "No. 3", entitled in this case "Petition for Intervention by A. H. Hill"?-A. I prepared this.

Q. I ask you whether or not you prepared the document marked "4", entitled "Amendment to bill of complaint for foreclosure of trust deed or mortgage, appointment of receiver, and other relief"?—A. I prepared this paper.

Q. I will get you to look at the paper which I now hand you, entitled "Petition for intervention, by A. W. Kirkland", and ask you whether or not you prepared that paper?—A.

I prepared this paper.

- Q. I will ask you whether or not you prepared the paper entitled "Motion to grant order permitting intervention" of A. H. Hill, Eugenia J. Schopps, and A. W. Kirkland?—A. I drafted that.
- Q. I will ask you at this point whether or not, with respect to all these papers I have asked you about heretofore, it is a fact or not a fact that after you prepared those orders you went to court and had them granted—every one of them?—A. That is a fact.

Q. I will ask you whether you prepared document no. 10, entitled "Motion for appointment of receiver"?—A. I prepared that motion.

Q. I will have you look at the document which I now hand you, marked "No. 11", entitled "Bill of intervener, A. W. Kirkland, for foreclosure of trust deed and mortgage", signed by both you and Mr. Metcalf, and ask you whether you prepared that or Mr. Metcalf prepared it, or both, and whether you or Mr. Metcalf or both presented the motion to the court?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to ask counsel for the respondent, in view of the fact that he handed the memorandum to the witness, and the witness, as I followed him, examined two or three pages of it, whether the witness is ready to answer respecting the two or three pages which he did examine. If he says that he did examine them, and that he is ready to answer with respect to those two or three pages, it would pretermit any further presentation of those matters which are on the pages referred to which the witness examined.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel has heard the request.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The witness may do that, if I correctly understand the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document which the witness now has in his hand is a little larger than the others. That is why he took some time to look it over.

The WITNESS. I do not understand.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You examined two or three pages of that; and, having done so, is that sufficient?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; I have reference to the other document. Will the Chair pardon me for one moment? The witness examined two or three of the pages of the document which was handed to him; and it is my suggestion that the witness be asked if, as to the pages which he examined, he is ready to answer.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). There has been a suggestion made here which I will be very glad to follow.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the honorable counsel yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire merely to be helpful and to save time, if possible. Would the honorable counsel agree that the witness have opportunity this evening to examine that paper, so that tomorrow when he may take the witness stand he can testify as to the various matters? Obviously the witness would require an hour or so to examine it, and the learned counsel and the learned managers could go ahead with other witnesses meanwhile. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We adopt the suggestion.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest—I doubt that I have the right to do so under the rule, but I ask to be allowed to do so—that the paper be given to the witness so that he may have it this evening for as long as he wishes and examine it, and when the attorneys for respondent desire they may recall him for further examination on this or any other point.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will agree to do that to expedite the matter, although it is a little difficult.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May I venture another suggestion which I hope will be helpful? The managers on the part of the House will agree that each of those papers listed in the schedule there are all papers that have been filed in this case. That is all counsel is trying to prove by this witness, I assume, although I do not know and may not understand the object. All we ask is that the witness indicate on the list of documents those that the witness himself prepared. We will agree that they have all been filed in this case.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That would not do for this reason: The very next paper that we come to is merely an appraisal, but we have a right to know what he did about that appraisal. Did he go over the appraisal? It is a very important matter. I am going to adopt the suggestion of the member of the Court who made the suggestion as to withholding these papers this evening, and having the witness examine them.

The WITNESS. I did not answer your question with reference to this paper.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you hear the agreement that was made here?—
A. Yes; but this paper was in my hand, and you had asked me a question. Shall I answer it?

Q. Yes. The witness may answer that question, I take it, Mr. President.

A. This amendment or bill of intervention was prepared by Mr. Metcalf and by me.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The witness may step aside until tomorrow morning, and the managers may call their next witness.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that the learned counsel may recall this witness.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is understood.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers on the part of the House will call their next witness.

The managers on the part of the House called Bert E. Holland.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF BERT E. HOLLAND

Bert E. Holland, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Judge Holland, for the purpose of expediting your examination, I am going to venture to make the statement that you are Bert E. Holland; that your residence is in Boston, Mass.; that you are a lawyer; that you were one of the trustees who had control of the bonds in the Whitehall Hotel Co. to the amount of $50,000; that you were corresponded with by Mr. Sweeny; and, as a result of a series of correspondence, you authorized Mr. Rankin, of Miami, Fla., and an associate to institute litigation for the foreclosure, in behalf of your client, of the first mortgage, or that part of the first mortgage represented by this $50,000 worth of bonds. Is that correct?—A. That is correct.

Q. Coming down to the time when you appeared at Miami, Fla., at the court of Judge Halsted L. Ritter, will you state to the Court what transpired—and I direct your attention first to your contact with and your statement to Mr. Rankin?—A. I think it was on a Monday morning that I met Mr. Rankin in the courthouse corridor with, I believe, Mr. Metcalf. I was introduced by Mr. Fordham. That was the first time that I had ever met Mr. Rankin. Our conversation, in substance, was this: That I was one of the parties plaintiff in the action of the Sugden trustees against the Whitehall Building & Operating Co.; that I was there in person and had authority to act for the other cotrustee; that I desired to appear for myself and did not want his services longer; that I desired his bill. I think that he then stated that he thought I was making a mistake in doing that. We then went into the courtroom. Do you wish me to proceed?

Q. I do, if you please.—A. My memory is that the matter of a motion for a receivership was taken up by the court.

Q. That is, a receivership in the Whitehall Hotel matter?-A. Yes; that either Mr. Rankin or Mr. Metcalf started in on that matter of a motion for a receivership. I think Mr. Bowen, of Shutts & Bowen, then stated to the court that I was present from Boston, and he asked the court to indulge me while I could make a few remarks. I then stated to the court that I was there in person; that I desired to take charge of the matter myself, acting for myself and my cotrustees; that we did not want the matter in court, or, if in court, we wanted it stopped there. My memory is that the judge said that we were already in court; that he knew this situation, he knew the property, and had for some time, and that he felt that a receiver should be appointed to take charge of the property. I said that I was there to ask that a receiver be not appointed on account of the expense that would be incurred. I think then-I am not certain, but I believe that then, or possibly when I said I wished the matter to stand, Judge Ritter said that he did not like the idea of people coming from out the State, coming into court in Florida, starting proceedings, and then trying to have them dismissed; that in this particular instance he felt that a receiver should be appointed, that he had in mind the property, and that he should appoint a receiver. I think that, in substance, is what was said between Judge Ritter and

Q. Mr. Holland, to refresh your memory, was there anything said by Judge Ritter, in inquiry by Judge Ritter, as to whether or not or what influence prompted you to appear in the court asking for withdrawal of the suit, or whatever you did ask?—A. I have nothing of that in my memory.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Holland, did you visit Mr. Martin Sweeny on or about October 3, 1929?—A. I did.

Q. Had you had a telephone conversation with him prior to that time?—A. I think I had had.

Q. Was there an exchange of wires before you came there?—A. I think in telegrams; yes.

Q. It was an arranged meeting?-A. Yes.

Q. That was about the Whitehall matter?-A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Sweeny tell you the interest he had in it, the history of it, what he had done in it, and what his interest was in seeing you about it?—A. Some.

Q. Where did you meet Mr. Sweeny?—A. At the Berkshire, I think; his hotel.

Q. Had you connected with anybody else in this matter at all except having an exchange of correspondence with the trustee in bankruptcy, Mr. Walter S. Richardson, at that time?—A. Had I had correspondence or connection with anyone else aside from Walter S. Richardson up to that time?

Q. Yes, sir.-A. I had not.

Q. So the only ones you had had any communication with, either verbally or by any other means, were Walter S. Richardson and Martin Sweeny. Is that correct?—A. Yes.

Q. You began the correspondence, did you not, by writing to Walter S. Richardson in March of that year?—A. The first letter sent was sent to the trustee in bankruptcy of the Whitehall Building & Operating Co., and we received a reply from Walter S. Richardson, trustee.

Q. You had certain inquiries to make as to how the property was being handled so far as meeting obligations of the trust deed were concerned, had you not?—A. Yes.

Q. He answered your letter?-A. He did.

Q. How many letters would you say you had from Mr. Richardson?—A. Three or four.

Q. Have you the letters with you?-A. I have.

Q. Will you please let me look at them?—A. That is, I say I have the letters of Mr. Richardson. I have the copies of the letters I sent him.

Q. That completes it. Will you kindly let me look at them?—A. Yes [handing counsel a file of papers].

Q. I see you have here a letter of June 3, 1929, from Walter S. Richardson, trustee. Are you familiar with that?—A. Yes.

Q. This letter reads as follows, and I am leaving out those which went before that, if I may, and read this one:

In reply to your letter of May 23, I wish to advise that I have handed your letter to the auditors and have requested them to furnish you the information at their earliest convenience, if they have sufficient information before them to gather this for you. I would like to advise that the secured creditors made a compromise settlement with the unsecured creditors whereby the unsecured creditors get 10 percent on their claims in full settlement thereof, and the balance of the money, after paying administration expenses of the bankrupt, will be turned over to the secured creditors. I also wish to advise that Mr. Moore, of the American Bond & Mortgage Co., brought foreclosure proceedings on the third mortgage, which amounts to $60,000 and interest, etc. He is to sell the property today at 11 o'clock. You appreciate the fact that I am trustee for all the creditors and would not care to become active in behalf of any one or group of creditors. However, I would suggest that you write Metcalf & Hiatt, Harvey Building, West Palm Beach, furnishing them with a list of the bonds held by you and your clients and any other information that you would think they would need in cooperating with you in behalf of your clients. I am very friendly with this firm, and will be glad to cooperate with them in this matter. I understand that other bondholders have taken this matter up with this firm.

Yours very truly,

WALTER S. RICHARDSON, Trustee.

Q. You remember getting that letter, do you?—A. I do.

Q. And you answered the letter?—A. I am not certain. I think that is the last letter.

Q. Yes; I notice that you did not, Mr. Holland. That was on June 3. Did you make any further inquiry into the matter as to the condition of that property upon which you held these bonds?—A. Not from then until I met Mr. Sweeny.

Q. You knew the bonds were in default, did you not?—A. We——

Q. Did you know it?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Did you not know that the bonds had been in default since the middle of the year 1928, and that the trustee had not made any move to protect the first bondholders?—A. I do not think that I individually did.

Q. Did you know that there was a second mortgage and a third mortgage on that property following yours—junior mortgages?—A. Not until later.

Q. What time did you find it out?—A. It was substantially later.

Q. Yes; how late?—A. And the reason—

Q. No; not the reason; just how late it was, first, Mr. Holland. We are all trying to save time.—A. Thank you. I think it was—oh, 6 months or so later.

Q. You knew when you got the letter from Mr. Richardson, did you not, that there was a third mortgage on the property, and it was being foreclosed that day, and the third mortgage amounted to $60,000?—A. I did.

Q. After you got that, did you make any further inquiry yourself?—A. Not until later.

Q. Did you make any inquiry before you saw Mr. Martin Sweeny?—A. I do not think so.

Q. That was the first time that you ever heard the name of the lawyers there, was it not—Metcalf & Hiatt?—A. I think so.

Q. You had no knowledge of it, and nobody suggested anybody as a lawyer prior to that time?—A. I think that is right.

Q. I wish you would briefly relate the conversation you had with Mr. Martin Sweeny on the 3d day of October 1929.—A. I met Mr. Sweeny in the morning of that day at his hotel and talked with him in regard to the matter, he saying that he understood we had, or the trustees or the Sugdens, I believe he said, had substantial holdings in Whitehall. He asked me the amount. I told him. I think he said that it was necessary to have that amount of bonds in order to be able to start foreclosure proceedings, and that the property had been handled by him and Mr. Bemis for a year or two; that with the Moores in charge there was nothing that would come to the first-mortgage bondholders, and that for that reason he felt, suggested to me, that the best thing to do was to start foreclosure proceedings by the first-mortgage bondholders.

Q. Prior to that, had you communicated with Harold Moore, the trustee?—A. I think up to that time I never had met Harold Moore.

Q. Had you asked Harold Moore to perform his duty as trustee, those bonds being in default for a year or more, and to bring proceedings?-A. I think I had not met or corresponded with Harold Moore.

Q. While you were in Mr. Sweeny's office did you write a letter to Mr. Rankin?-A. Yes; subsequent to a letter sent or written to Metcalf & Hiatt.

Q. Is the Metcalf letter in here?—A. The copy of the letter is there. It has written on it "superseded by'

Q. Will you be kind enough to indicate it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to propound the questions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the

The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

When, where, and how did you employ Rankin or other attorneys to bring foreclosure suit, if you did employ anyone?

A. Well, as to when I did that, it was October 3, when I was at Mr. Sweeny's office. That is where.

The Chief Clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

What were the terms of such employment, if any?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in order to get any chronological picture of this matter, I wish to have the witness start out at the beginning and detail just what happened, and tell us where it happened-in Florida, New York, Boston, or South America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again read the question to the witness.

The Chief Clerk reread the second question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

What were the terms of such employment, if any?

A. Well, those stated, I think, in the letter of October 3 to both Mr. Metcalf and to Mr. Rankin.

The Chief Clerk read the third question propounded by Mr. Connally, as follows:

Prior to filing of suit, did you or not direct Rankin not to

A. Well, I sent a telegram October 10 asking Rankin not to file suit; but I cannot tell the time of day, because it is not on the copy of the telegram which I had.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. So after you talked with Mr. Sweeny, did you write a letter to these gentlemen?-A. We did, or I did, in Mr. Sweeny's office, and by using his secretary.

Q. I am going to read you this letter now and ask you if this was the letter through which you employed Mr. Rankin? You had gotten the Hiatt name from the trustee in bankruptcy, had you not?-A. Yes.

Q. And did you have that letter with you when you went to see Mr. Sweeny?-A. Yes.

Q. Now I will ask you if you wrote this letter to Mr. Rankin:

DEAR Sir: I represent some of the holders and owners of the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. bonds on which their interest has remained unpaid for more than a year, and at the suggestion of Walter S. Richardson, of your city, with whom I have had correspondence, I am sending you the numbers and denominations

Did you so send them the numbers and denominations?-A. Yes; when the letter was sent, a list was sent of the numbers and denominations.

Q. (Reading):

The bonds were not purchased by me but were delivered to my-self and two other parties as trustees in five different trusts of which the beneficiaries are all residents of Boston, Mass., and desk which I should like to have answered.

the other trustees and myself would like to have the proper steps taken for a petition to be filed in the proper Federal court so that, if possible, a self-appointed bondholders' committee may be appointed by the court, and that the necessary steps be taken to institute foreclosure proceedings immediately in favor of the holders of the first-mortgage bonds. A list of the numbers and denominations of these bonds is herewith attached, and upon advice from your office we shall be pleased to deposit these at the First National Bank of Palm Beach, Fla., for use as you deem best. I am taking these steps having in mind that it is the season of the year when this property ought to be put in shape for the coming winter.

I shall be obliged if you will keep me fully informed of the proceedings taken in this matter by writing me at my office at 73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass. the other trustees and myself would like to have the proper steps

Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

Prior to the sending of that letter did you discuss with Mr. Sweeny, or did Mr. Sweeny tell you, what his interest was in this property, and what his connection with it had been throughout the years?-A. Yes.

Q. He told you, did he not, that he, Mr. Bemis, and Mr. Singer had bought that property originally for $437,000?-A. I am not sure of that.

Q. But he told you that they had bought it and that they. through the American Bond & Mortgage Co., which financed it, had made these large improvements and enlargements of the building, did he not?-A. I am not sure of that.

Q. Do you say that he told you that he had had something to do with it for a year or two?-A. Yes; for a couple of.

years.

Q. Did he not tell you that he had something to do with it from the first time it was opened as a hotel after it ceased to be the residence of Mr. Flagler?-A. I am not

Q. But you are certain that he did in a general way tell you his connection with it?-A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you that he managed it right down to that time for every season?—A. Yes; for a couple of years.

Q. Did you return directly to Boston after your interview with Mr. Sweeny?—A. No; I had the interview with Mr. Sweeny, as I said a moment ago, in the morning.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. He gave me a letter-

Q. Yes, sir.—A. In substance telling me what he wished done, and he gave me also a list of other gentlemen whom he suggested as a bondholders' committee.

Q. Anything else?—A. Yes; he said while I was there that he was not certain whether we should send the letter to Metcalf & Hiatt or to someone else, and while I was therethis was in the evening—he telephoned someone who I think was Mr. Richardson.

Q. Did you hear him telephone?—A. I heard him; I was right at the desk.

Q. Did he say "Mr. Richardson"? I am not questioning it. Do you know whether he telephoned Mr. Richardson?-A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Very well. Go ahead.—A. Then he said to write this letter, to write Mr. Rankin, and we wrote Mr. Rankin, in substance copying the letter I had dictated.

Q. Did he detail the connection Mr. Bemis had with him and had with the operation of this hotel, Mr. H. E. Bemis?— A. Yes.

Q. So you were thoroughly advised of his interest and Mr. Bemis' interest in this matter?—A. Yes.

Q. I will take a little short cut. Martin Sweeny is still operating that hotel, is he not?-A. I understand so.

Q. He has operated it from the day it went into business of being a hotel down to the present time?-A. I do not know that.

Q. You do not know that. All right. You say that after writing this letter you sent a wire to Mr. Rankin—the wire has been introduced here, so we will not go into that—telling him not to file the suit. You say you did not see the time of the telegram, you just had a copy of the telegram?—A. Yes; I had a copy of the telegram.

Q. We have introduced the original here, so I am not going to question you about it, except to say that it shows it was sent at 4:45 and received at Palm Beach at 5:05.-A.

I do not know that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send a question to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Did you have any agreement with Rankin about a fee, and if so, what was it?

A. I had no agreement with Mr. Rankin except what was stated in the letter of October 3.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send a question to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Minton, as follows:

Who suggested the employment of Rankin, and why?

A. Mr. Sweeny was the man who gave me Mr. Rankin's name and it was given to me that evening of October 3 when I was at Mr. Sweeny's office.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the witness does not answer the last part of the question. I want to know whether there was any reason why Rankin was suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question again.

The Chief Clerk again read the question propounded by Mr. MINTON, as follows:

Who suggested the employment of Rankin, and why?

A. Mr. Sweeny suggested the employment of Mr. Rankin, and my memory is that he was suggested because he was at Palm Beach, and, as I understood, his name was suggested by Mr. Richardson.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Where did you go after you left New York?-A. On the evening of October 3?

Q. Yes; on the evening of October 3.-A. I returned to Boston.

Q. What time did you get back to Boston the next day? Were you there on the 4th?-A. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk which I should like to have asked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Did Sweeny suggest that Rankin had influence with the court?

A. I do not remember that he did.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You are a lawyer yourself?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that when you employed counsel, unless the fee was paid out of the corpus of the estate, you would be liable for a reasonable fee, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no suggestion that there was not to be a fee, was there?-A. No, sir.

Q. You went to Chicago afterward, did you not?-A. Yes. Q. Did you discuss this matter with anyone after you returned to Boston?-A. Yes, sir. Q. On the 4th?-A. No; I do not know that I did on the 4th? Q. What did you next do in connection with the matter?-A. I talked with my associate, Mr. Johnson. Q. You were trustee for $50,000 of the bonds?-A. Yes.

Q. We might call those, might we not, for convenience here, the Sugden bonds?—A. Yes; on Whitehall.

Q. To whom did you next talk in connection with this matter of the bonds you held on the Whitehall property?-A. I talked with Mr. Johnson, my associate.

Q. Another attorney in Boston?-A. Yes; associated with

Q. Who was the next one?—A. I think I also talked with Mr. Sugden, one of the beneficiaries under the trust.

Q. I am trying to get at when you first received any communication from the city of Chicago, if you did receive any communication.-A. When my associate returned from his home, which was in Illinois, he came through Chicago.

Q. Mr. Johnson?-A. Yes.

Q. What date was that, please?—A. I think the 8th or 9th.

Q. The 8th or 9th day of October?-A. Yes.

Q. Did you then go to Chicago?—A. Yes, sir; with Mr. Johnson, later.

Q. What time did you arrive there?-A. I think we arrived there-I think it was the 11th, although I am not

Q. Did you find out when you arrived in Chicago that the American Bond & Mortgage Co. had been taken over by a committee of bankers, and that they could not pay the sum of about two and a half million dollars?-A. No.

Q. Was a bondholders' committee created while you were there?-A. I am not certain as to that. My memory is that while I was in Chicago, parties left Chicago for New York on the matter of forming a bondholders' committee for the first-mortgage bonds.

Q. And what was the date of that?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. You say it was either the 10th or the 11th. Was it, or was it not, on the same date that you sent the telegram asking Mr. Rankin not to proceed with the case?—A. I think the telegram suggesting to Mr. Rankin that he cease proceeding with the case—that is, not to enter suit—was before I left Boston.

Q. Was Mr. Johnson in Chicago at that time?—A. He was.

Q. And was he communicating with you by telephone?-A. No. Pardon me—Mr. Johnson had returned, as I say, I think about the 11th, and later Mr. Johnson and I went to Chicago.

Q. Upon what date did you get to Chicago?-A. I think it was the 11th or 12th.

Q. Did you remain in Chicago for the balance of that month?-A. No.

Q. How long did you stay there?-A. I cannot tell you the number of days. It was a few days. I was there, as I remember, on the 14th to the 16th of October.

Q. Was a bondholders' committee organized there in Chicago?-A. I am not certain of that.

Q. Were you present at a bondholders' committee in Chicago representing the Sugden interests?—A. Not then.

Q. Were you there subsequently at a meeting of the bondholders' committee representing the Sugden interests?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go there for the purpose of attending that meeting?-A. At this time?

Q. Yes .- A. No.

Q. Was the committee organized before you got there?-A. I do not know.

Q. Did you attend the first meeting of that committee?-A. No. I am not certain of that. I attended a meeting of the bondholders' committee just prior to my going to Miami; and I got there, I think, the 26th or 27th.

Q. As a matter of fact, the bondholders' committee in Chicago was organized on the 24th day of October 1929, was it not?-A. I think so.

Q. And you attended the first meeting?-A. I do not know whether I attended the first meeting. I may have. Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk several questions which I ask to have read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the questions

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Bachman, as follows:

When appearing to oppose the motion for receivership before Judge Ritter, did you present reasons for opposition?

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Bachman, as follows:

Did you or not state that you had directed Mr. Rankin to with-hold motion for receivership?

A. I think I did.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you some questions about that when I get to it, Mr. Witness. In answer to the wire that you sent Mr. Rankin-he sent you a wire, did he not?-A. Yes.

Q. In which he urged reasons why you should not refrain from filing the suit?-A. Yes.

- Q. And you took those into consideration?—A. Yes.
- Q. And then you sent him a telegram telling him to let the matter remain just as it was, but not to have a receiver appointed?-A. I did.
- Q. Yes. So when you started down there the matter was in status quo, was it not?-A. Well, that was the standing of the matter; yes.
- Q. That was the standing of that matter until you got down there, was it not? Is that correct?-A. Yes.
- Q. When you got down there you say you met these two gentlemen in the hallway; that you were sure of Mr. Rankin, I believe, but you did not know whether it was Mr. Metcalf or not?-A. That is my understanding.
- Q. Do you still know whether or not it was Mr. Metcalf? Were you introduced to him?—A. Yes; I was introduced to both of them, I believe by Mr. Fordham; it may have been Mr. Bowen, but I think it was Mr. Fordham.
- Q. You were satisfied that it was Mr. Metcalf that you met, were you?-A. Yes.
- Q. And you had not met him before?-A. I had not seen either of them before.
- Q. And you told them, in brief, that you did not want them to represent you; and did I understand you to say in your direct evidence that you told them you wanted the suit withdrawn?-A. I did not intend to convey that impression. I met both of those gentlemen, and I had only had dealings with Mr. Rankin. He was the gentleman I desired to see, and I did my talking to him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas submits a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Where is the wire Rankin sent you advising to proceed to file suit?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I have it, Mr. President.

A. It is in my file which the gentleman has. Shall I read it?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think so.

A. (Reading):

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., October 10, 1929, 3:01 p. m. BERT E. HOLLAND.

Attorney at law, Room 1104 Fremont Building,

Attorney at law, Room 1104 Fremont Building,
Boston, Mass.:

Have foreclosure bill prepared and ready to file. Will file tomorrow or next day. No need at present for bonds. Secured copy from trust deed; will mail copy of bill and advise fully our proceedure.

A. L. RANKIN.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. You say you did not intend to convey the impression by your answer that you asked these gentlemen to withdraw the suit?-A. I am not certain of that.
- Q. You did desire that suit to remain just as it was, did you not, except for the appointment of a receiver?-A. I do not think I had any definite impression one way or the other.
- Q. You say you are a lawyer. When you went in there you did not say anything to the judge, did you, about discharging this gentleman?-A. I am not certain of that, but my better impression is that I did.
- Q. Did you tell him anything about the conversation in the hall?—A. I do not know that I stated the conversation.
- Q. Have you read the articles of impeachment in this case against Judge Ritter?-A. The articles of impeachment?
- Q. The articles of impeachment bearing upon the subject matter about which you are now testifying?-A. Yes.
- Q. You saw in the articles of impeachment, did you not, that you were supposed to have asked Judge Ritter to dismiss this suit? Did you see that in the articles of impeachment?—A. Yes.
- Q. You did not ask Judge Ritter to dismiss this suit?-A. I am not certain that I did or did not.
- Q. I shall have to refresh your memory. You testified in this case before, did you not?-A. Yes.
 - Q. In the investigation in the case?—A. Yes.
- Q. Your memory, of course, was fresher then than it is now. That was in 1933?-A. I think so; in the fall.

- Q. The fall of 1933. Just to refresh your memory, I am reading this part of your testimony:
- I then stated to the court that I was one of the parties plaintiff, and it just seems to me as if Mr. Bowen, of Shutts & Bowen, had suggested to Judge Ritter, as I understand, that I was present and one of the parties plaintiff, and that I had something to say, and I stated to the judge that I wished nothing further done in that particular case; that I had attempted to see that nothing should be done, and that I hadn't been very successful, and being here I desired to state to the court that I wished the action to remain just as it was.

Did you tell him that?—A. If the record so states, I suppose I did.

- Q. I am just reading this to refresh your memory. It is not a matter of contradiction. Do you now remember that that is what you stated?-A. I so assume.
- Q. On the morning this matter came up, or the day it came up, the matter of the receiver, there were present besides yourself Messrs. Metcalf and Rankin-just assent as I mention their names .- A. Yes; I think so.
- Q. Messrs. Shutts and Bowen, were there?-A. No. I think Mr. Bowen, but I do not think Mr. Shutts was there.
- Q. He was representing the firm of Shutts & Bowen?-A. Yes.
- Q. They were representing Harold Moore, trustee?-A. I think so.
- Q. Had you become acquainted with Harold Moore by that time?—A. I had met Mr. Harold Moore.
- Q. Was he at the meeting of the bondholders' committee?-A. I am not certain.
 - Q. Had you met W. J. Moore at that time?-A. No.
- Q. John P. Stokes was there, of Loftin, Stokes & Calkins?-A. I do not know.
 - Q. Representing Mr. Bemis?—A. I do not know.
 - Q. Did you know Mr. Stokes?-A. No.
- Q. Wilson Trammell was there representing some interests, was he not?—A. I do not know.
 - Q. Did you know the gentleman?-A. No.
- Q. Mr. Sugden had become a member of that bondholders' committee, had he not, representing the interests which you formerly represented or were still representing?—A. Mr. Sugden was made a member of the bondholders' committee when it was organized.
- Q. That is the Chicago committee? You spoke of another that was attempted to be formed, but this was the Chicago committee.—A. If you have in mind that some of the members were from Chicago, others from Detroit, others from New York, and that Mr. Sugden-
- Q. I was identifying it by calling it the Chicago committee, the meeting you attended in Chicago.—A. I attended the meeting before I went to Miami.
- Q. You mean the meeting that Mr. Sugden attended where he was representing this $50,000 worth of bonds; was that it?-A. Yes.
- Q. Mr. Lautmann was there, too, was he not, at that meeting?-A. Yes.
- Q. He was there, too? He made certain representations to the court also, did he not?-A. Yes.
- Q. Mr. Lautmann then represented the bondholders' committee in which the bonds were that you first had Mr. Rankin bring suit on, did he not? Did he not so announce?—A. I do not know. I do not think he did.
- Q. Was he attorney for the bondholders of the Chicago organization?—A. He was the attorney, as I understood, for the bondholders' committee.
- Q. That was the committee that had then the $50,000 worth of bonds? Is that correct?—A. No; they did not have them.
- Q. Mr. Sugden was a representative, I believe you stated, of the same persons. The bonds had not been actually delivered? Is that what you mean?—A. No; the bonds were still in the possession of the trustees.
- Q. But he afterward represented them in that committee, did he not?-A. Yes.
- Q. You joined the committee just afterward, did you not?-A. No; except to go to represent Mr. Sugden.
- Q. Were you a member of the committee that was formed afterward?—A. No.

Q. This bondholders' committee was represented, I believe you said, by Mr. Lautmann. Is that correct?—A. Yes; I think so.

Q. And from that time forward those bonds, until they got rid of the Moore interests, remained in that bondholders' committee, did they not?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt counsel, but I understand that this witness has testified that those $50,000 of bonds were in the custody of the bondholders' committee.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask him again and try to straighten it out.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you if it is not a fact that the Sugden bonds afterward went into the control of the bondholders' committee, which meeting you attended, and Mr. Sugden attended, in the city of Chicago?—A. If I may state the fact as I have it in mind—

Q. I wish you would.—A. Those bonds were in a deposit box under the joint control of Mr. Johnson and myself. When this committee meeting was held in Chicago, the 24th or whenever it was, along in October, I was there, but Mr. Sugden was not there. Later those bonds were deposited with the depositary in Boston.

Q. The depositary of the Boston bond committee?—A Yes; of the bondholders' committee.

Q. That bondholders' committee which was organized took in several other hotels throughout the United States, did it not?—A. My memory is that there were about 200 pieces of property. That is just my memory and not definite.

Q. This Florida piece is one section of it?—A. This is one piece of property.

Q. Upon that committee which was represented in Miami that morning, the 28th of October, was Mr. Walter J. Sugden? Is that correct?—A. No.

Q. Was not that committee formed on October 24, 1929, pursuant to a deposit agreement of that date, and did not the committee at that time consist of the following: Craig Hazelwood, chairman, and a number of others, including Walter J. Sugden, of Boston, Mass., the chairman being Mr. Hazelwood, and the secretary being Mr. George L. Wire, of Chicago, Ill.; that is correct, is it not?—A. I think so.

Q. Did this bonding committee have a property in Boston under their control, a hotel?—A. Have property? Yes.

Q. What was the name of the hotel?—A. Well, they had several; the Miles Standish—do you wish for them?

Q. Yes; I wish you would give us their names.—A. There was the Miles Standish, the Helen Hall, the Longwood Towers, 250 Beacon Street, Newberry Street Garage, the Roosevelt, and another one. I cannot give you the name just now.

Q. Very well. I will ask if it is not a fact that Mr. Sonne-schein—one of the attorneys, as I understand, of the Chicago Title & Trust Co.—at the first meeting suggested that the committee allocate the properties in different geographic centers to certain members of the committee and individuals, charging them with the duty of assembling necessary data in respect to the properties in their centers, considering the properties, and reporting their recommendations as to policy and course to be pursued as to each particular property; and Mr. Sonneschein and Bert E. Holland were appointed in charge of the Florida area? Was that correct, or not? Did that happen at the first meeting?—A. I cannot tell you. I do not remember.

Q. Do you not remember at all?-A. No; I do not.

Q. Did you belong to that area? Did you have charge, for that bondholders' committee, of the Florida area?—A. I did not understand that I did.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I desire to propound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington desires to propound a question, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Schwellenbach, as follows:

Report as fully and as exactly as you can your statement to Judge Ritter in court.

A. I stated to Judge Ritter that I was there in person and was a member of the bar in Massachusetts; that I had, as my memory serves me, discharged Mr. Rankin, talked with him in the corridor, and had discharged him, and had asked him to render his bill; that I wished the Whitehall property, the suit against the Whitehall property, to—I do not think I used the word "dismissed", but wanted it stopped; I did not want anything further done with it. I think that then the judge stated something about the case, that he knew the property; he had known it for some time, that Mr. Richardson had handled it, and that he felt that it was something that should be carried along by Mr. Richardson; and after that I said that on the motion for the appointment of a receiver I did not want a receiver appointed, because of the expense that would be incurred, and that I—

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I shall have to ask the question over again.

Mr. KING. The witness is answering another question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is answering the question of the Senator from Washington.

The WITNESS. I am hardly through. I think it was then that Judge Ritter said he did not like the idea of people coming in from out of the State and starting proceedings and then asking that they be dismissed, and that he should appoint a receiver; that the property needed it for its protection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that all?

The WITNESS. So far as I know; yes, sir. I have ended. By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Holland, when I read you what you stated in the hearing, at the investigation, I believe you stated that your memory was refreshed, and you then said that you agreed that that was correct now; that you wished the action to remain just as it was. That is a very vital point. Is that correct or not?—A. I assume that is correct, as taken by the stenographer.

Q. Yes, sir. You say that you were not put on the socalled Florida section of that bond committee?—A. Well, I did not know that I was.

Q. Were you on the Boston section of that committee?—A. I think that there was something there that I was a member of—that is, my client, Mr. Sugden, was on the Boston section; and if he was not able to be present, I was supposed to attend.

Q. But my question was, Was it not a fact that you were elected at that first bondholders' committee meeting to represent the area of Florida and the area of Boston, Mass.—not your client, but Bert E. Holland?—A. I understood your question to be that Mr. Sonneschein read that, or stated it.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. I am not certain. I have no recollection of it. I may not have heard it. I do not know.

Q. You have no recollection of his stating that in your presence. Were you paid any money for serving on the sections of that bond committee thereafter?—A. Of Whitehall?

Q. No; by this general committee that you went on.—A. No.

Q. No fees at all in it?—A. My client accounts to me. Mr. Sugden is the one whom I act for—Mr. Sugden—and he pays me.

Q. But did he pay you anything for your service on this bond committee?—A. No.

Q. Did you testify in any of the congressional hearings that were had over the activities of this committee which you joined?—A. No.

Q. Did you know anything at all about them?—A. Well, yes.

Q. Were you subpensed as a witness?-A. No.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I do not like to object, but I presume to suggest that that is going pretty far afield, it seems to me.

Mr. WALSH of (counsel). To save time, I will withdraw the question, if in your mind it is not exactly right; but I will ask if this is not a fact:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. From that time forward—from the morning Mr. Lautman appeared in that court and down to the writing of the final decree in this case—did he not act for the bondholders' | committee formed in Chicago on the 24th day of October for all the bondholders, and did not those include Mr. Sugden's bonds that you were speaking about when you were in Miami? Is that correct?-A. I cannot answer it. I do not know.

Q. You do not say that that is not a fact?—A. I cannot answer it one way or the other, because I do not know.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk, which I should like to have answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. POPE, as follows:

Why did you send a telegram to Rankin telling him not to file the suit after you had originally authorized him to file the suit?

A. Because before that telegram was sent Mr. Johnson had returned from Chicago, and while in Chicago he informed me that he had been to the American Bond & Mortgage Co., that he had made inquiries there, and it was his information that there were other properties that were having their trouble; some of them we were interested in, and that was the reason why I attempted to stop the suit being entered in Florida against the Whitehall.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I believe you stated, if I am not mistaken-but perhaps I did not ask you the question, and I had better ask it now. When you got there did you find out that all these properties had been taken over, all the Moore properties, their interest in all the Moore properties had been taken over by a subsidiary of the American Bond & Mortgage Co.-I cannot call the name-it is the Chicago Title & Trust Co., I believe, or the Chicago Safe Deposit & Trust Co.?-A. No; I did not.

Q. Did you know that subsequent to that the Moores went into bankruptcy?—A. I so understand.

Q. In what month?-A. I cannot tell you.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we suggest that that is not pertinent to this inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems to the Chair that it is going rather far.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not think it is. May I make a statement to the Court?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The suggestion was made here, and I think the proof will follow it, if it has not already gone in, that it would have been of no avail to pursue the Moores for an accounting, or to attempt to get a judgment against them for what they did regarding the Whitehall property, and therefore I want to ask the witness when they went into bankruptcy.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we respectfully suggest to the Chair that the charge with reference to which this witness is being examined is the refusal of the respondent to permit him to withdraw his case, or to pay any attention to him when he appeared in his court in Miami after he discharged the lawyer who brought the suit. We do not see that it is pertinent whether this witness used good judgment or not. The question is as to the action of the court, as we see it, and not the question of whether or not this witness or somebody else acted wisely in not having Mr. Rankin proceed with the suit.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I admit that this was not asked on direct examination, but I am assuming that the technical rule is not being invoked, and that if a witness who goes on the stand knows anything about the case, we have a right to bring it out, although it was not brought out on direct examination.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We do not raise the point that this is a question not brought out on direct examination.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good. Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We do not raise that point at all. The question we raise is that the development of the facts apparently sought to be developed by this witness would not be pertinent on the trial of the case before the Senate, because, as we understand the charge, it is whether reason he was taking that step. Judge Ritter asked him how or not this witness should, appearing in a court of this country, have the privilege to control the action with reference to property which he represents. That, we think, is a pertinent question, and, as I said a moment ago, it is not pertinent to this inquiry, we believe, whether the Moores were scoundrels or whether they were bankrupts, or what happened to them. This is a free-born American citizen. and he had a right to use his own judgment in the court of the respondent, we think.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, this gentleman is giving his recollection of what took place there. We admit that it is a very important question as to just what was said there. We are not bound by his memory at this time, or during the other hearings, or at any other time; but we have a right to produce every fact and circumstance which might indicate that his memory was infirm, or that he was not telling the same story he told prior to that time.

Now, another reason: I asked the first witness who went on the stand why he exonerated these people—that is, before these letters were read explaining it—and his answer was that it was because they were bankrupt; that if he followed it up, it would be of no avail; that is, if they got an accounting there was nothing they could collect. Therefore if they went into bankruptcy on a certain date, it is pertinent to find out what date it was from this witness, although he was not asked that on direct examination. That is all I have to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the witness testified as to the exoneration of one of the parties to the suit who was charged with fraud, the Chair is under the impression that the cross-examination as to his knowledge of such party with relation to the bankruptcy is proper. The Chair rules at the present time that the attorney for the respondent may ask any question pertinent to the bankruptcy of the party referred to, if the matter was taken up on direct examination.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very well; if that is the ruling, I abide by it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk which I ask to have asked of the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. KING, as follows:

Were the bonds which you and Mr. Johnson held for the owners the same in the possession of the bondholders' committee when of the same in the possession of the bondholders' comm you wired Mr. Rankin with reference to beginning suit?

A. No.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have no further questions, Mr. President.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We have no further questions. We may want to call the witness back on one point.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We may, also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is excused. The managers on the part of the House may call their

The managers on the part of the House called Clarence P. Grill.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF CLARENCE P. GRILL

Clarence P. Grill, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Your name, please?-A. Clarence P. Grill.

Q. Mr. Grill, were you in the courtroom of Judge Halsted L. Ritter, of the southern district of Florida, on the day that Mr. Bert E. Holland appeared and made certain statements?-A. I was.

Q. Will you be good enough to state to the members of this honorable Court and the Presiding Officer what was said by Judge Ritter in response to those statements; what was said by Mr. Holland, and so forth, as nearly as you can recall?-A. Mr. Holland asked that the litigation be withdrawn because of the fact that he had been to Chicago and had met several of the people who were to compose a bondholders' committee; that he was satisfied they were men of standing in the world of business and finance, and for that much he had been paid, and then stated to him that he would not allow outsiders to come into the court or come into that district and induce attorneys to file litigation and then attempt to withdraw it.

Q. Was anything else said that you recall?—A. Not just offhand, now.

Q. Was any motion for receiver argued there?—A. There was a motion argued. I do not know what that motion was. I am not an attorney.

Q. Mr. Grill, did Mr. Herbert Lautmann, of Chicago, make a statement there, or attempt to do so?—A. Mr. Lautmann attempted to make a statement, too, but I do not believe he was permitted to by the judge.

Q. Do you remember what the judge said?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Is that, in substance, your-

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). One minute. I do not think this witness, in fairness, ought to be led when he says he does not know. The witness said he did not know, and then the question was asked if, in substance, he said something. I wish to object to that question as leading in form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The managers will try not to lead the witness.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg Your Honor's pardon; and I desire a ruling of the Chair as to whether or not it was leading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Official Reporter will read the question.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I have no desire to lead. Nothing is farther from my mind than that.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. Is that, in substance, your-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing to rule on so far. The question is unfinished. Counsel has not completed his question.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Is that, in substance, your recollection of what took place upon that occasion?—A. Yes, sir. There were other things that happened, of course, later.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You say you are not a lawyer, Mr. Grill?—A. No, sir. Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Connally, as follows:

What, if anything, did Mr. Rankin say in the presence of Mr. Holland and Judge Ritter?

A. Well, I do not know as I can answer that question. I was not particularly concerned in that. Mr. Rankin made his statement of the case, and that is all that I remember of it.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Were you connected with some law firm there?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What was your business there?—A. Do you mean in the courtroom?
- Q. I mean in Miami.—A. I was in the insurance and realestate business in West Palm Beach.
- Q. Were you mentioned for receiver yourself?—A. I beg your pardon?
- Q. Had you been mentioned for receiver yourself?—A. No,
- Q. Or trustee in bankruptcy?—A. I had been mentioned as trustee in bankruptcy months before.
- Q. You never testified in this case before; did you?—A. No, sir.
- Q. And this occurred some 7 years ago?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. When did they subpena you to come in?—A. Well, I understand they issued the subpena for me to appear in Miami, but I left for Pennsylvania shortly before the process server got to Palm Beach.

Q. You were reached by telegraph; were you?—A. No, sir; I was not. I was subpensed in West Palm Beach last week.

Q. Oh, you were subpensed last week. Had you talked to these gentlemen before you were subpensed while they were down there—any of the honorable managers?—A. Yes, sir; I talked to Mr. Hobbs.

Q. And when had you thought of this case before?—A. I did not get that question.

Q. When had you thought about this case before, or anything that transpired in it?—A. I thought of it for a long time.

Q. You kept it on your mind, did you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who suggested you for the trustee? Was it the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?—A. That I do not know. Mr. Fordham did.

Q. Was he the attorney for the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?—A. I do not know whether he was attorney for the American Bond & Mortgage Co. He was one of the attorneys

Q. The creditors had the selection of the trustee; did they not?—A. I believe so.

Q. And whom did the creditors select?—A. Walter S. Richardson.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further questions? If not, the witness will be excused.

The witness desires to know whether he will be required to testify again.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We will advise the witness, Mr. President, in a few minutes in the corridor.

Mr. President, perhaps it is not for me to suggest, but I believe there are just a few minutes left. We shall not have time to complete the examination of a witness in the time remaining today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Court, under the order hertofore entered, will stand in recess at 5:30 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the order heretofore entered provides for discontinuance of proceedings in the Court at 5:30 o'clock. It is now within 3 minutes of that time. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of legislative business, with a view to transacting some routine matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

During the impeachment proceedings, on motion of Mr. Robinson, the proceedings were suspended so that, as in legislative session, the Senate might receive a message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announcing that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

H. J. Res. 526. Joint resolution to authorize the Librarian of Congress to accept the property devised and bequeathed to the United States of America by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 2, 1936, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3998) to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to better serve the farmers in orderly marketing, and to provide credit and facilities for carrying surpluses from season to season.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4016) to repeal section 16 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1934, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1746) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1747) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4420) to extend certain provisions of the act approved June 18, 1934, commonly known as the Wheeler-Howard Act (Public Law No. 383, 73d Cong.; 48 Stat. 984), to the Territory of Alaska, to provide for the designation of Indian reservations in Alaska, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1748) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3797. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920 (Rept. No. 1749); and

S. 3805. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reserve certain lands on the public domain in Nevada for addition to the Walker River Indian Reservation (Rept. No. 1750).

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS TRUST FUND

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably, without amendment, a House bill and a House joint resolution. First I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11849) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925.

The House bill makes a technical amendment in the law creating the Library of Congress Trust Fund. House Joint Resolution 526 authorizes the Library of Congress to accept a gift to the Congressional Library Trust Fund. There can be no objection, I think, to the passage of either the bill or the joint resolution; and, if there is no objection, I should like to have action on them now.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the present consideration of the measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11849) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third paragraph of the act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The Board is hereby authorized to accept, receive, hold, and administer such gifts, bequests, or devises of property for the benefit of, or in connection with, the Library, its collections, or its service, as may be approved by the Board and by the Joint Committee on the Library."

BEQUEST OF JOSEPH PENNELL, DECEASED, TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 526) to authorize the Librarian of Congress to accept the property devised and bequeathed to the United States of America by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress, with the advice and consent of the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board and the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, is hereby authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, the property devised and bequeathed to the United States by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased (which will was admitted to probate by the register for the probate of wills and granting of letters of administration in and for the city and county of Philadelphia, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, on the 24th day of June 1926), upon the terms and conditions set forth in the said will, if, in their judgment, such acceptance would be to the best interests of the Library.

of June 1926), upon the terms and conditions set forth in the said will, if, in their judgment, such acceptance would be to the best interests of the Library.

SEC. 2. Should the property be accepted pursuant to the authority hereinbefore granted, the Librarian of Congress is hereby authorized and directed to do all acts necessary in connection therewith: Provided, however, That the Librarian of Congress shall transfer the assets of the "Pennell fund" (as designated in the said will), to the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board for administration by the said Board.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 4441) for the relief of the Federal Enameling & Stamping Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 4442) authorizing the appointment of George Breeman as a chief gunner in the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4443) to regulate the practice of professional engineering, creating a Registration Board for Professional Engineers of the District of Columbia, defining its powers and duties, providing penalties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 4444) directing the Court of Claims to reopen certain cases and to correct the errors therein, if any, by additional judgments against the United States; and

A bill (S. 4445) directing the Court of Claims to reopen the case of William G. Maupin, Jr., and others, against the United States, docket no. 34681, and to correct the errors therein, if any, by an additional judgment against the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

A bill (S. 4446) for the relief of Llewellyn B. Griffith; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (by request):

A bill (S. 4447) for the relief of J. L. Summers; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BENSON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 249) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States designating farmers' and workers' rights; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OVERTON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 250) extending thanks in appreciation of services rendered by Hayden W. Wren as superintendent of the docks of the port of New Orleans; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. CAPPER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO STATE, JUSTICE, ETC., DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION RILI.

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $54,650, to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1937, for investigation of location, area, classification, appraisal, land ownership, and feasibility of establishment of a Federal zone along the international boundary, United States and Mexico, and for the construction of fences as authorized by law, etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 12098, the State, Justice, etc., Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] be excused from further service as members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, and that the Presiding Officer fill the vacancies and appoint two additional conferees

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Boran] are excused from further service as members of the conference committee, and the Chair appoints as conferees, completing the list of conferees on the part of the Senate, the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin].

EXTENSION OF COASTWISE LAWS TO VIRGIN ISLANDS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 754) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920. entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes", as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States, which was, on page 2, line 4, to strike out all after the word "States" down to and including the word "same", in line 7, and insert "shall, by proclamation, declare that such coastwise laws shall extend to the Virgin Islands and fix a date for the going into effect of same."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I inquire what is the measure which has been laid down by the Chair?

LXXX-321

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has laid before the Senate an amendment of the House of Representatives to a Senate bill

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Missouri that this is a bill which provides that the coastwise laws of the United States shall not extend to the Virgin Islands until, by proclamation, the President shall declare that adequate shipping service has been established to the islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REHABILITATION LOANS TO STORM-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether there will be any possibility of now considering an urgent bill which I understand the Committee on Banking and Currency has reported today? It is a bill which will help relieve the situation which has resulted from the catastrophes of tornado and flood by enabling the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans, in order that the damages which have been inflicted may be repaired.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the bill already been reported?

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand it was reported today by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher].

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I will ask the Senate to-morrow to proceed to the consideration of legislative business, with the thought that that bill may then be taken up.

Mr. RUSSELL. I sincerely hope the Senator from Arkansas will do so. In communities in the South, where millions of dollars' worth of property has been destroyed and many lives have been lost, it is important that the measure should be promptly acted upon.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself have no objection to its consideration now if it is ready for consideration.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that I do not desire to object, but the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] is not present.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senate take the measure up tomorrow after the impeachment proceedings shall have been concluded for the day.

Mr. RUSSELL. That will be agreeable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator consider also the possibility of taking up tomorrow afternoon the report from the Committee on Agriculture respecting the Triple A resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot say just when I will be able to arrange for consideration of legislative matters. I hope it may be practicable within a very short time to arrange for a legislative session.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. Mr. COUZENS. May I suggest to the leader on the other side that the bill in which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is interested will not take very long, and I think if the Senate could meet at 11:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, we could dispose of that measure as well as the matter which the Senator from Michigan has in mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. After discussing the subject with a number of Senators, I think that it would be better to meet tomorrow afternoon in legislative session, because, in all probability, in the morning Senators will be in committee meetings. I made a survey of the subject this morning, and in one committee that I was attending no one else except the chairman and myself could appear, because every other member of the committee was sitting in other important meetings. Should we meet tomorrow morning, what I think would happen would be that we would have difficulty in getting a quorum. However, we will try to have a legislative session tomorrow afternoon.

UNIFORM BILLS OF LADING

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1152) relating to the carriage of goods by sea, which was on page 14, line 25, to strike out "included" and insert "includes."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK. I should like to know the character of that

Mr. WHITE. I was about to move that the Senate concur in the House amendment. There is but one amendment, which merely proposes to correct a clerical error in the Senate bill. The Senate bill carried the word "included"; the House has changed that to the word "includes", making it the present tense instead of the past tense. That is the only change in the Senate bill.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator be good enough to explain what the bill proposes to do?

Mr. WHITE. It is the uniform bill of lading bill which passed the Senate and has now passed the House with only this one single change.

Mr. COPELAND. We had hearings in the committee on the bill.

Mr. CLARK. Very well.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess. The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, to meet, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, tomorrow, Wednesday, April 8, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O divine Heart, be not silent; let Thy cry be heard in the wilderness. We walk with tears in the path of our Nation's sorrow. We appeal for something, our Father, that shall help us through the dark. Our land travails and groans with pain because of the overmeasured affliction which has come to our Southland. O God of mercy, trembling, bleeding, dying, help them to breast the gloom. Staggered, perplexed, and burdened, oh give them comfort. To all who are overwrought, driven to unspeakable conditions, and are in the way of pensive grief, Heavenly Father, stoop to their need and share their load. Wherever there falls a shadow on the human heart may rest be found through Him who hath loved us. May our whole country respond to the call of all humane agencies whose hearts and arms are open and common to all men. In the Savior's name.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11418) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Russell, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Smith, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. McNary to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEATH OF HIS MAJESTY KING GEORGE V OF ENGLAND

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following com-

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 7, 1936.

The Honorable Joseph W. Byrns,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The engrossed resolution of sorrow of the House of Representatives upon the death of His Majesty King George V, which the President sent to me for transmission to the Government of Great Britain, was on February 13 sent to the American Charge d'Affaires at London for delivery to its high destination, and I now take pleasure in enclosing copy of a desdestination, and I now take pleasure in enclosing copy of a despatch which has been received from Mr. Atherton transmitting copy of a note received by him from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs requesting that the House of Representatives be informed of the deep appreciation of Mr. Eden and his colleagues of this token of sympathy in the profound sorrow which the death of His Majesty has brought to the British people.

His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador at Washington states in a note recently received from His Excellency that he has been commanded by His Majesty to express his deep appreciation of the very kind sympathy manifested by the President and the House of Representatives in the irreparable loss which His Majesty, the royal family, and the British people have sustained.

Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6982) to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out (b) and insert (d).

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

TRIBUTE TO J. STERLING MORTON

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to tell my colleagues that at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow. Wednesday morning, we will plant a tree in a very prominent location in front of this historic Nation's Capitol in memory of the late J. Sterling Morton.

I wish at this time to invite every Member of the House to be present at that occasion in order that the tree-planting ceremony will be one fitting to the memory of a great man.

J. Sterling Morton was the founder of Arbor Day-a day which I feel should be declared a national holiday. He was a member of the Cabinet under President Cleveland. He was Secretary of Agriculture. He was a great farmer. He was a tiller of the soil. He was a planter of fine trees.

As early as the 4th of January 1872 he introduced a resolution in Nebraska that the 10th day of April be named as Arbor Day, and be consecrated and set aside for the planting of trees. That day is sacred in my State of Nebraska and every man, woman, and school child anticipates that

The idea has grown to Nation-wide importance and today many States celebrate Arbor Day. As a result great trees, orchards, parks, and forests can be traced as footprints left behind by this great planter.

So, on tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we who represent the people of our beloved State in the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives will gather together in front of this great Capitol Building and will plant a tree to the memory of our late and beloved J. Sterling Morton.

Because Arbor Day is as much a national idea now as it once was a Nebraska plan, I hope that as many as possible of the Congressmen from other States will participate in this ceremony.

It was first planned to plant a white oak tree in memory of J. Sterling Morton, but because of his love of the white munication from the Department of State, which was read: | pine, as suggested by his grandson, Sterling Morton, of Chicago, we have secured a magnificent white pine tree. This tree came to Washington especially for this purpose from the beautiful arboretum at Lisle, Ill., built by the son of the late J. Sterling Morton.

So the bringing of this tree from the Morton arboretum in Illinois to Washington, D. C., links this ceremony closer to the history of the late J. Sterling Morton and his family.

Mr. Speaker, in order to complete this record and to make it possible for all Members to know something more about the late J. Sterling Morton, the father of Arbor Day, I have included in this address a brief sketch of his life—a history of his great service to our beloved country and a history of his service to all mankind.

Nebraska was distinguished in its early life, by which is meant the first settlement, by the high character of the young men who came to the new land in search of home and fortune and to assist in laying the foundations of social order and civilized government. The Indian still occupied the soil; he had parted with his title under treaty with the United States, but he was still here in the wild plentitude of his aboriginal character and habits. These young men in striking majority brought with them intellectual cultivation and social refinement. In the midst of the chaos which existed here in 1854 they did not forget to cherish the moral and religious elements as the main foundations for the superstructure which they were about to erect. There were representatives of families who fostered the best in their sons. Typical among these young men, J. Sterling Morton, the peer of all in manly strength and ambitions, and the one who, perhaps, was foremost in the rolling years in impressing his personality and influence upon the new community, was on the threshold of manhood life. He was a strong and original character. It may be said that he differed in a wide degree from others who were on the firing lines of leadership in the conquests that were to be made here, in many of his characteristics. His reputation for mental power, incorruptible integrity of conviction, clear-cut mentality, and moral courage in the maintenance of his views long since passed beyond the boundaries of the State, and even before he entered the Cabinet of President Cleveland his name was known the wide world over by his most important achievement, the invention and establishment of Arbor Day, which has won for him enduring fame.

J. Sterling Morton was a native of New York, having been born in Adams, Jefferson County, in that State, April 22, 1832. He was of distinctly New England stock, emanating from Yorkshire, England, on his paternal side and from Scotch-Irish blood on his mother's side. J. Sterling Morton was the first-born to Julius D. and Emeline Sterling Morton. After acquiring his primary education in the schools of Monroe, Mich., he entered the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, graduating finally at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., under its celebrated president, Dr. Eliphalet Nott. He was married to Miss Caroline Joy in the city of Detroit, October 30, 1854, and started with his bride on the same morning on which the ceremony took place for his future home in Nebraska.

Mr. Morton's first public service in the Territory was as a member of the lower house of the second legislative assembly. He represented Otoe County, having been elected in the fall of 1855. Mr. Morton's second election to the legislature was in 1857. This was distinguished in history as the "capital-moving legislature", which undertook to remove the seat of government from Omaha to Florence by the power of resolutions of the two legislative bodies.

Mr. Morton's field of usefulness was now to broaden, and he was first nominated for a Delegate to Congress at a Democratic convention that met at Omaha in September 1860. His opponent was Samuel G. Daily, of Peru. The official returns gave Mr. Morton 14 majority. Mr. Daily contested and won the seat by virtue of a Republican majority which controlled the lower House of Congress at the time.

On the admission of Nebraska as a State in 1867 he was nominated for Governor by the Democratic State convention. Morton was fairly elected by a majority of 148 votes, but a His name is known in connection with Arbor Day the board of canvassers at Plattsmouth threw out the Rock Bluff vote in Cass County because the judges of election had not signed the tally list, and so David Butler was elected Governor by a hundred-and-some-odd votes. It was at this time that Mr. Morton yielded to the persuasions of Mrs. Morton to abjure politics and devote himself to business pursuits, which he did for the ensuing 14 years with success, when in 1882 he was again nominated for the governorship in the State convention of that year. However, Mr. Dawes, the Republican candidate, was elected by a large plurality. He was again nominated for Governor and made the race against Mr. Dawes in 1884. From this time on he was not a candidate for office; but in 1888 a convention held at Nebraska City nominated him for Congress. It was a convention that he did not attend and in which he had very little interest, because he knew a nomination was only an opportunity to expend money in organizing a party and in laying a foundation for the success of someone else.

Mr. Morton was nominated by his party for Governor again in 1892. It was a stirring campaign. The Republican nominee, Lorenzo Crounse, was elected.

President Grover Cleveland, elected for a second term to the Presidency, tendered Mr. Morton the position of Secretary of Agriculture. In this great office he distinguished himself for administrative ability of the first order. He immediately antagonized the political practices of Congress in the distribution of seeds to the people, which he regarded as useless and pernicious. He came in direct collision with the House of Representatives on that issue, and maintained his ground with his usual ability and firmness.

At the end of the Cleveland administration Mr. Morton retired to his home and resumed his life work in the upbuilding of the State, and especially of Nebraska City, the home which he selected over 40 years before. Mr. Morton's great memorial in Nebraska City, and that which will be most enduring as an evidence of public spirit and grasp of the needs of future generations, is found in the beautiful park which bears his name, and which he donated to the city many years ago.

Mr. Morton's life in Nebraska was dominated for nearly half a century by his example as well as by his precepts in the upbuilding of a strong and useful citizenship in our State and section. He was for all these years essentially a farmer. The practical gospels as to how to raise fine men and women, fine trees, fine apples, fine cattle, fine horses, and fine swine were preached by him in season and out of season through all of our remarkable growth and advance.

As early as the 4th of January 1872, at a meeting in Lincoln of the State board of agriculture, he introduced the following:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 10th day of April 1872, be, and the same is hereby, especially set apart and consecrated for tree planting in the State of Nebraska, and the State board of agriculplanting in the State of Nebraska, and the State board of agriculture hereby name it Arbor Day; and, to urge upon the people of the State the vital importance of tree planting, hereby offer a special premium of $100 to the county agricultural society of that county in Nebraska which shall, upon that day, plant properly the largest number of trees; and a farm library of $25 worth of books to that person who, on that day, shall plant properly in Nebraska the greater number of trees. the greatest number of trees.

The resolution was passed after some discussion of an amendment introduced by the late Chief Justice Oliver P. Mason, supported by J. H. Masters, which proposed to strike out the word "Arbor" and insert "Sylvan", but Mr. Morton insisted that the word "Sylvan" would apply only to forest trees, while the word "Arbor" would include all trees, hedge, and shrubbery. At the close of the debate it was unanimously determined to call the new-born anniversary "Arbor Dav.

On the day named by the resolution over 1,000,000 trees were planted in Nebraska, and perhaps an equal number in 1873. Governor Furnas issued the first proclamation March 1, 1874, calling for the observance of Arbor Day, and in 1884 the legislature made the 22d of April, Mr. Morton's birthday, a legal holiday to be known as Arbor Day.

This is the crowning achievement, as I believe, in his own estimation, of Mr. Morton's important and influential life.

civilized world over. Arbor Day and Arbor Day festivals are in vogue in most of the States and cities of the Union, and countless millions of trees are growing under the influence of his organization of Arbor Day, in our own and other countries, where no trees were ever known to grow before. It has led up to the study of planting of trees as a practical economic necessity, and for the higher work of educating the people in the love of the beautiful in nature on a scale and to an extent that could never have been achieved without it.

The true trend of Mr. Morton's mind was distinctly altruistic. He had an innate love of the good and the beautiful and a corresponding contempt for the false and frivolous. Eminently practical and utilitarian in spirit, he blended in happy harmony a cultivated taste with a devotion of principles of economy and thrift in the homes of the people in which he found the real sources of their happiness and the true strength of the Nation. Upon noisy political agitators of popular discontent he waged aggressive and unrelenting war without regard to parties or persons. He combated error with a vigor which derived its main force from logical and lucid statements, and with an aptitude for illustration which enabled him to pulverize mountains of rhetoric and to demolish the platitudes of vociferous agitators with something that strongly resembled a combination of the Damascus blade with the ponderous power of the trip hammer.

The State historical society, of which Mr. Morton was the president at the time of his death, had much of his attention for many years, and its records contain some of the most interesting and important of the productions with which his pen has enriched the historical literature of the State.

In early December 1901 Mr. Morton delivered an address in Chicago before a convention of stock raisers. He contracted a severe cold while there and returned to Nebraska quite ill. A troublesome cough followed during that winter. It was so persistent and was attended by such marked emaciation as to cause anxiety for fear of disease of the lung. A change of scene and climate was advised by his physician, and a visit to the city of Mexico was decided on. The first week of February 1902, accompanied by his son, Hon. Paul Morton, and his family, and provided with every comfort for travel, he made the long journey. The reception and welcome by President Diaz and the members of the Mexican Government of so distinguished a citizen of our country was marked by the cordial courtesy for which Mexican hospitality is distinguished, and Mr. Morton fully enjoyed and appreciated it. Returning to his home after an absence of a month, friends were alarmed at his great loss of strength and flesh. An insidious disease had stricken the strong man of a few months before. After his return he was too weak to make any effort and suffered constant loss of strength and inability to either relish or assimilate food. He was removed to the home of his son, Mr. Mark Morton, Lake Forest, Ill., accompanied by his sister, Miss Emma Morton, that he might have the benefit of Chicago's best medical skill. Strong confidence was expressed by his physicians that he would regain his strength and health, but he continued to fail steadily, and Nebraska's first citizen passed from the scenes of earth on the 27th of April. A funeral service was held at the home of Mr. Mark Morton the following morning, after which the remains were conveyed to Nebraska City, where they arrived on the morning of April 30. The funeral services were held in the afternoon of the same day. Every evidence was given of the public sorrow by the people over the death of their honored fellow citizen. and Nebraska City and Otoe County, where he was so greatly esteemed, respected, and beloved, was as a house of mourning for the loved and lost.

On the 3d of May 1902, soon after the death of Mr. Morton, the Arbor Day Memorial Association was organized at Nebraska City for the purpose of erecting a monument in honor of the father of Arbor Day. The purpose of the association was to procure a statue of Mr. Morton to be paid for solely by contributions of his friends and admirers outside of his immediate family. The first contribution, $200. was received May 17, 1902, from the Omaha jobbers, and there were more than 3,000 distinct subscriptions and from all parts of the United States. The most notable offering was made on Arbor Day, 1904, by the school children of the State of Nebraska, and amounted to $1,150.89. Subscriptions covering the cost of the monument-$15,120-were received before it was unveiled. While Mr. Morton's sons were not permitted to contribute to the cost of the memorial. they assisted indirectly, and especially in beautifying the surroundings in Morton Park where the statue stands. This park adjoins the grounds of Arbor Lodge on the east, and was donated to Nebraska City by Mr. Morton. The monument is simple, dignified, and impressive in design, thus typifying the life and character of its subject. The central figure is a life-size bronze statute of Mr. Morton, which stands upon a solid block of Rhode Island granite. The pose and expression of the figure well represent the virility, courage, and aggressive positiveness of its prototype. The right arm hangs naturally by his side holding the hat, while the left hand rests on a short staff. At the foot of the pedestal stands a bronze figure of a woman, her left hand holding a young tree, while her glance is directed to the spot where it is about to be planted, symbolizing the spirit of Mr. Morton's admonitory apothegm, "Plant trees." A semicircular stone bench stands at some distance back of the pedestal, and forming a frieze around it are the words, "Love of home is primary patriotism" and "Other holidays repose upon the past. Arbor Day proposes for the future." The back of the bench is further ornamented with two large basreliefs in bronze, the one on the left representing the negotiation of a treaty with the Pawnee Indians near the present Arbor Lodge, in which Mr. Morton participated; the one on the right portraying a landscape partly covered with trees, and in the foreground the figure of a woman in the act of planting a tree, the whole typical of the spirit of Arbor Day. At each side of the stone terrace stand stone benches inscribed upon the ends with the legend "plant trees." lower part of this bench bears the inscription, "Erected by the Arbor Day Memorial Association in memory of Julius Sterling Morton, MCMV."

Upon the pedestal is the following inscription: "J. Sterling Morton, 1832–1902, father of Arbor Day. Plant trees." The reverse bears a concise sketch of Mr. Morton's life and public services.

The spaciousness and solidity of the base and foundation of the monument are intended to harmonize with the vastness and substantiality of the western country. The platform around the monument is 50 by 75 feet, and except for the brick used in the platform the entire monument is of granite and bronze. It was unveiled with appropriate exercises October 28, 1905, the principal address being made by ex-President Grover Cleveland.

ERECTION OF A MONUMENT TO GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting and proper at this time that a monument be erected and dedicated to the memory of one of our great American citizens and statesmen, Gouverneur Morris.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS, THE "PENMAN"

It was Gouverneur Morris who drew the final draft in the revision of the fundamental law of the land—the Constitution of the United States of America.

In all the pages of history of struggles for recognition of human rights there is nothing so compelling with admiration as this masterpiece of human ingenuity.

Acting in their sovereign capacity, the people of the newborn Nation made this instrument the backbone and framework of our National Government. It is a chapter in the world's history which instantly commands the respect of all and compels doubting autocracies and dictatorships throughout the world to concede the unqualified success of the American Democracy despite such severe tests as the Nation-wide economic collapse.

CONSTITUTION-ATLAS OF STRENGTH

The great human instrument, predicated as it was upon the fundamental principles of liberty, truth, justice, and equality, was conceived in the minds of all the pioneer leaders in the early days of our American civilization. The wisdom and keen foresight of those distinguished statesmen were incorporated into the organic law of the country. It is recognized as the most marvelous written instrument that ever emanated from the minds of men.

Every fundamental principle dear to the hearts of the freedom-loving people of America is guaranteed under our Constitution.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS-STATESMAN, PATRIOT

Those pioneer statesmen of our early history, among whom none were more outstanding than Gouverneur Morris, were practical men of common sense and experience. They understood the requirements and living conditions existing in those trying and strenuous times. It was those great Americans who led the Colonies successfully through the crisis of the revolutionary days and sacrificed their private fortunes in doing so in some instances.

The peace and happiness of all the people was uppermost in their minds, no matter what the personal sacrifice to attain it.

So they framed the Constitution and made it an instrument which would forever be a guaranty and protection of freedom, justice, truth, and equality, those four fundamental principles of democracy which form the foundation upon which the United States of America have been built.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS, MEMBER OF PROVINCIAL AND CONTINENTAL CONGRESSES

Now is the time for grateful American citizens of the present day to emulate and duplicate the kind of courage and loyalty displayed by the designers of our Constitution, who passed through a worse period in our history than the present.

Gouverneur Morris was a Member of the early Provincial and Continental Congresses. He was close to the people and their problems in those anxious days.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS, UNITED STATES SENATOR

Now is the time, Mr. Speaker, when the country is passing through another great crisis for those defenders of our organic law, the Constitution, to indicate their gratitude by their whole-hearted, undivided support of the Curley bill, H. R. 11854, a bill which provides for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gouverneur Morris in the historical burial ground where his sacred remains are buried at One Hundred and Forty-First Street and St. Anns Avenue, in the Borough of the Bronx, the city of New York. This historical spot should be so marked as there also sleep scores of the famous patrotic Morris family, among whom are:

Gen. Lewis Morris, Member of the Continental Congress, who was the only signer of the Declaration of Independence from New York City and who served in the American Revolution, with three sons, as commander of the Westchester Militia, Continental Army.

Judge Lewis Morris, the first native-born chief justice of New York and first Governor of New Jersey.

Capt. Richard Morris, an officer in Cromwell's army and first proprietor of Morrisania.

Commodore Richard Morris, veteran of the War of 1812 and commander of the Mediterranean Squadron, United States Navy.

Judge Robert Hunter Morris, who was a member of both branches of the New York Legislature, postmaster of New York City, justice of the supreme court, mayor of New York City for three terms, and delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1846.

Hon. Lewis Morris, member of the Colonial Assembly, judge of the high court of the admiralty, and one of the judges of Oyer and Terminer.

Capt. William Walton Morris, veteran of the War with Mexico, who was promoted for gallant and meritorious service at Palo Alto and at Resaca de la Palma.

Col. Lewis G. Morris, member of the war committee, Westchester County.

Gouverneur Morris, Esq., a pioneer in railroad building and first supervisor of the town of Morrisania.

Judge Richard Morris, chief justice of the Supreme Court, State of New York, member of both houses of the legislature, and champion of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States of America.

Col. Lewis Morris, an officer in Cromwell's army and member of Governor Dongan's council.

Commander Francis Morris, veteran of the Civil War.

Maj. Gen. William Walton Morris, veteran of Florida, Mexico, and Civil Wars, promoted for gallant and meritorious service at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and in the Civil War.

Lt. Col. Lewis Morris, aide-de-camp to Gen. Nathaniel Buried there also is Mary Walton Morris, wife of Lewis Morris, known as the "mother of patriots" because she had three sons in the war which gave birth to the Nation, as is also Gouverneur's wife, Anne Carey Randolph, of Virginia, who was seventh in line from Pocahontas, Indian princess.

This memorial monument will hand down to future generations a tangible proof that we of this material age are not lacking in knowledge or in appreciation of the services of those who contributed in the upbuilding of our Nation.

With the tomb of Gouverneur Morris in this hallowed spot and this monument in memoriam to his achievements erected by a grateful country, giving evidence of their appreciation, let this sacred spot become a shrine to attract the youth of all succeeding generations as a fountain of inspiration, a source of encouragement, and a stimulus to good citizenship and patriotism.

"GOUVERNEUR MORRIS", BY THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Morris played a very prominent part in the convention. He was a ready speaker, and among all the able men present there was probably no such really brilliant thinker. In the debates he spoke more often than anyone else (p. 139).

He was one of the warmest advocates of the Constitution; and it was he who finally drew up the document and put the finish to its style and arrangement; so that as it now stands, it comes to us from his property of 1560.

from his pen (p. 166).

He was essentially a strong man, and he was American through

Perhaps his greatest interest for us lies in the fact that he was a shrewder, more far-seeing observer and recorder of contemporary men and events, both at home and abroad, than any other American or foreign statesman of his time. But aside from this he did much lasting work. He took a most prominent part in bringing about the independence of the Colonies, and afterward in welding them into a single powerful Nation, whose greatness he both foresaw and foretold. He made the final draft of the United States Constitution; he first outlined our present system of national coinage; he originated and got under way the plan for the Eric Canal; as Minister to France he successfully performed the most difficult task ever allotted to an American representative at a foreign capital. With all his faults, there are few men of his generation to whom the country owes more than to Gouverneur Morris (p. 364). (p. 364)

This bill (H. R. 11854) has the approval of numerous historical and patriotic societies.

With the approach of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of our Constitution, no time is more appropriate than the present to honor the memory of the great patriot—Governeur Morris.

THE OHIO SALES TAX ON FOOD, CLOTHING, AND MEDICINE SHOULD BE REPEALED

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, as Congressman at Large from Ohio, I represent a constituency of nearly 7,000,000 of the finest people living anywhere on earth.

We have gone a long way and under a great leadership since that black Saturday in 1933 when Herbert Hoover turned the wreck over to President Roosevelt.

As Congressman representing my State and all of its people, I have supported the recovery program of President Roosevelt. I have upheld his great leadership. As a consequence, and because of the President's recovery program, this Nation is emerging from a terrible depression. We face a new era. In my State there has been a failure on the part of the State administration to cooperate with the national administration. We need leadership in Ohio as in the Nation. I propose a recovery program for the State of Ohio.

Unfortunately, in Ohio we have a 3-percent sales tax. Furthermore, what is worse, we have a Governor who suggested its continuance and approved its continuance and who, in fact, defends this atrocious and obnoxious tax. Since the present Governor of Ohio has suggested the reenactment of this State sales tax, it is in an even more vicious form than the original. Even from students' dormitories, charity hospital meals, Sunday-school bazaars, church suppers, sales-tax payments are garnered.

The people of my State are entitled to have this sales tax, particularly as it applies to food, clothing, and medicine, repealed without delay. I advocate immediate repeal of this indefensible tax. The Ohio sales tax bears down hardest on the poor. It violates every principle of just taxation. Taxes should be levied according to ability to pay. This is a cowardly tax. I repudiate it from my very soul. It takes food from the tables of the poor. It deprives the sick of medicine. It reduces the purchasing power of the underpaid school teacher. It even levies toll upon the aged from the inadequate amounts they receive in old-age security payments. I am unalterably opposed to the Ohio sales tax. It destroys the consuming power of our people. It is indefensible. It is a tax of last resort. In fact, a tax such as the Ohio sales tax was the direct cause of the French Revolution. Certainly, with the elimination of extravagance and waste in the operation of the State government, there will be and can be no need nor justification whatever for a sales tax of 3 percent against food, clothing, and medicine. Ohio existed for many, many years and prospered without the sales tax. With honesty, intelligence, and vision we go forward to better days. The present Governor has not only failed to take steps toward repeal of this outrageous sales tax, he suggested its continuance. He approved it. I urge its repeal. I ask him this question: Why soak the poor?

The Ohio sales tax is exactly the reverse of the Federal income tax in the manner it burdens our people. The homes of wage earners, of the poor, and of the unemployed are the last places where the tax gatherers should go.

The Ohio sales tax was never designed as anything more than a stopgap to meet an emergency. It was accepted only on that basis, with the promise it would be repealed the moment a permanent, balanced tax program could be perfected. The present Governor evaded this major responsibility of his administration. Then, when this iniquitous sales tax against food, clothing, and medicine was about to expire, he suggested that it be continued. We must not accept this as a permanent tax burden.

What the repeal of the sales tax on food would mean annually to the average Ohio family in the different income groups has been carefully estimated by the Brookings Institution. For a family with an average family income up to $1,000, $305 is the average annual expense for food. The Ohio sales tax imposes a cost of $9.15, taking that amount of food from the table. The percent of income the food tax affects families in this income-tax bracket is 30.5 percent. For families of an average annual income of $1,000 to $1,500, $435 is the average spent per year on food. This represents a cost to the average family of $13.05. The percent of income the food tax affects is 29. On the other hand, in families with an annual family income of $5,000, the percent of income food tax affects is 14. In families whose average income is from $10,000 to $15,000, the percent of income food tax affects is only 7.

A sales tax imposes a burden opposite that of the Federal income tax. Those in the lower income brackets must bear the heaviest tax burden.

The sales tax on food destroys the consuming power of our people. It afflicts the poor and burdens the unemployed. It takes food from babies as well as grown-ups. It even takes a part of the inadequate old-age pensions received by 85,000 worthy old people. It brings into the State treasury about $17,000,000 each year mostly squeezed from the poor. A State income tax would bring in about $20,000,000.

I do not suppose the idea of repealing the sales tax upon food, low-priced clothing, and medicines ever occurred to the present Governor after he was elected.

The facts are that as a candidate for governor on July 3, 1934, he wrote:

I am in favor of the income tax for the State of Ohio.

Federal salaries are not exempt from the Federal income tax. Congressmen and Senators pay income taxes on their salaries as do other people on their salaries and incomes. If a Congressman has one person dependent on him, he pays between $400 and $500 per year in Federal income tax. This is proper. In Ohio the Governor, his cabinet officers, and other high-salaried State officials are exempt from the Federal income tax. There is no State income tax upon such salaries. I favor such a tax properly graduated instead of taxes upon necessaries which soak the poor and retard recovery.

It is my deliberate judgment that with rigid and courageous economy in Ohio we can proceed with immediate repeal of the State sales tax upon food, clothing, and medicine, and without substituting another tax. In event it is found that additional revenue will be needed for adequate old-age pensions, which I favor, and to operate our public schools so they are equal to the best, then the necessary substitute tax should be levied according to ability to pay.

Certainly a graduated-income tax with a higher rate against the larger income would be less burdensome than the present State sales tax against food, clothing, and medicine.

In Ohio a poor woman who purchases a 10-cent soup bone must pay 1 cent as a tax. This is a 10-percent tax. Yet there are $47,000,000,000 in bonds held by wealthy people of the country that are absolutely tax exempt.

Next in importance to repeal of the sales tax is cooperation on the part of the State administration with the Federal administration. This is important to every citizen I represent.

The present Governor of Ohio has failed to cooperate with the Federal administration in many important particulars. As you know, the Federal Government has gone from direct relief to work relief, and it appears that by reason of the present situation existing between the State administration and the Federal administration, the State of Ohio is not receiving work relief on many worth-while projects. The Governor's veto of some items in the appropriation bill will lose considerable Federal money in grants for construction work in our welfare and other institutions. As a specific example, the Governor vetoed $5,000 in personal service in the erosion board, which makes it impossible for the engineer in charge to continue his work and obtain Federal grants for construction work. The Federal Government has already approved grants for this particular work of $63,000, and all that it would cost the State of Ohio would be a little engineering and supervision. In other words, we in Ohio would be getting about $15 of Federal money for every dollar we expend.

Inasmuch as the State of Ohio must now furnish money for direct relief, anyone can easily figure out how the State treasury will suffer when we fail to get Federal money for work relief. It is stated to me that there are other instances where the State of Ohio is now losing Federal money because of the attitude of its present Governor.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

RALPH B. SESSOMS

The Clerk called the first bill, H. R. 8775, for the relief of Ralph B. Sessoms.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. DRISCOLL objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

GEORGE D. JOHNSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5336, for the relief of George D. Johnson.

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. DRISCOLL, and Mr. HOPE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs

CHIEF CARPENTER WILLIAM F. TWITCHELL, UNITED STATES NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2682, for the relief of Chief Carpenter William F. Twitchell, United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Chief Carpenter William F. Twitchell, United States Navy, a naval constructor with the rank of lieutenant on the retired list of the Navy, with pay at the rate of 2½ percent of the active-duty pay of a lieutenant of his length of service multiplied by the number of years of service for which he is entitled to credit in computation of his longevity pay on the active list, not to exceed 75 percent of said active-duty pay.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that under the rule amendments of this kind cannot be offered.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not think there is any rule to that effect.

The SPEAKER. This is the first time the question has risen under this rule. The Chair, after examination of the rule, thinks that the restriction with reference to the offering of amendments applies only to omnibus bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would a motion to move the previous question on the bill preclude the offer of such amendment?

The SPEAKER. The ordering of the previous question would preclude the offering of amendments and serve to close debate.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I may say it was the intention that such debate be not entered into. My remarks are not directed against the gentleman from Washington, but such debate would afford a means of filibustering and extending the debate indefinitely and those interested in the bills would have to move the previous question, which would shut off amendments, pro forma or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I rose and addressed the House for 5 minutes and directed the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] to some remarks of mine, of the Friday previous, accusing him, without having formal proof, of having altered and revised my remarks without my permission or without the permission of the House or without anybody's permission but his own.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the gentleman will confine himself to the bill under consideration.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What is the last word, then, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the bill before him. Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have not the bill.

The SPEAKER. The intent of this rule, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has plainly stated, is not to have any discussion in the consideration of this calendar. The Chair must insist that gentlemen who insist upon debate must confine themselves strictly to the provisions of the bill and not discuss outside matters, because the House can well understand that if such a course were followed-

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I can raise a question of personal privilege. I can go out and get a resolution prepared right away or I can rise now to a question of personal

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order, if he wishes and if the House will permit.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington may proceed out of Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed out of order for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, today I have received from the Government Printer the authentic reporter's copy of the 5-minute talk I made upon Friday last.

The gentleman from Texas made the statement on the floor yesterday that he did not change one word in these remarks

Mr. BLANTON. I did not change one word of the gentleman's remarks-not one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will address the Chair before interrupting the speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I now ask the gentleman from Texas if in his remarks, which are a part of my remarks, he said:

Mr. Schriftgiesser, a Russian Communist, with just about the same kind of sympathetic ideas that the gentleman entertains.

This is what he said and then he put in: "The Post and its writer", and then after "Communist" he put in "sympathizers", and after "sympathetic ideas" he put in "communism", and then he goes down a little further and Mr. BLANTON again states this:

I would rather have night riders here in Washington than "red riders.

Then in between the words "in" and "Washington" he puts in "the State of", and after "riders" he put in "if the 'red riders' were 'reds'."

Then after my remarks, "Why does not the gentleman answer the question", Mr. BLANTON puts in this statement which was never stated by Mr. Blanton on the floor:

Mr. Blanton. The Post and its editor, Karl Schriftglesser, know that I have never belonged to the Ku Klux Klan, and that in the zenith of its power one of its high kleagles ran against me for Congress, and I carried every county in my district against him by a big majority.

Do you admit that you changed your own remarks in my remarks?

Mr. BLANTON. I made that carry out exactly what I told the gentleman here on the floor.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What did you tell the gentleman here on the floor?

Mr. BLANTON. I told the gentleman on the floor that this Karl Schriftgiesser, who is one of Eugene Meyer's editors of the Post, entertained communistic ideas exactly like the gentleman entertains. Is not that right? Do you deny that?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, no; that is right in here.

Mr. BLANTON. Exactly like you entertain?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is right in here.

Mr. BLANTON. And I made that conform to the facts. Will the gentleman deny he entertains communistic ideas?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Did you write this in or did you not? Did you or did you not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the discussion, but it is contrary to the rules to address any Member in the first or second person.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then did the gentleman from Texas do this or did he not?

Mr. BLANTON. Sure I did. I made it conform exactly to the facts, and I made it show exactly what the gentleman stands for.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And did the gentleman get my permission to do it?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not deny that he entertains communistic ideas, does he?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Did the gentleman from Texas obtain my permission to do it?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not have to obtain the gentleman's permission to make the RECORD speak the facts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order for the purpose of getting a ruling.

As I understand, a Member from his seat can address the speaker who has been recognized by the Chair and propound a question to him of he so desires, but under the rules has the person who has the floor and who is addressing the House any right to address a Member in his seat?

I think this is an important question, because we have had these two-men conversations a great deal recently.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the Member has such right.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Texas

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I heard the Chair correctly or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds the Member who is speaking does not have the right to address his remarks to any individual Member in his seat.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman from Texas that if my ideas are different from his, as they are, then, of necessity, in his opinion I must be a Communist. I am proud to have different ideas from those of the gentleman from Texas. It would be a reflection on the intelligence of the constituents I represent were my ideas and thoughts not different than his.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, under permission to revise and extend my own remarks, I include my remarks of Friday last. The italics designate the words inserted by the gentleman from Texas without my knowledge, permission, or consent, and contrary to the most elemental rules of this House, as the gentleman knows and knew when he did it. If he does it again I shall introduce a resolution and demand a vote.

Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ask my good friend from Texas whether he has read on the editorial page of this morning's Post an article entitled "BLANTON! Why?" and then "Heil to the Dictator!

Mr. Blanton. The Post and its writer, Karl Schriftglesser, are Russian Communist sympathizers with just about the same kind of sympathetic ideas for communism that the gentleman entertains.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman from Texas answer the question whether he would prefer a red rider to a night rider in Washington?

Mr. Blanton. I would rather have night riders here and in the State of Washington than red riders, if the red riders were reds.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Why does not the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. Blanton. The Post and its editor, Karl Schriftgiesser, know that I have never belonged to the Ku Klux Klan, and that in the zenith of its power one of its high kleagles ran against me for Congress, and I carried every county in my district against him by a big majority.

A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the Speaker rule whether I am within my rights, whether these are my remarks or the remarks of the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question without a further examination.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, and I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Michigan believes in fairness.

Mr. HOFFMAN. My parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, is whether the gentleman should not first address the Chair. The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct, but the gentleman from Texas did address the Chair. Mr. HOFFMAN. And my second inquiry is whether he would have the right and privilege, if I do not object, to stand in "No Man's Land" when he makes the request? Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I object.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. F. AMORY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 399) for the relief of A. F. Amory.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of A. F. Amory against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused on the early morning of August 6, 1929, by a collision in the harbor of Cape May, morning of August 6, 1929, by a collision in the harbor of Cape May, N. J., between a submerged wreck then in custody of the United States Coast Guard, at Cape May, N. J., and the power boat Mocking Bird, owned and operated by the said A. F. Amory, as a result whereof the said power boat Mocking Bird sustained substantial damage, may be sued for by the said A. F. Amory in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said A. F. Amory upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided for by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within 4 months from the date of the passage of this act. from the date of the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "wreck", insert "alleged to have

Page 1, line 10, after the word "whereof", insert "it is alleged that."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANTHONY MARSZELEWSKI

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7546) to correct the military record of Anthony Marszelewski.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE and Mr. HANCOCK of New York objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FRANK A. BOYLE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 993) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress, approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States receiving injuries in the performance of their duties", and for other purposes, to Frank A. Boyle.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States receiving injuries in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", are hereby extended to Frank A. Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill involves the refund of a bond?

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman is correct. Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

C. C. C. CAMPS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, day before yesterday marked the third anniversary of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the relief and reforestation organization initiated by President Roosevelt within a few weeks after he took office in Inaugurated to promote the conservation of the country's resources and to relieve the desperate unemployment situation among young men which held the country in its grip 3 years ago, this forest-camp organization has, during the 3 years in which it has been in operation, entrenched itself as an important factor in the country's social and governmental structure. Its popularity is strongly demonstrated by the overwhelming demand for camps which is constantly expressed in letters to the Director, to the technical services, and to Congress from residents of the States where men are working.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read from an Associated Press dispatch dated Lincoln, Nebr., March 18, 1936, which is taken from the Hastings Tribune:

C. C. C. camps were credited today with almost a 25-percent reduction in the population of the Nebraska Reformatory in 3 years.

years.

The decrease was the only substantial reduction in the number of State wards in any of its 17 penal or charitable institutions in recent years, a survey showed.

Prior to 1933, when the C. C. C. was created, the population of the reformatory showed an almost uninterrupted increase. At the beginning of 1933 the institution housed 402 young men. The next year the number dropped to 345, and 1936 saw a further reduction to 306.

H. W. Jespensen, reformatory superintendent, said he could

H. W. Jespensen, reformatory superintendent, said he could "see no other reason for the decrease."

"The C. C. C. camps keep young men out of trouble", he said.

In formulating his plan for the organization of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the President had in mind the conservation of two of the country's greatest assets-her youth and her forests. In 1933 unemployment represented a serious and in some instances a critical problem in every civilized nation. Young men graduating or dropping out of high schools and colleges had little chance of finding employment. The President recognized that the existence of the situation formed by these young men without jobs—many of them without enough to eat—constituted a social problem of great importance.

He was also keenly aware of the depleted state of our great natural resources. Both Federal and State foresters have for years called attention to the fact that our forest lands were being destroyed at a rate which exceeded that at which the timber was being grown. Destructive fires swept over an average of 41,000,000 acres of timber each year. Tree insects and diseases caused damages estimated at millions of dollars. Due to neglect, millions of acres of valuable agricultural land were being depleted through the loss of rich top soil.

It was to correct these conditions—to take young unemployed men from depression-hit homes and place them at work in healthful surroundings and to conserve valuable natural resources—that the Civilian Conservation Corps was formed.

The authority for emergency conservation work—the C. C. C.—was provided by act of Congress approved March 31, 1933, and extended by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. On April 5, 1933, Robert Fechner was appointed director of emergency conservation work, and four existing Government Departments—War, Interior, Agriculture, and Labor—were directed by the President to cooperate in the launching of a huge conservation, reforestation, and relief program.

Soon after the Emergency Conservation Work program was authorized, steps were taken to put into operation a great chain of forest camps where unmarried men between the ages of 18 and 25-since changed to 17 and 28-could be given healthful, outdoor employment on projects which would not only enhance the present value of our national resources but which would increase their usefulness to future generations. On April 7, 1933, the first young man was enrolled for camp duty and 10 days later the first camp was established. By July 1 a total of 1,300 two-hundred-man camps had been established and more than 250,000 young men enrolled. At the President's direction arrangements were made to allow 25,000 veterans to enroll, and these men were in camps before the end of July. At the request of the Department of the Interior, Director Fechner allocated funds to the Office of Indian Affairs for the purpose of carrying on C. C. C.-type work on Indian reservations. Later the work was expanded to provide for the extension of conservation activities to Hawaii, Alaska, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico. Approximately 4,000 men are now enrolled from these Territories.

During the summer of 1935 the C. C. C. was expanded to a peak of 519,000 enrolled men. As of March 15, 1936, there were approximately 380,000 enrollees in barrack camps in the continental United States, 8,400 Indians on Indian reservations, and 3,900 men in the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. In addition to enrolled personnel, employment has also been afforded foresters and technical experts employed to supervise the work program, Reserve officers assigned to command the camps, and skilled and unskilled workers employed in the construction of the camps.

The basic cash allowance of enrolled men in the C. C. C. has been $30 a month. With few exceptions men have allotted approximately $25 each month to their dependents.

During the 3 years that it has been in operation the Civilian Conservation Corps has been of great benefit not only to the men but also to the forests, parks, and agricultural areas threatened with erosion. Up to date approximately a million and a half persons—most of them youngsters 17 and 18 years of age—have been given jobs on healthful, outdoor work, which has enabled them to improve themselves physically and at the same time contribute substantially to the support of their dependents.

The Civilian Conservation Corps work program has included the protection of forests against fire, disease, insects, and other pests, the development of national and State parks and other recreational areas through the construction of recreation facilities, roads, trails, landscaping, and so forth; the protection of valuable farm lands against soil erosion, flood control, irrigation and drainage, wildlife conservation, and so forth. It is estimated by officials of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, which supervise the work programs, that the present value of the conservation work completed by Civilian Conservation Corps men, as of September 30, 1935, is approximately $579,000,000. This figure does not include estimates of the increase in values which will occur on many projects and the large savings which were possible because of such operations as fighting forest fires, controlling insect pests and diseases, and so forth.

Fire protection has been stressed as a major C. C. C. activity. To combat fire effectively, trails through the forests are necessary and telephone communications, lookout towers, houses, and firebreaks are needed. During the past 3 years, great strides have been made in providing such facilities. Next to forest-fire protection, the control of tree-attacking diseases and pests, such as the white pine blister rust, the gypsy moth, the Dutch elm disease, and the pine-bark beetle, has been an important forest protective activity of the C. C. C.

An outstanding example of the C. C. C.'s contribution to the national welfare—and of the popular attitude toward that contribution—may be found in the work of the more than 20 veteran companies of the C. C. C. in the Winooski Valley, Vt. During the last 3 years, these men have been working on a flood-control system designed to prevent the recurrence of the disastrous floods which occurred in that area in 1927, when millions of dollars' worth of property and many lives were lost in a severe flood. The success of the flood-control dams completed by the C. C. C. at East Barre and Wrightsville is indicated by the following excerpt from a report from the commanding officer of the camp there, forwarded to the Director of Emergency Conservation Work by The Adjutant General of the War Department:

The chief topic of conversation with any citizen in this part of the country, during the past week, has been the effect of the dams in East Barre and Wrightsville, in protecting the cities of Barre and Montpelier from a repetition of the devastating flood of November 3-4, 1927. The effect of these dams in protecting this heavily populated area and the Winooski Valley has received universal acclaim. Everyone is in accord as to their usefulness. All acknowledge their protection. Many speak of the protection of these dams with considerable emotion, especially those whose property would otherwise have been endangered.

The WBEV Radio Station at Waterbury kept in operation throughout the flood period. The announcer voiced repeatedly expressions of their appreciation of the effect of the flood-control dams. One has heard the announcer state, "We Vermonters are eternally grateful to the Civilian Conservation Corps for the dams which were constructed by them."

Some have estimated that had not the Jail Branch of the Winooski which passes through the town of Barre, been controlled by the East Barre Dam, Barre would have been completely flooded and half of the business section would have been bankrupt. I mention this as a statement from one of its leading citizens. The very definite contribution of the dams to the protection of the Winooski Valley has been universally acknowledged. The people are very grateful in consequence. The dams have demonstrated that they have paid for themselves in the destruction they have prevented.

The recent flood has been a means of raising the morale of the veterans of the Civilian Conservation Corps in this district who contributed their efforts to the construction of these dams. They have felt that their efforts have been rewarded and that their enormous amount of labor was not in vain. They have received assurances from all quarters that they have made an enduring contribution to the protection of the Winooski Valley.

Then there is that example of another type of outstanding service which the corps has been constantly performing since its inception. That is the relief activity of the enrollees of the corps during the recent floods and the floods in New York State last year, when, by their prompt action in the rescuing of people caught in the flood area, helping them to evacuate their homes, and in the clean-up work that followed, to avoid a pestilence, they have rendered such outstanding service.

Another Civilian Conservation Corps project which will have a broadly beneficial effect on the public is the reclamation of the Skokie Marshes outside of Chicago. Here 10 companies of the C. C. C., grouped together in one large camp, are redeeming several hundred acres of lowland, the breeding ground of millions of mosquitoes, and are making it into an attractive recreational center for the citizens of Chicago and the surrounding countryside.

The conservation of wildlife is one of the objectives of the C. C. C. program, expressed indirectly in the protection of wildlife and of natural food conditions on the forest and park projects and more directly in the development of fish hatcheries, bird sanctuaries, and so forth. In West Virginia the C. C. C. has been a boon to fishermen, for it has restored fishing streams which were being polluted by seepage from nearby mines.

Arno B. Cammerer, Director of the National Park Service. recently advised Director Fechner that Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees had been of great assistance to the National Park Service in holding down forest-fire losses in the national parks and monuments during 1935. Mr. Cammerer said that with the aid of the C. C. C. the National Park Service had been able to register a marked improvement in fire suppression within the national parks and monuments during the fire season just closed.

Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees have been trained by National Park Service rangers into effective and efficient fire-fighting groups at each camp-

Said Mr. Cammerer:

A certain group of enrollees at the various camps have been A certain group of enrollees at the various camps have been selected and trained in fire protection and suppression technique and are always ready for action when a forest blaze develops. This last year was a hazardous one for confiagrations, but the prompt work of both the enrollees and the regular force of park officials resulted in the control of more fires at less cost and less loss of acreage than has been the case in previous years.

Before the advent of the C. C. C. into the national parks and monuments in 1933, the areas administered under the direction of the National Park Service lacked sufficient fire-fighting personnel. There was consequently the ever-present dread of some blaze sweeping out of control and destroying many areas of valuable forest land. This cooperation in fire protection and suppresable forest land. This cooperation in fire protection and suppression work is without doubt one of the most valuable contributions of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Extracts from a memorandum sent by the Forest Service to Director Fechner tell how the C. C. C. aided in forest-fire prevention and suppression work on forest lands, follow:

The presence of the Civilian Conservation Corps camps themselves upon national, State, and other forest areas, has done much to prevent and reduce fire losses in the Nation's timberlands. Under the direction of and trained by Forest Service officers, the youthful enrollees have been on the spot to stop blazes caused by careless smokers, brush and grass fires, campfires, lightning, and numerous other causes before they have gained sufficient headway to become dangerous.

In addition to quick action in preventing forest fires, the United States Forest Service and State forestry departments are beginning to reap returns from the work the boys have performed during the 30 months the corps has been in existence. Serious obstacles to efficient fire control have been removed by these young forest workers

The C. C. C. has aided in the establishment of more fire-detection stations; it has greatly expanded the means of communication, pushed roads and trails, and built airplane landing fields in previously inaccessible areas, and has acted as a reservoir of manpower to act upon a moment's notice.

The Forest Service's 1935 record shows that although a larger number of fires was reported on the national forests than in 1934, only about 38 percent of 1934's losses were suffered. Notable 1935 fires upon which the C. C. C. served with distinction were the Malibu fires in California and the Sims fire at McKenzie Bridge in Malibu fires in California and the Sims fire at Mckenzie Bridge in Oregon. The Forest Service named as the year's outstanding fire-control accomplishment the prompt suppression of two fires on the Angeles National Forest, which occurred at the same time and adjacent to the Malibu fire. Here, by means of quick detection, speedy attack by Forest Service officers and C. C. C. units trained in fire fighting, plus the facilities of C. C. C. built trails, roads, and firebreaks, both outbreaks were controlled within 24 hours, holding the loss to 1,900 acres despite unfavorable weather conditions.

In addition to giving employment to a vast army of young men and pushing forward an unprecedented forest and park protection and improvement program, the C. C. C. has aided industry by affording a cash market for the sale of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of materials and equipment needed in the operation of the Nation-wide chain of forest camps. Industries which have been greatly aided by the C. C. C. program include the automotive, food, heavy machinery, building, and textile industries. Railroads also have received millions of dollars' worth of business.

In discussing the accomplishments of the Civilian Conservation Corps, however, I wish to stress the benefits which have accrued to the enrolled men of the corps, both in the improvement of their health and in the improvement of their mental outlook.

Care of the health of the C. C. C. enrollees starts at the time of enrollment, as only those men are selected who can stand work in the forests and who are free from contagious disease. When the enrollees are accepted, they are sent at once to camps and are kept under careful medical supervision. Smallpox and typhoid vaccinations are given immediately. A medical officer is assigned to each camp to look after the health of the men. Not only does he take care of the sick and the injured but he is responsible for the sanitation of the camp, the protection of the water supply, seeing that the men get proper food and bathing facilities, providing first-aid instruction, and giving lectures on personal hygiene and disease prevention.

A recent survey of 14,000 enrollees, selected at random from all sections of the country, showed an average weight gain per man of between 8 and 12 pounds during a 6-month enrollment period.

The social effects of enrollment in the C. C. C., though just as important, are less tangible. Robert Fechner, Director of Emergency Conservation Work, in a recent address on What the C. C. C. Means to the Youth of the County, said:

Frequently the question is asked concerning the C.C.C., "Is this enterprise conserving the human resources of the country as well as the natural resources?" This question was put to our State directors of selection some months ago. A Nation-wide response was received. These reports reveal the favorable reaction of the boys, their families, and local citizenry everywhere to the increased human values which have resulted from this work.

Thousands of actual case records reflect the fact that C. C. c. men have returned to their homes, definitely benefited physically and mentally, with a brighter outlook toward the future, with a stronger sense of self-reliance and an increased ability to adjust themselves to economic conditions.

Among the letters which have come to the office of the director from members of the corps, parents, social workers, and others is the following vivid first-hand account of a boy's enrollment in the corps:

"I was unemployed and roaming the streets. The idea of entering the Civilian Conservation Corps was brought rather forcibly to my attention by an article in the newspaper. I joined and found the ideal set-up. In so vast an organization I was amazed to find it even greater and better than my friends had told me.

"Not the kind of life the average person is accustomed to, but a life where the work is not killing, the food is good, there is no dust and smoke to choke the lungs, and where at night, instead of the constant banging of the traffic, one is lulled to sleep by the elements. Eating was far the greatest benefit I have received. At one time only certain foods were agreeable to me. Not that I wild the them but they were unhealthy to me. But bring on the didn't like them, but they were unhealthy to me. But bring on the foodstuffs now.

foodstuffs now.

"Underweight to almost an emaciated degree I have gained 24 pounds since entering the Conservation Corps, and it was all put on while working on the pick and shovel. Try getting fat doing that. It can't be done. Insomnia was another of my faults. The slightest sound was sufficient to awaken me and prevent me falling back to sleep for maybe 2 hours. Now try and wake me in the middle of the night. That can't be done either.

"Although I found very few subjects that I didn't know something about, I found there was more to life than just book knowledge. Athletics was never a part of my make-up. By nature I am a bookworm. When I joined the pick and shovel brigade I found something else that was delightful to do besides working some mathematical equation, and that was to work with these boys and swing the shovels and picks to the tune of Tve Been Working on the Railroad.' If you have never had the actual experience you can never get it out of books.

"Although I have better than the average education, I knew

"Although I have better than the average education, I knew that there were an awful lot of things that I could know yet, and to brush over what I already knew. Since the camp I am in at present is a new camp, I have been in it ever since it was started. The company came here and lived in tents till the barracks were finished. After work was an awfully dull period, being without finished. After work was an awfully dull period, being without any more light than a candle. With nothing to do I thought of starting a class in public speaking. It wasn't long until I had about four or five classes going. Then, the happiest day of my life, on the 17th of September my commanding officer told me that he was appointing me as assistant-educational adviser. I find that due to this position I am able to benefit by all the classes we have along with the usual benefits that are sure to arise in every camp.

"Last but not least, it has made me feel responsible. I used to fear the day when I would have to take over the burden of supporting the family. Work was about as plentiful as snow-balls in Hades, and so I didn't know what to do. And now at the end of every month, a feeling, one that is awfully hard to describe, comes over me when I realize that due to my efforts here, 370 miles from home, I am supporting the ones who sacrificed for me."

Mr. Speaker, I have observed personally the working of the C. C. C. in my own district and State, and I am pleased to pay tribute today to the success of this program, which builds not only better land for our Nation but builds better men as well. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call to the attention of the House the fact—and I think it is worthy of comment—that this is the third time during the present session of the Congress that the Private Calendar has been called and the third time that the Private Calendar has been absolutely cleared of all bills.

I think this is a rather unique achievement in the annals of the Congress, and in view of the fine work that has been done under the new rule in the consideration of private bills, I think the chairman and members of the Committee on Claims and also the gentlemen on both sides of the aisle who are entrusted with the duty of going over these bills, the so-called official objectors, have performed a very fine public service. I think it is due them to make acknowledgment of the splendid service they have rendered at this session of the Congress in disposing of the bills on the Private Calendar so promptly and so effectively. I think it is really a contribution to our service to the country and especially to those having claims against the Government.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will not the gentleman state in this connection that a fine tribute is due the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], chairman of the Rules Committee, for giving us this rule?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am certainly pleased to add that. I had already stated that this fine achievement was accomplished under the beneficent provisions of the new rule that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] had brought in for the consideration of the House.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday next be dispensed with.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to cbject, are we ever going to have a Calendar Wednesday? We have not had one in about 14 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, if it has been going on that many years, I think it has almost passed into a tradition.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

RELIEF TO WATER USERS ON RECLAMATION AND INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4232) to create a commission and to extend further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman from New Mexico a question or two and to get some explanation of the bill.

I would like to ask the gentleman, in the first place, what need there is to establish a commission to look into the financial situation pertaining to these various projects.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the committee has been advised that many of the districts need no moratorium of any kind while other districts do. The Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, is in possession of practically all the facts and all we need to have in order to determine the matter is the investigation provided for in the measure.

The gentleman will find that in the Senate bill, which is slightly different from the bill which passed the House, there is an authorization of $5,000 which, of course, would not provide a very exhaustive investigation.

We have been going along year after year granting a 100-percent moratorium. I think this year the moratorium should perhaps be more liberal than the one provided, but the Director of the Budget felt differently and this bill is in accord with the recommendation of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. SNELL. I may say to the gentleman from New Mexico that we have been continually extending the time of payment on these various projects. If this bill is not quite as liberal as the bills have been in the past, I think that is to the credit of the committee. I appreciate the fact that probably they cannot all pay, but I dislike very much to get into the habit of remitting everything every year that is coming to the Federal Government from these various projects. If the gentleman's bill only remits 50 percent this year, to that extent I am in favor of the bill, because that is better than we have done at various times in the past.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is one of the provisions of the bill. Mr. SNELL. That is a little better than you have done at times in the past, but I really can see no reason whatever for establishing a commission to make an investigation. The Department of the Interior knows exactly the conditions that exist on every single one of these projects. They have men who are in touch with the project, and they know just as much or more than any new commission could possibly know; and unless the gentleman can give some definite reason for establishing this commission, I will not say that I shall object, but I shall certainly be inclined to object unless the gentleman can give some reason for the creation of such a commission. I want to be fair with the House and with the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The bill really creates no new commission. They are to take two employees from the Interior Department connected with the reclamation and irrigation services and then they are to select one man from the water users in the various districts, and this is the extent to which a commission is created. It is not really a new commission.

Mr. SNELL. The bill appropriates an additional $5,000. Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; that would pay for the man who is selected from one of the districts by the water users. The others are employees of the Interior Department.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, do not the employees of the Interior Department have direct connection with every one of these various projects? They look them over constantly and know all about them. They must do this in order to carry out the orders of the Department in connection with them.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is largely true, but the water users have asked to have this investigation made in order that those who are in a financial position to pay 100 percent may do so, whereas those who can only pay 20 or 25 percent might be accorded an extension of time.

Mr. SNELL. Why cannot the men they have at the present time make this investigation? If the gentleman will tell me some good reason, I shall not object; but I want to have some reason for the consideration of the bill from somebody.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Interior Department would not be authorized to pay a man from one of the districts who is not connected with the Department of the Interior unless this request was granted, and the water users make the claim that they are not properly represented by the men who are sent out to make such investigations. They want an opportunity to be heard in the matter.

Mr. SNELL. You are going to send men from the Department?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Two from the Department and one from the water users.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain this matter. The water users feel that they are not getting sufficient moratorium.

Mr. SNELL. They have claimed that for 20 years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The Interior Department thinks the moratorium is altogether too liberal, but the water users think they have not had a fair deal. The only purpose of this is to get the two Departments together so that they can agree on what is fair.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, you will never get them together. We know that from the past experience of the House. We have been through it time and time again. I am willing to extend the moratorium, but I do not think we should expend $5,000 to make any further investigation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The yearly payments run into millions of dollars, and $5,000 is a small sum.

Mr. SNELL. In a way it is a small sum, but the gentleman knows as well as I do that there is not a particle of information to be gained by this investigation that is not now in the hands of the Interior Department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am inclined to that belief.

Mr. SNELL. Then why should we appropriate $5,000 for a further investigation?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is the committee amendment, and I think $5,000 will be well expended to satisfy the water

Mr. SNELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object, but I know it is wrong, and there is no excuse for creating this commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a commission to be composed of three members, all of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, two from the personnel of the Department of the Interior and one who shall be a landowner and water user under a United States reclamation project. The com-mission is authorized and directed to investigate the financial and economic condition of the various United States reclamation projects, with particular reference to the ability of each such project to make payments of water-right charges without undue burden on the water users, district, association, or other reclama-tion corporation lighle for such charges. Such investigation shall tion organization liable for such charges. Such investigation shall include an examination and consideration of any statement filed include an examination and consideration of any statement filed with the commission or the Department of the Interior by any such district, association, or other reclamation organization, or the water users thereof, and, where requested by any such district, association, or other reclamation organization, said commission shall proceed to such project and hold hearings, the proceedings of which shall be reduced to writing and filed with its report. Said commission, after having made careful investigation and study of the financial and economic condition of the various United States reclamation projects and their probable present and future ability to meet such water-right charges, shall report to the Congress, at the beginning of the Seventy-fifth Congress, with its recommendations as to the best, most feasible, and practicable comprehensive permanent plan for such water-right payments, with due consideration for the development and carrying on of the reclamation program of the United States, and having particularly in mind the probable ability of such water users, districts, associations, and other reclamation organizations to meet such watertions, and other reclamation organizations to meet such waterright charges regularly and faithfully from year to year, during periods of prosperity and good prices for agricultural products as well as during periods of decline in agricultural income and unsatisfactory conditions of agriculture.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, which shall be available for expenditure, as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, for expenses and all necessary disbursements, including salaries, in carrying out the provisions of this act. The commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such employees as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act without regard to civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 3. That all the provisions of the act entitled "An act to further extend relief to water users on the United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects", approved June 13, 1935, are hereby further extended for the period of 1 year, so far as concerns 50 percent of the construction charges, for the calendar year 1936: Provided, however, That where the construction charge for the calendar year 1936 is payable in two installments, the sum hereby extended shall be the amount due as the first of such installments. If payable in one installment, the due date for the 50 percent to be paid shall not be changed.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend to water users on Indian irrigation projects during the calendar year 1936 like relief to that provided in the acts of January 26, 1933 (47 Stat. 776), and March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1427), applicable to the calendar years 1931, 1932, and 1933: Provided, That water users accepting the benefits of the relief extended by this act shall pay interest on deferred payments at the rate of 2 percent from the date when said payment became due to and including the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder, said interest to be paid at the time of payment of the said water-right charges for 1936.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE NEW DEAL.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by my colleague [Mr. Terry] yesterday at Mount Holyoke College, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Hon. David D. Terry, of Arkansas, before the student body of Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., on Monday, April 6, 1936:

What is the New Deal? Some of its criticis call it a "raw deal." Others, more friendly, say that it is the only real deal that the people have had in more than a generation. What I am going to what is the New Deal? Some of its criticis call it a "raw deal." Others, more friendly, say that it is the only real deal that the people have had in more than a generation. What I am going to do, or try to do, in the time at my disposal, is to give you in simple terms a picture of something that is not simple at all. You know, of course, that the New Deal is a term used to cover the unusual measures for the country which were proposed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt and his advisers. His advisers were not limited to Members of Congress or heads of the various departments of government. He assembled about him a group of men and women who were selected because of their special or particular knowledge of the things which they were called upon to handle.

Here we had the first thing that was new in the New Deal. Hands went up in holy horror at the President's creating what was soon to be dubbed the "brain trust." Now, as a matter of fact, way back in the time of the Roman Empire the great senator, Cato, is heard suggesting a collegia, or school for senators. The affairs of the Empire, which covered the then known world, were entirely beyond any individual's ability to grasp, hence the suggestion for assembling a group of men as specialists in the government of Rome's provinces, and to propose measures and advise with the Roman lawmakers.

Let us get a little bit acquainted with the characteristics or the

Let us get a little bit acquainted with the characteristics or the cast of countenance, so to speak, of the New Deal. You know there are plenty of people who say that the titles of its measures make an alphabetical juggle; that if many more measures had to be given titles we would have to pass out of the English alphabet be given titles we would have to pass out of the English alphabet altogether. I do not know of any instance in which the English alphabet has been put to better use than in giving titles for these measures. Just to mention a few of the major measures passed by the present administration to aid agriculture, finance, industry, and for providing relief. There, for instance, is the National Recovery Act, passed by Congress and put into operation for a couple of years, and then largely wiped out by a decision of the Supreme Court; also, there is the Agricultural Adjustment Act, commonly known as the Triple A. This had a term of life and then was buried under a Supreme Court decision. Then there is the Emergency Banking Act of 1933, followed by the so-called Glass-Steagall Act and the Banking Act of 1935. The Social Security Act was one of the most important bills passed by either the Seventy-third or Seventy-fourth Congress in its promise of wide service to the American people individually. wide service to the American people individually.

You will bear in mind, of course, that these are just a few of the ery many New Deal measures.

why were these measures necessary? Money, it has been said, is the very lifeblood of a nation. When money becomes stagnant and ceases freely to circulate through the arteries of a nation, it is going to be just too bad for business, and the people are going to suffer. Another unfortunate condition with regard to money is for a situation to arise in which an exaggerated value is given to the securities upon which a bank bases its loans to individuals and to business associations. That was the situation that called for the proclamation of President Roosevelt on Monday, March 6, 1933. Place yourselves on Pennsylvania Avenue on March 4, 1933. You are watching the inaugural procession. The new President has just been sworn into office. Franklin D. Roosevelt has centered in him the hopes of the people. Banks have been failing all over the country because their credit wasn't free enough for business needs. Too much of the funds of the banks, which means the funds of the people, the depositors, had been diverted into speculations of all sorts. The banks found it more profitable to make loans for speculative purposes than for the homespun, ordinary needs of speculative purposes than for the homespun, ordinary needs of ordinary business.

In making these loans the banks received securities as collateral which were valued at a figure beyond what they would bring in the open market, and more than their real value. Here was bad banking, and the result was the collapse of banks, until in 20 or more States the banks had been temporarily closed. People were making runs on them for their money, for their deposits, and the banks had to be closed to conserve the resources of the institutions.

Now, let us remember that we are still on Pennsylvania Avenue Now, let us remember that we are still on Pennsylvania Avenue on Inauguration Day. Mr. Roosevelt has been President for scarcely 2 hours; he has left the reviewing stand and, behind the stand, is in conference with the Secretary of Treasury and the Secretary of State and some others. The subject of the conference was the advisability of closing all the banks by Presidential proclamation. The rought outlines of the proclamation were approved. Secretary of the Treasury Woodin got busy immediately by telegraph and telephone, with the leading bankers of the country, calling upon them to have local conferences all over the country immediately, and to wire back immediately to Washington. The result was the proclamation to which we have referred. The was the proclamation to which we have referred. President stated as his warrant for that extraordinary proclamation the Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917. Thus the President invoked a wartime measure for a crisis that was almost of wartime seriousness.

What was the heart of that proclamation? What was it intended what was the near of that proclamation? What was it intended to do? Its purpose was to close the banks for a few days so as to give time for Congress to pass a measure to cover the situation. You can easily see that if this had not been done the rush of depositors for their deposits, together with the drain of money from this country abroad, would have left the banks flat upon their backs, deed a constant of the part like the parks of make the part of the pa dead as door nails. I do not like to speak of such a thing, but do you know, my friends, that riots and revolution were right around the corner at the time Mr. Roosevelt issued that proclamation?

It was under wise handling that the sound banks soon were doing business again and the weak ones were being helped along the hard way of revival of public confidence.

Will the situation ever occur again? It is not likely to. For since then subsequent bank measures, notably the Glass bank bill of 1933, created a system of insurance for bank deposits. This, with other measures, brought back confidence in the banks and the people redeposited their money in them. This is one of the most desirable measures ever enacted, although bitterly opposed at the time by many of the larger and more conservative banks.

caustic criticism has been made that under the A. A. there was a ruthless slaughter of the innocents—the little pigs that were so cruelly killed and burned, or dumped in the river. Here are the facts: At the time of the World War there was a very great increase in the number of acres under cultivation in this country. The world was demanding the products of the American farms, and as a result 17,000,000 acres were added to those already under cultivation, including a large amount of so-called submarginal land which had never been under cultivation before, and production was increased in all foods. The farm is a food and production was increased in all foods. The farm is a food factory, and in the beginning of the Roosevelt administration meat was at an all-time low. In places, pigs were selling as low as 75 cents per hundred pounds, and the price of cattle was too low to justify the expense of transporting them to market. Can you imagine a factory continuing to manufacture products for which there is absolutely no market? In this case, it was even worse, because the cattle and hogs had to be fed if they were to continue to line. to live.

The Government came to the rescue, bought up a percentage of cattle and hogs, processed them, and gave them away as food to those on the relief. Some of the meat was condemned, but millions of tons of salvaged meat were given to the poor. There were, of course, places where the meat was wasted—no large program is ever carried on without faults.

or carried on without faults.

Suppose, as is a fact, that the Supreme Court did declare the Agricultural Adjustment Act unconstitutional. The great Court merely said that the lawmakers had sought to gain their ends in ways that were outside the technical limitations of certain clauses of the Constitution. There was nothing to imply that the ends were not worthy. They were worthy. They are carried out at the present time by subsequent legislation to much the same purpose, by basing the legislation on soil protection for the lands of the country. It is also true that in the future, when there is time to bring it to pass, the functions of the A. A. A. will be divided among the 48 States, all acting together with Uncle Sam in the center. The Supreme Court having set up its crossroads signs so that there can be no doubt as to the legal direction, the administration has forthwith passed a bill that is intended to conform with the Supreme Court's ruling and at the same time to accomplish very much of the same thing for agriculture that the A. A. A. was much of the same thing for agriculture that the A. A. A. was intended to do and was doing.

Of course, the very first criticism of the New Deal that is heard, and one that will increasingly be heard during the coming campaign, is the criticism of the matter of expenditures. We are told that hillions of dollars have been great formulations. paign, is the criticism of the matter of expenditures. We are told that billions of dollars have been spent, for an all-time high, and that our children and our children's children have been ruthlessly placed under a burden of debt from which they can never emerge. As a matter of fact, we all know that much of the expenditure went to the buying of food, clothing, and shelter for our own people, who were hungry and cold through no fault of their own. In some astonishing manner the expenditure of this money, which prevented actual starvation and revolution, was, in the opinion of our friendly enemies, nothing short of a crime.

prevented actual starvation and revolution, was, in the opinion of our friendly enemies, nothing short of a crime.

It happens that, according to the latest official Treasury figures, over thirteen and one-half billion dollars are now owing to the United States from the war debts of foreign countries. Over $1,000,000,000 are already in default, and we will very likely receive nothing of the additional twelve billions except in small payments from Finland. Is anyone losing sleep over this situation? No! Unborn generations in this country will have to pay for the World War, and yet the fact is rarely discussed. The last Treasury report, with a congressional discussion, occupied only one-half a column on page 28 of the Washington Post. It might seem that saving the lives of our own people was of much less concern than helping kill our neighbors, except for the fact that this is a campaign year, when anything goes when anything goes

Much of the money expended by our Government through the New Deal agencies is in the nature of loans, and is adequately secured, and may be considered as investments to be repayed with interest—for instance, the money loaned by the Reconstruction interest—for instance, the money loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to various industries, including banks, rall-roads, drainage districts; the loans made by the Public Works Administration for the construction of public buildings, sewers, and waterworks and other public agencies, a part of the amounts advanced being in the nature of grants, and a larger portion being in the nature of loans adequately secured; and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which has prevented foreclosure on the homes of our country, the mortgages being taken over by the H. O. L. C. to be repayed on long terms upon proper security.

our country, the mortgages being taken over by the H. O. L. C. to be repayed on long terms upon proper security.

Vast sums have already been paid back. For instance, in the debate in Congress last week on the R. F. C. it was shown that the profits of that organization at this time amount to over $115,000,000.

In addition to this justification, pause and consider what it has meant for returning prosperity to have these streams of credit flowing through the country and causing confidence and renewed hope to spring up in the hearts and minds of its citizens.

In addition to the loans to business and the dwellers in urban communities, the New Deal has provided for loans and payments.

In addition to the loans to business and the dwellers in urban communities, the New Deal has provided for loans and payments to farmers, to save their homes and farms from foreclosure, and through the A. A. A. and its successor has attempted to provide for a fair return to the farmers upon the products of their farms. Also, money has been advanced to them through the Farm Credit Administration and its various agencies.

Why should aid be given to the farmers of the land? First, because it is good business, and second, because the industrial worker has his level of living protected by powerful labor unions, and industry and manufacturing have since the beginning of the and industry and manufacturing have, since the beginning of the Republic, received assistance in the form of tariffs which the farmers have not received. The farmer has had nothing to parallel these vast trade unions; and there came a shutting down virtually of markets abroad, and the surplus for consumption in this country threw the farmers into poverty and despair.

I will now discuss briefly the Social Security Act. You know what it is designed to do. It is intended to give aid to States for old-age pensions, the United States Government sharing on a 50-50 basis with the States, under the laws of the particular States, which basis with the States, under the laws of the particular States, which must be approved by the Federal Government. Most of the States have already adopted laws to make available the assistance offered by the General Government for this purpose. In addition to oldage pensions, the social security law also provides for Federal oldage benefits and unemployment insurance; grants for States for aid to dependent children; grants to States for maternal and child welfare. Under this grant is included maternal and child health service, and services for crippled children. It also provides for public-health work in the various States, the States joining in and sharing the expense of these activities. In the opinion of many, this very humane and enlightened legislation is one of the outstanding accomplishments of the present administration

In passing, to mention briefly a few more of the New Deal measures, I ask you to consider, now in operation, projects to conserve the topsoil of the country from being wasted. Consider the resettlement measures, by which families have been taken from barren lands and given homes and farms in more fertile regions, to be paid for over a long term. Consider the farm leans regions, to be paid for over a long term. Consider the farm loans and the home loans, by which the farmer and the city dweller and the home loans, by which the farmer and the city dweller alike have had the dread specter of evictions from their home and homesteads lifted from them. Consider the C. C. C. camps, where are enrolled hundreds of thousands of young fellows in splendid, healthful employment. Consider as well the millions who are and have been employed for public works and the great number otherwise aided by the relief funds. Surely a great, wealthy country like this, whose natural resources have scarcely been scratched over, has no reason to permit mouths to go unfed, the hungry to become victims of starvation.

A nobler work was never performed in behalf of deserving and needy humanity than during these trying times.

To whom do we owe, does the country owe, the splendid thinking and splendid performance of this critical era? First of all, let me say we owe it to the genius of the American people. Their genius was never better shown than when they placed in the White House Franklin Delano Roosevelt. I say that without regard to partisan politics, for he went there through the votes of mil-to partisan politics, for he went there through the votes of millions of voters not of his party.

As we all know, it has fallen to the lot of the present administration to be in power during one of the most momentous periods in the life of this country, and I might also add in the history of the world. It is said that peace has its victories no less than war. Peace also has its tragedles and horrors no less than war; but the victories of peace are not as spectacular, and the tragedies and horrors are not so apparent. The results of malnutrition and the slow starvation of the children of the desperately poor are not at first so obvious, but the results will affect generations yet to come.

As I have stated before, we will spend millions and billions to triumph in war and foot the bills as a matter of course; but the spending of a smaller sum to fight and triumph over a world-wide depression is a thing which causes some of our leading citizens and businessmen to raise the hue and cry that under the leadership of the present administration our country is on the road to utter ruin and perdition.

It is said that we have been passing through a revolution bloodless so far, but still a revolution. The country has passed through revolutionary changes before. In the early days of the Republic the change from the long reign of the Federalist Party to that of the Republican-Democrats under Thomas Jefferson was considered by some in the nature of a revolution. The Federalists represented intrenched wealth and position, while the advent of the Republican-Democrats under Jefferson marked a new era in the life of the Nation, and the cause of the rights of the average man dominated the policies of the Government.

Hamilton, that brilliant young leader of the Federalists, used the Constitution and its implied powers as a bulwark for the protection of the big interests of that day against the masses that he so much of the big interests of that day against the masses that he so much despised, while in the time of Jefferson's power the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution were employed to protect the rights of the masses against the privileged few.

As the spiritual heirs of the old Federalist Party, the Republicans have usually been those of the party of special privilege and the protectors of vested interests, while the Democrats, as the successors to the Republican-Democratic Party, have, as a rule, been for the masses. The distinction between the two parties has been slight at times, but the Democratic Party has generally come back to its

In the past the Republicans have generally been against the doctrine of State's rights and have usually stood for a centralized power in government; and it is a strange sight to see them now mourning over what they claim is an abrogation of the rights of States to settle all matters not clearly coming within the powers granted to the Federal Government by the Constitution.

They make much of the decisions of the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. cases and say that the executive and legislative departments are striving to uproot the Constitution and to abolish the powers of that high Court.

But the record of the decisions made by the Supreme Court shows that 70 percent of all acts declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court were passed by Republican-controlled Congresses and that only 30 percent of such unconstitutional legislation was passed by Democratic Congresses. And yet those Republican Congresses would have been surprised and indignant if they had been accused of trying to subvert the Government and to destroy the Constitution.

It is much in the news of today that a conflict exists between the executive and legislative branches of the Government and the the executive and legislative branches of the Government and the Supreme Court. On this point let me make it clear that, in my opinion, that high tribunal is a friend, and not a foe, of the executive and legislative divisions of the Government. Members of Congress cannot possibly go into all the legal bearings of measures proposed to be adopted—I mean as to their constitutional warrant—and the Supreme Court has as one of its chief purposes to do that very thing for them. In the nature of the case as things are, it cannot render this service until after the acts have been passed and a challenge has been set up by someone in one of the lower courts. in one of the lower courts.

Much has been said in recent days about the President's desire to circumvent the Constitution. In fact, according to the partisan press, he is an arch conspirator against the rights of States to regulate their own affairs. In this connection it might be well to see what other Presidents have done when decisions of the high Court were unfavorable to measures or policies they had advocated. A recent editorial in a Washington paper has this to say on the subject:

The doughty Andrew Jackson, under whose leadership the Inter doughty Andrew Jackson, under whose leadership the Jeffersonian party was reborn as the Democratic Party, defied a Supreme Court ruling against the State of Georgia. 'John Marshall (then Chief Justice) has made his decision', Jackson snapped, 'now let him enforce it.'

"Abraham Lincoln carried the new Republican Party to its first "Abraham Lincoln carried the new Republican Party to its first national victory in a campaign in which defiance of the Supreme Court's Dred Scott decision was his chief issue. 'If the policy of the Government on vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by the Supreme Court the instant they are made', said Lincoln in his first inaugural address, 'the people will have ceased to be their own rulers.' He ignored the Court while waging the Civil War to settle the issue which the Court's decision had brought to a head.

"Ulysses S. Grant, whose party leadership sealed Republican dominance for many years, packed the Supreme Court with new members to get it to reverse its greenback decision against his money policy

Theodore Roosevelt, whose 'square deal' revitalized the Republican Party early in the century, undertook to clip the powers of the Federal judges after their decisions had frustrated some of his antitrust reforms. He urged a referendum of the people on laws which the courts held unconstitutional. "The highest right to make their own laws * * *,' he of a free people is the right to make their own laws * * *,' he said. 'I hold that the people should say finally whether these decisions are or are not to stand as the laws of the land.'"

What did Franklin Roosevelt do or say when the Supreme Court declared the N. R. A. unconstitutional? When compared with the statements and actions of his illustrious predecessors, I submit that he was most restrained and mild. Upon being told of the action of the Court, he merely made the now famous remark: "The decision will take the country back to the 'horse and buggy' days."

Many of the old-line conservative Democrats with "big business" Many of the old-line conservative Democrats with "big business" backgrounds are at this time viewing with alarm the program of the administration. Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, a bitter critic of the President, has bestowed upon them the designation of real Democrats. They are wont to call themselves Jeffersonian Democrats. I wonder what Thomas Jefferson would say if he knew that they were so classifying themselves.

What would he, the great advocate of the rights of man, think if he knew that the spiritual heirs of the old Federalists were using his name as a buckler and shield against the advance of progressive legislation that redounds to the interests of those for whom he spent his life and great talent—the common people of the country?

Woodrow Wilson, in his History of the American People, thus describes Jefferson:

describes Jefferson:

"Mr. Jefferson was an interesting mixture of democrat, philosopher, and patrician. In taste and occupation and habit he touched and was familiar with the life of the cultured and moneyed classes, the aristocracy of the young Nation, which constituted the Federalist strength. In creed and principle he was the comrade and workfellow of the people. By gift of insight and genius for organization he was a leader of parties and of concerted action in affairs. An infinite sensibility taught him moderation, lent him tact, pointed out to him the practicable courses of persuasion and the certain prospects of popular support. His personal charm, his high breeding, without arrogance or pretense, gave him hold upon everyone with whom he came in contact. No other man could have so moderated or so completed a revolution in the spirit and conduct of the Government. the Government.

"For a revolution it was, profound and lasting. Undoubtedly the chief merchants, the chief men of means and of responsible trust, the chief men of parts and learning and social influence in the country were Federalists. They looked upon Mr. Jefferson as 'an atheist in religion and a fanatic in politics', and they dreaded the direct thrusts of democracy at the careful system they had reared as likely to be little less than the throwing down of the very props of society trails." of society itself."

How little did Woodrow Wilson foresee the arising of another President so like the one whom he thus describes.

My friends, in view of the repeated use by the standpatters of the term "Jeffersonian Democrat", it may be of interest to consider very briefly the similarity in the life, character, and background of Jefferson, the earliest leader of Democracy, and the life, character, and background of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the man who many people believe was ordained by a benign Providence to show the way to a better and broader life in these recent days of disaster and discord.

Both Jefferson and Roosevelt came from the best statements.

Both Jefferson and Roosevelt came from the best aristocracy of their respective sections. Jefferson was a man of wealth, as is Roosevelt. Both adopted politics as their professions, but neither as a means of livelihood. In his day, probably as a result of a sojourn in France before and during the Revolution, Jefferson became deeply interested in the rights of man. Roosevelt, although of the patrician class, views Government affairs and problems from the standpoint of the man of the street and farm, rather than from the viewpoint of the privileged and wealthy classes. It would be interesting to me to know when and whence came Roosevelt's deep and abiding interest in ordinary man. Perhaps it came during the long period of slow recovery after the terrible scourge of infantile paralysis had suddenly laid him low.

I will surely be remiss if I do not say something about women in the New Deal. You know that Mme. Secretary Perkins holds the portfolio of labor as the first woman ever to enter the Cabinet Both Jefferson and Roosevelt came from the best aristocracy of in the New Deal. You know that Mme. Secretary Perkins holds the portfolio of labor as the first woman ever to enter the Cabinet of a President—and with what signal ability she has functioned. The women's bureau, the children's bureau, slum clearance, health, recreation, a multitude of things enter into the services of women in the New Deal, and many of these center in the various bureaus which are under the direction of Miss Perkins. I think we will all agree that Mrs. Roosevelt herself, although having no official relationship to the Government, is one of the most varied and talented women in the records of the country. Her interest and her sympathy and her resourcefulness are little Her interest and her sympathy and her resourcefulness are little short of amazing.

I do not know how many people have been at pains to discover that during the entire course of English history from the time of William the Conqueror up to 1909, with the triumph of the early battles for suffrage, woman was not mentioned in any of the statutes of England, in her own name and character. She was mentioned only in connection with her husband or other male relative. So you can see how recently the women have come into recognition as persons in the full sense of the term politically, as well as socially. A vast body of New Deal undertakings have been those that could never have been put forward and carried on except by drafting upon the sentiments and sympathies of American womanhood.

Which leads me to say that women of culture with the traditions of education and training should be more generally found enlisted in local, State, and National politics. In a word, American politics, never more than at the present time, calls for the enlistment of the higher capabilities and the fine characters of enlistment of the higher capabilities and the fine characters of the young women who go out from the colleges. I will go fur-ther and venture to say that never before in the history of this or any other country has the distinterested service of the best minds been in greater demand to aid in the solution of those problems that vex our day and generation. I invite you young women to become identified with one or the other of the political parties, and to serve your country by throwing the weight of your trained capacities upon the side of those things which will redound to the lasting benefit of the Republic.

At the present time great numbers of young men and women in At the present time great numbers of young men and women in the schools and colleges are given support from Federal funds. Surely these will return to give thanks by high-minded service to their respective communities; and in so doing they will find that the doors of opportunity are thrown wider to them than to their fathers in the years before the era of the depression set in.

We have exhausted our public domain. With the land frontiers gone forever, there is another frontier set up that is not physical. I refer to the frontier of big undertakings and enterprises that have been filled with the spirit of making America not only big, but better. Better to live in, better to work in, better to love, better to pass on to the coming generations.

better to pass on to the coming generations.

This is not a Rooseveltian undertaking. It is something that passes beyond the compass of any mind and defies anyone to passes beyond the compass of any mind and denes anyone to arrest its progress.

Our productive efficiency is increasing year by year. We are laying the foundations for prosperity in the real sense, beyond anything that the country has ever known or dreamed of. Rapidly the unemployed are being brought back again into private employ under conditions a great deal better than existed before the National Recovery Act had been allowed its couple of years for the lastice of the probability planting of the principles of greater justice and greater equality and greater opportunity among the industries of America. In closing, I do not know anything better to leave with you, as young Americans being educated for great things, for a great country, than this sentiment from one whose work in the original is not unknown to many of you. Cicero says, "Be persuaded there is a certain separate place in heaven for those who have preserved, aided, and ameliorated their country, where they may enjoy happiness in all eternity.'

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND WORKERS' EDUCATION

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement from the commissioner of health and labor officials of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I have requested leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of asking and recommending that the Social Security Act be extended to and put in operation in behalf of the people of Puerto Rico, and also to say something on workers' education under the reconstruction plan for the island.

Again, I must recall that Puerto Rico, with over 1,600,000 inhabitants, is an organized territory, as defined by the United States Supreme Court. Our organic act of March 2, 1917, known as the Jones Act, contains the following pro-

The statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in the United States.

There is pending in the Committee on Ways and Means a bill, H. R. 11062, proposing to extend to Puerto Rico the provisions of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935. There also is pending H. R. 12119 in the Committee on Insular Affairs, to create a new department of public welfare. I assume that H. R. 11062 can be arranged for and favorably recommended insofar as the provisions are applicable to the island without serious opposition, in view of the fact that the Legislature of Puerto Rico has already enacted measures for the aid and comfort of motherhood, children, and the blind.

The extension of the Social Security Act to Puerto Rico has been favorably recommend by President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and many other wellinformed persons and interested labor organizations of the

My desire now is to call your attention to a memorandum on this subject, prepared by the Commissioner of Health of Puerto Rico, and a statement on workers' education and general social welfare by the secretary of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico.

MEMORANDUM ON EXTENSION TO PUERTO RICO OF THE BENEFITS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

The Social Security Act passed by the Seventy-fourth Congress and approved by the President on August 14, 1935, sets forth the purposes of the act as follows:

"To provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of old-age benefits and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a social security board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes."

In general, these purposes are to be carried out by grants from the Federal Government to the States and Territories for cooperathe Federal Government to the States and Territories for cooperative service. Puerto Rico was not included as one of the governmental units to participate in the program for which this act is the foundation. It is the purpose of this memorandum to call attention to the fact that the Department of Health of Puerto Rico has been doing effective work on some of the problems which are to be attacked by the social-security program; that the present appropriations and standards of work of this department would justify participation in those parts of the program; and that no changes in governmental organization are necessary to make possible the extension of the existing program in any of its phases. The activities in the social-security program for which provision has already extension of the existing program in any of its phases. The activities in the social-security program for which provision has already been made in the insular department of health are as follows: Public-health service, maternal and child-health work, child welfare, including aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind. The department of health consists of two sections: the public-health section, directed by a medical officer who is a specialist in public health; and the public-welfare section, directed by a physician, a specialist in institutional administration.

Among the duties of the public-health section is the direction of local health work, including maternal and child health, through public-health units.

public-health units.

Engaged in these activities are: 28 full-time health officers, a specialist in charge of the bureau of maternal and infant hygiene, 14 clinic physicians, 132 public-health nurses paid by the insular government, and 50 additional public-health nurses paid from Federal relief funds. The standards for the employment of personnel are equal to those required by the United States Public Health Service. The methods and the results will compare favilthms. Health Service. The methods and the results will compare favorably with those of any similar organization in the continental United States. The maternal and child-health program includes the supervision of prenatal and postnatal teaching, the supervision of midwives, and the operation of 167 milk stations for teaching the care of infants. These activities are supported by insular funds, local funds, and relief funds. The relief funds devoted to these purposes amount to approximately $240,000 annually, but will not be available after June 30, 1936. The insular funds available for the general public-health activities and the maternal and child-health activities of the public-health section are as follows:

For public-health units_____ For bureau of infant hygiene___ $376, 574, 75 11, 996, 75 Fund for milk stations, approximately 12,000.00

These funds do not include local appropriations which are made for public-health units and milk stations.

Among the duties of the public-welfare section of the insular department of health are included the care, education, and voca-tional training of dependent children and of the blind. In this work the section has the assistance of the board of child welfare, which supervises the social investigations of dependent children and aids in finding homes for dependent children who can be cared for outside of institutions. The insular funds assigned to this work in the current budget are as follows:

Division of social service	$8,780.00
Boys' charity school	72, 175. 70
Girls' charity school	58, 099. 75
Child-welfare board	2, 370.00
Asylum for the blind	28, 603. 25
Institute for the blind	10 849 50

The Social Security Act provides for aid to a comprehensive Nation-wide public-health program through an annual appropriation of not more than $8,000,000. This appropriation is to be allotted to the several States and Territories by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. In order to pareral of the United States Funic Health Service. In order to participate in the plan, it is understood that State or Territorial organizations must have a health department which provides as a minimum on a full-time basis the services listed below: (a) A qualified full-time State or Territorial health officer; (b) adequate provision for the administrative guidance of local health service; (c) an acceptable vital statistics service; (d) an acceptable State public-health laboratory service; (e) adequate services for state. public-health laboratory service; (e) adequate services for study, promotion, and supervision of maternal and child health; (f) special service for the study, promotion, and guidance of local activities for the control of preventable diseases and for health promotion; (g) services for study, promotion, and supervision of environmental sanitation.

mental sanitation.

The following are understood to be the conditions required for participation of a local health service through the State or Territorial organization: (1) The public health services of the city, county, or district should be under the direction of a full-time health officer; (2) the personnel of the city, county, or district health department should include, in addition to the full-time health officer, such medical assistants, public health nurses, sanitation officers, and clerks as will insure at least a minimum of effective health service commensurate with the population and effective health service commensurate with the population and health problem of the area concerned.

The public health section of the insular department of health and the public health units under its direction comply with all of these requirements.

The objectives for participation in the general public health program of the Social Security Act would be:

1. To extend the service of public health units to the parts of the island which are not now served.

2. To strengthen the services now rendered by the addition of new trained personnel.

3. To provide additional specialized training for existing personnel.

sonnel.

Under title V of the Social Security Act the Secretary of Labor, through the Children's Bureau, is authorized to administer an annual appropriation for grants to the States of $8,150,000. This includes $3,800,000 for maternal and child-birth service and $1,500,000 for child-welfare service. Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, Chief of the Children's Bureau, states the purposes of the maternal and child-health appropriation in the following paragraph:

"The primary purpose of these portions of the act is to extend and strengthen services for mothers and children in rural areas, in areas suffering from severe economic distress, and among groups.

in areas suffering from severe economic distress, and among groups in special need. These are the people who have been hitherto, for the most part, outside the reach of health and welfare services that have been more generally available in cities."

Miss Lenroot also states that a uniform allotment of $20,000 is to be made to each State and that this sum is to be supplemented in accordance with the number of births in the State and in accordance with the financial need of the State. The Insular Department of Health of Puerto Rico, through its bureau of infant hygiene and its public-health units, is able and ready to extend and improve its maternal and child-health services as intended in this portion of the Social Security Act. The previous work of these dependencies of the department of health meets the standards of the children's bureau, and it can comply with anticipated future requirements.

With reference to that portion of the social-security program which is related to child welfare, Miss Lenroot has the following to say: "The appropriation of $1,500,000 for child welfare, to be to say: "The appropriation of $1,500,000 for child welfare, to be allotted $10,000 to each State and the remainder on the basis of rural population, is to be available for cooperation with State public-welfare agencies in establishing, extending, and strengthening, especially in predominantly rural areas, public-welfare services for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children, and children in danger of becoming delinquent. They are to be used for payment of part of the cost of district, county, or other local child-welfare services in areas predominantly rural, and for developing State services for the encouragement and assistance of adequate methods of community child-welfare orassistance of adequate methods of community child-welfare or-ganization in areas predominantly rural and other areas of special

Work of this type is already in progress in the public-welfare section of the insular department of health, and without changing section of the insular department of health, and without changing the present organization it can be greatly extended. The principal change which would be required would be the addition of field personnel to aid the specialists now in charge of child-welfare work. The expenditure on child welfare, given in detail above, provides ample justification for a Federal allotment of $10,000 for this purpose under the terms of the social-security program.

The Social Security Act also provides for aid to the States and Territories for care of the blind. For many years the insular department of health has done carefully planned work in the treatment and education of the blind. The annual expenditures for this purpose, as shown above, total more than $48,000, but there is much more work which could be done if additional funds could be obtained.

obtained.

It is not the purpose of this brief memorandum to outline all of the work of the insular department of health. Only those activities have been mentioned which have a definite relationship to the ties have been mentioned which have a definite relationship to the social-security program. It has been shown that the two sections of the insular department of health can provide a sufficient amount of skilled supervision to administer such additional resources as might be available under the terms of the Social Security Act, and the fact that work of a high quality is being done now is sufficient guaranty of the continuation of high standards if additional resources were available. No one questions the need of Puerto Rico for the type of work covered by the Social Security Act. Even the amounts available to individual States under that act might not fully meet the need, but valuable services could be extended to many persons who are not now reached. to many persons who are not now reached.

E. Garrido Morales, M. D., Dr. P. H.,

Commissioner of Health.

STATEMENT ON WORKERS' EDUCATION AND SOCIAL WELFARE, BY RAFAEL

The Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico, representing over 80,000 loyal American citizens, begs to submit to you the following facts: First, our labor organization was founded in the year 1902. This was the first organized group in Puerto Rico who for years sought American citizenship, economic justice, and the rehabilitation of the masses of the island. No social, economic, or political association has worked harder and exercised so much influence in behalf of the establishment and development of American institutions in Puerto Rico than the Free Federation of Workingmen. The history of the hardships endured, sacrifices made, burdens borne, betterment secured, the responsible positions attained despite antagonism of its foes has best been told in the annual proceedings of the conventions of the American Federation of Jahor since 1999 eration of Labor since 1898.

In view of our unchallenged record, of our sincere belief in and efforts for the progress and social and economic welfare of the Puerto Rican workers and the people in general, we felt that we should have been included in the organization of an insular and Federal agency to help prosecute the program the President put into the hands of the Federal administration.

Our labor movement has been prominent in the development of vocational training and workers' education. This part of the program could have been entrusted to those who have directly been concerned with labor advancement and who have a sympathetic understanding of labor problems. But unfortunately this work will be in the hands of other persons who will beget negative results.

The set-up has been in operation for 1 year, and during this time very little work has been accomplished to bring about actual benefits to the masses of the people. In fact, we have seen the lack of sympathy and unwillingness on the part of those administering the program in social and educational fields to accept any suggestions which the labor people might make in the way of helping the masses of the people. Our experience and struggle in the labor field have not been taken into consideration, which is well demonstrated by the fact that the P. R. R. A. (Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration) is paying coffee laborers a 60 Reconstruction Administration) is paying coffee laborers cent per day wage.

In our island we have a permanent army of unemployed who need work and education. Education gives the worker freedom of choice and individuality. It enables him to protect himself and also gives him vision to solve his difficulties and to order his own ers—the masses of the people.

This work should have been undertaken with the assistance of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico and under the direction and cooperation of the Department of Labor. The labor federation was founded for an unselfish purpose, its efforts have always been bent upon the protection and assistance of human beings. It has been a great force for the uplift of the workers and for obtaining consideration of the human element as much as it possibly could in industry, through legislation, through social-welfare concepts and ideas. In the political field we have taken advantage of our civil rights and of every opportunity which in a fair degree promised tangible results in the interests of the workers—the masses of the people.

The recognition of organized labor and the selection of a teachers' training center for men and women who desire to prepare themselves for learning industrial, economic, and social subjects should be the first step in the great program of rehabilitation, requiring a true knowledge of labor's wants which in a large measure may determine the well-being of society. If the rehabilitation machinery is going adequately to discharge its responsibilities in the education of workers, it should take contractors of these sentences. the education of workers, it should take cognizance of these social problems in relation to labor.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 1 week from tomorrow, on the 15th of April, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to take only a moment in respect to my remarks about the Private Calendar a moment ago. I overlooked the Committee on Claims. I think I should say that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Kennedy], chairman of the Committee on Claims, is one of the best chairmen in the House. He is able, and a faithful worker. He has rendered a distinguished service to this House in the way that he has handled claims that come before the Committee on Claims.

I took the floor to talk about the St. Lawrence waterway project. I think one of the most unfortunate things that ever happened to this country was the failure of the ratification of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty with Canada in the Senate. Last week the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] and myself called together a group of Members of the House who were interested in that project. A permanent organization was formed. Today we had another meeting. We met with Mr. A. O. Moreaux, of Minnesota. He is executive director of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association. We also met with Mr. R. F. Malia, of Wisconsin. He is secretary of the Great Lakes Harbor Association, and we all of us pledged our support in cooperation with the Senators interested in the proposition.

The following news item from the Duluth News Tribune under date of April 1, 1936, explains the purpose of the new congressional organization:

Members of Congress interested in the St. Lawrence waterway project perfected a permanent organization today when the group met in the committee room of the Rivers and Harbors Committee executive committee was authorized and a motion adopted to call a meeting early next week and invite every Member of the House and Senate to join the organization. * * * Congressman Bernard J. Gehrmann, of Wisconsin, submitted a resolution pledging the congressional group to take vigorous steps to secure the adoption of a treaty with Canada and the construction of the seaway channel. The organization also adopted a resolution pledging cooperation with outside groups and organizations which have for their purpose the completion of the seaway project. project.

The resolution which was offered by Congressman Gehr-MANN and adopted at the meeting on March 31, 1936, reads as Whereas there is pending in the United States Senate a treaty with Canada providing for the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway for the economic benefit of both countries; and Whereas the ratification of a treaty is essential to the commencement of this project, which will provide a 27-foot waterway from the sea to all ports on the Great Lakes and will result in developing for the benefit of America more than 1,250,000 horse-power of electrical energy, and whereas the ratification of such a treaty will result in the cheapening of transportation of export crops, and will have a profoundly favorable effect on the development of agriculture and industry throughout the Great Lakes and Midwestern States:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Members of Congress from the Lake Resolved, That we, the Members of Congress from the Lake States, do hereby pledge our vigorous and active support to a program which will bring about the adoption of a treaty and the commencement of said project so necessary to sound national development, the benefits of which will be enjoyed by more than 40,000,000 people in the United States who gain their livelihood from agriculture production and manufacturing; and be it further Resolved, That we bind ourselves to use every legitimate effort to bring about the adoption of a treaty and the construction of said seaway; and

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein a resolution which our group passed last week, together with a very short newspaper account of the meeting and an editorial.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. What is the editorial to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. PITTENGER. It simply calls attention to our making a step in the right direction, that is, having Members of the House cooperate with Members of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think the editorial ought not to go into the RECORD.

Mr. PITTENGER. I withdraw that part of my request, Mr.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we have been letting in editorials and everything else for the last 2 weeks or a month.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not heard of it.

Mr. SNELL. I have heard a lot of it. I think it is a good rule to object to the inclusion of editorials in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD.

Mr. PITTENGER. I withdraw that portion of my request. Mr. SNELL. And I hope that policy will be carried out in the future.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall try to carry it out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the resolution to which he referred and the news item. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein the remarks to which I referred this morning in the Congressional Record and to have the portions that were inserted that I consider wrongfully printed in italics.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record and to include therein certain portions of the RECORD to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GUIDEO BISCARO AND OTHERS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 982, H. R. 4915, for the relief of Guideo Biscaro, Giovanni Polin, Spironello Antonio, Arturo Bettio, Carlo Biscaro, and Antonio Vannin.

The gentleman who objected to the bill this morning has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 982. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BEITER. There were no objections on the gentleman's side. I have talked to the two members of the committee.

Mr. SNELL. This is a rather unusual request. Private Calendar has been concluded and the House has gone on with other business. I do not want to dispute the gentleman's word, but it is not the proper thing to bring this up after we have concluded the calendar and the people most interested have gone away. I do not know whether they object or not.

Mr. BEITER. There were no objections. I have taken it up with each member of the committee, and the only gentleman who objected was the gentleman from Missouri. I have explained the bill to him and he has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. SNELL. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state what that bill is about?

Mr. BEITER. The purpose of the bill is to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the beneficiaries named in the bill the sum of $3,500, which represents the amount of the bonds posted by the beneficiaries guaranteeing the presence in court of Virginia Nasato, Melchiore Miotto, Silvio Polin, Augustino Del Bianco, Daniel Biscaro, Augustin Taveron, and Emilio Miotto.

The aliens were taken into custody at Akron, N. Y., in the month of August 1925. The amount of a bond required for each alien was $500. The beneficiaries in the bill posted liberty bonds valued at $500 each, which are described in the receipts of the district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, dated August 29, 1925, the receipts having been made on form 553A-1 of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. The receipts show that the bonds were received from Frank A. Corti, attorney for the beneficiaries of the bill, but on the reverse side of each. Corti certified that the bonds were received from the individuals named as beneficiaries in the bill.

The bonds were to be returned to those who posted them by the Immigration and Naturalization Service upon the appearance of the aliens at the Immigration Office for deportation. All the aliens with the exception of one was deported—the excepted one having been in the country illegally and having since proceeded toward citizenship. However, the bond posted for the latter is also forthcoming. The attorney engaged by the bondsmen to represent them failed to notify them of the date scheduled by the Immigration Service for the appearance of the aliens, and therefore they failed to call at the Immigration Office on the appointed date. The following day they were taken into custody by authorities of the Immigration and Naturalization Service from Black Rock.

Payment of the bonds has been withheld for approximately 11 years and it has inflicted great hardships on the bondsmen, some of whom were obliged to seek aid from the welfare Proof that the aliens and bondsmen were not notified by their legal counsel to appear at the Immigration Office at the appointed time is on file with the committee in the form of sworn statements from the employers of the aliens to the effect that they were at work at the time they should have appeared at the Immigration Office. These statements were made by members of the Beaver Products Co. and the Universal Gypsum & Lime Co., of Buffalo, in which firms the aliens were employed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to what the gentleman has had to say and it seems to me this is a matter of such character that it should wait over until the committee is present and then have it taken up. So I suggest that the gentleman for the time being withdraw his request and make it later when the committee members are present.

Mr. BEITER. The committee of objectors on the gentleman's side have no objection, because I have taken it up with each Member, and the committee on the Democratic side have no objection. The gentleman who objected was the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. TABER. I think they should be here when it is taken up. It is a matter that has stood for 11 years. When anything has stood as long as that, it seems to me it requires the objectors to be present. Unless the gentleman will withhold his request for the time being, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. BEITER. I will withdraw my request for the time being, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the gentleman has the right to renew his request later.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow morning, following disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may have permission to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

TOBACCO COMPACTS BETWEEN STATES

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. O'CONNOR], I call up House Resolution 476.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 476

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12037, a bill relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather important measure. I doubt very much if many Members of the House know it is going to be taken up this afternoon. For that reason I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twelve Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. Rogers, is detained on duty with a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs. Otherwise he would be present at this roll call.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin]. I yield 5 minutes to myself.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this rule will make in order the consideration of H. R. 12037, which is a bill giving the consent of Congress to the tobacco-producing States to enter into compacts or agreements among themselves with reference to the control of the production of tobacco.

There is no doubt about the fact that the tobacco program under the A. A. A. was an almost unbelievable success. The farmers made money under it. The tobacco manufacturers made money under it. The consumers of tobacco paid not a nickel more while it was in force, and it cost the Government of the United States not a penny. In fact, the Treasury has profited to the extent of more than a million dollars as a result of that program. The decision of the Supreme Court in the A. A. A. case swept away that program and the Court said that the Federal Government does not have power, under the Constitution, to inaugurate any such program. While it does not say specifically that the States do have such power, the decision does say that if that power exists anywhere, it exists in the State governments. This bill does no more than to give the consent of Congress to the tobacco-producing States to enter into some agreements or compacts among themselves for the purpose of seeing, if they can, under the State constitutions and under State control, make effective a continuance of this great program.

The bill does not convey to the States any power they do not now enjoy. I come from a great tobacco-producing State. It cannot test the question of whether it has the power under its constitution to inaugurate a control program, because it dare not cut its production until the other States producing the same type of tobacco agree to cut their production. The States will have no more power after the passage of this bill than they have now under their constitutions. The only thing additional they will have or possibly can have is the naked consent of this Congress to agree among themselves upon a program. We simply invest them with the power to enter into a uniform, cooperative plan throughout the States which produce a particular type of tobacco.

This bill means the difference between poverty and bankruptcy on the part of the tobacco farmers and prosperity that puts them upon a right footing in the world without costing anybody else anything. If they can carry forward this program of the past 3 years, they cannot only pay all their old debts, redeem their farms, wipe out back taxes, but they will have money in their pockets with which to buy what they need. This money would go into the great manufacturing centers of the United States as it has been doing. I want to see the farmers of my territory not only have a chance to live but also to be able to buy automobiles from Michigan, jewelry from Massachusetts, and other manufactured articles from other sections.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire, not exceeding 30 minutes, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it has been very difficult for me to get any satisfactory information out of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture on this bill, and I have examined them rather carefully. The only people who appeared before the committee were Members of the House of Representatives from certain tobacco-producing States-not all of them by any means-and two representatives of the Department of Agriculture, who were instrumental in drafting the bill before us and, I understand, the bill passed by the Legislature of the State of Virginia. No producers appeared before the Committee on Agriculture, no handlers of tobacco, no economists, nor anyone else, to discuss the theory of the legislation, what is sought to be accomplished by it, or what the probable effect of it will be. There was very little said about the necessity for it and very few figures given relative to production, surplus, prices, consumption, and related subjects. As a matter of fact, the father of the legislation had no sooner got started to make a statement in explanation of the bill before someone raised the question of the legality or the constitutionality of some of the provisions of it, and practically the entire time of the committee from that moment on was devoted to a discussion of the constitutionality or legality of those provisions and practically nothing was said on the merits of the legislation.

The Committee on Agriculture, I take it from the statements made by the chairman of the committee and others as they appear in the hearings, was busy that morning, had arranged another program it desired to carry out and wanted to devote a few minutes only to the consideration of this legislation. As time went on a discussion was had between members of the committee relating to the other matters. Finally it was decided to meet in the afternoon to give further consideration to this legislation. At the afternoon session the same procedure was gone through as in the morning and the discussion of the constitutionality or legality of some of the provisions of the bill was continued by Members of the House of Representatives and the attorney from the Department of Agriculture. This comprised the entire hearings before the committee on the legislation. So we are called upon to consider this rather novel and important piece of legislation with practically no hearings before the Committee on Agriculture on the merits of the legislation to guide us.

What are we asked to do? We are asked to approve in advance not a compact but compacts between the different tobacco-producing States of the Union. Very little tobacco is produced in Michigan, not enough to be a factor in the industry commercially, and until I got to studying this legislation I did not realize there were so many tobaccoproducing States. It appears there are a great many States producing different types of tobacco. The difference between the types is very distinct. As I understand the provisions of the bill, it is proposed to allow those States producing these different types of tobacco to enter into agreements pertaining to the particular type which they produce to the exclusion of all other States, not only the States which produce no tobacco, but those which produce some other type as well; so there may be, as I understand it, a great many different compacts between different States in regard to these different types of tobacco. Under the definitions on page 3 of the bill, the following types of tobacco are referred to: Flue-cured tobacco, burley tobacco. fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco, cigar-filler tobacco, cigar-binder tobacco, and cigar-wrapper tobacco. There may, thus, be six different sets of compacts entered into by the States which produce these different types, and we are asked to pass this legislation approving whatever they agree to, with some qualifications, here in advance.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it to get away from the antitrust laws that they are forming these compacts?

Mr. MAPES. If the legislation is binding, if it is constitutional, they certainly will get away from the antitrust laws.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why can they not do it today?

Mr. MAPES. Well, as I understand the situation, the Supreme Court having held that the National Government could not limit production, that that could be done only by the States, if at all, they are attempting to circumvent that decision as much as possible. It is the assumption of this legislation, as I understand it, that each individual State has the right to control production by itself, and it proposes to have Congress say that the States may make a compact to work together for that purpose. Whether that can be done or not I will leave it to others to say.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Boileav], a member of the Committee on Agriculture, raised the question in committee as to the legality of legislation which authorized in advance compacts between the States. On page 47 of the hearings, he used this language:

May I make my position clear by saying that it must be very apparent that we must either incorporate in this law the exact compact which the States will accept, or we must wait until the States have entered into a compact before we can ratify it and give it any effect?

Who answered the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin? The attorney from the Department of Agriculture, who appeared before the committee in defense of the legislation, made this statement, not directly in answer to the question but in the course of his remarks:

We have no precedent by way of a court decision where the facts are identical with the proposed bill. We have a legislative precedent in the act which this Congress passed in February, I believe, of 1935, known as the Connally Act, which prohibited the movement of contraband oil in violation of State laws.

It seems to me if there ever was a far-fetched argument made by any lawyer before a court to sustain a proposition of law, it is that statement of the attorney for the Department of Agriculture in support of this legislation. I happen to know something about the Connally Act. The Connally Act had nothing to do with compacts between the States. It was as far removed from compacts between States as anything could be. It made it illegal to ship into interstate commerce oil produced in violation of State law. That was all

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from North Caro-

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman understands, of course, that the hearings referred to were held on H. R. 11928, whereas the bill now under consideration is H. R. 12037?

Mr. MAPES. Well, the copy of hearings I have says, "Hearing before the Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, on H. R. 11928 (H. R. 12037 reported)." Are there any other hearings?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman understand that the provisions of the first bill referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin in the hearings mentioned by the gentleman himself with reference to the unconstitutional features of the first bill have been eliminated?

Mr. MAPES. No; I did not so understand. May I ask the gentleman, Were there separate hearings on the bill to which the gentleman is referring?

Mr. UMSTEAD. There were reported hearings on both bills. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the bill now under consideration there is a specific statute referred to and incorporated in the hearings which the gentleman could have read, which meets the very objection raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Boileau].

Mr. MAPES. I think I should correct the gentleman to this extent: There is a copy of a bill appearing in the hearings, but the statute to which the bill before us refers is not in the hearings and was not in the hearings had before the Committee on Rules. I was able to get a copy of this statute only this morning.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman understands the statute passed by the State of Virginia is similar to the one inserted from the State of South Carolina?

Mr. MAPES. I so understand.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Boileau] has withdrawn all objections to this bill, as I understand, and is now supporting it?

Mr. MAPES. No; I have no way of knowing that without talking with the gentleman, and I have not been able to do that since reading the hearings. I am relying on the hearings. The only information which I have is in the hearings. I may say to the gentleman, it does not seem to me there is any particular difference with respect to the point I am trying to make. We are asked to give our approval in advance to the compacts of these States without knowing what those compacts are going to contain, and that was the point that the gentleman from Wisconsin was criticizing.

Mr. UMSTEAD. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the act which is now presented to this House specifically refers to the Virginia statute, and requires that all statutes passed by other compacting States must be uniform therewith. May I ask the gentleman another question? He referred to the fact that the controversial sections were discussed at the original hearings of the Agricultural Committee both in the forenoon and afternoon; but does the gentleman know that those sections have been eliminated from this bill?

Mr. MAPES. To what sections does the gentleman refer? Mr. UMSTEAD. Sections 3, 4, and 11, sections 3 and 4 dealing with the question of interstate commerce and section 11 prescribing a penalty for the violation of those sections. They have been removed, and I take it the gentleman was in error. They are not now in the bill.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the gentleman whether the Virginia Legislature had passed the act referred to when these hearings were held?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Yes; but there was nothing in sections 3 and 4 of the original bill which referred to that.

Mr. MAPES. Why were those sections which were so controversial put in the bill?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Those sections were put in the bill when it was originally drawn. There are many of us who still believe those sections are valid and would be helpful to this legislation, but they were cut out because some controversy arose. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Boileau] rereferred to by the gentleman, has withdrawn his objection and is now supporting the bill. Will not the gentleman do likewise in view of the action of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MAPES. No; I think the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin, as stated in the hearings, was sound and still applies. I may also say to the gentleman that I do not believe in the doctrine of scarcity upon which the legislation is based.

I believe there are more people in the United States interested in the consumption of tobacco than there are in the production of it, and I do not believe this Congress ought to place it within the power of the producers of tobacco to enter into a combination to determine how much they will produce and what the price shall be to the consuming public all over the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on just one point?

Mr. MAPES. I would like to continue, but if the gentleman desires to ask a question, I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I desire to propound a question to the gentleman.

Is it not true that the gentleman was opposed to the A. A. A. and is it not true that the gentleman's opposition to this bill is based solely upon his opposition, as stated a moment ago, to the program of the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. MAPES. No; not altogether, and if I did oppose it the Supreme Court sustained me.

Mr. UMSTEAD. And does not the gentleman-

Mr. MAPES. Just a moment. We have taken a good many leaps in the dark legislatively in the last few years. We have delegated power to Federal officials a great many times when we had no idea what those officials were going to do, but this is the first time we have been asked to delegate to the producers of a commodity such power as this legislation proposes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MAPES. In just a moment.

Insofar as I am concerned I think we should wait until we know what the compacts are before we approve them.

We passed a compact for the oil-producing States; I have a copy of it before me, but the oil-producing States entered into the compact before the Congress was asked to approve it. Here we are called upon to give our consent in advance. If the tobacco-producing States will get together, make a compact, and then come to Congress with it, give us an opportunity to look it over and study it, it would then be time to pass judgment upon it, but it is a violent thing for Congress to give the States a blank check, so to speak, or to say to them to go as far as they like. I am not willing to do that.

Furthermore, there are many provisions in the bill before us that have to do with the administration of the act by the Secretary of Agriculture. The scope of this bill goes further than giving approval to the State compacts. It goes so far as to state that if the States raising a certain type of tobacco enter into an agreement or form a compact limiting production in those States, then the Secretary of Agriculture can control the production of tobacco in Puerto Rico. He can tell every farmer, not in the different States, but every farmer in Puerto Rico how much tobacco he can raise.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield—he wants to be fair?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am certain that the gentleman does not mean to say that the Secretary of Agriculture would have any authority to make allocations as to how much tobacco any farmer may raise.

Mr. MAPES. I was referring to Puerto Rico. The Secretary of Agriculture has that authority as far as the production of tobacco in Puerto Rico is concerned, provided the States which raise a similar kind of tobacco enter into a compact. The State commissions are to have that authority in the States. I think the gentleman did not understand me

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is the gentleman from Michigan reading from the Virginia statute or the substitute for House bill 348 or is he reading from the bill originally introduced?

Mr. MAPES. I am reading from the statute of Virginia. Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. A substitute for the bill originally introduced in the Virginia Legislature?

Mr. MAPES. I am reading from the act. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] calls my attention to the fact that the same language is in the House bill before us.

There is another peculiar provision in this Virginia act. It seems to me that the tobacco-producing States are trying to eat their cake and have it, too. This act does not necessarily limit the production of tobacco, because it allows the producers of tobacco to request the handlers of tobacco to get certificates from the State commissions, or, if they are handling Puerto Rican tobacco, then from the Secretary of Agriculture, to sell their surplus production to these dealers; and what do these handlers of tobacco in such cases have to pay for these marketing certificates, so called? This is the provision in the Virginia statute:

The rate of such charge shall be determined by the commission and shall be not less than 25 percent or more than 50 percent of the gross value of said surplus tobacco covered by the marketing certificate.

As I say, I have had to examine this legislation hastily. That is one reason why I have been so free in yielding to those who have studied it. It seems to me that this bill does this: It says to these State commissions, "You can limit the production of tobacco up to a certain extent, but any producer of tobacco, any farmer, who does not want to live within that limit can call upon a dealer to handle his surplus production." Then the dealer in turn goes to the State commission, or, if he is a dealer in Puerto Rican tobacco, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and, upon paying this 25 or 50 percent of the value of this surplus tobacco, he has a right to buy, and the farmer has a right to produce and sell all the surplus he wants to.

I think we ought not to pass upon legislation as important as this in the dark, without knowing what it is going to do, and without a further explanation of it than has been given, and without knowing what the tobacco-producing States are going to agree to.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] is one of the ablest and most valuable men in the House. He is senior in service, I believe, on his side of the House. He stated that he had had no time to study this measure, but had he had the time I am sure that he would not have fallen into some of the grievous errors he has made here today about this bill. In the very outset he stated that this authorizes a compact between all of the tobaccogrowing States. Let us get that perfectly clear in the start. The only thing that this bill does is to authorize a compact between what is known as the flue-cured tobacco-growing States, and they are the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, and such other types of tobacco grown in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky. So far as all other States are concerned, it merely gives the consent of Congress for those States to negotiate a compact and then come back here later for ratification. The Congress in the past has given its consent to about 150 compacts of different kinds, and we come here in a constitutional way seeking one for tobacco. The tobacco growers are not coming here seeking any special favors. They would certainly have the right to come here seeking a special favor ahead of any commodity that I know of. Do gentlemen know that last year the internal-revenue taxes received from tobacco amounted to over $478,000,000; that the Federal Government collected two or three times more in taxes for the flue-cured crop of tobacco than the farmers received for that tobacco? I hold in my hand a 15-cent package of cigarettes. Taking the price that the farmer received last year, he gets 11/4 cents for the tobacco that goes into that package of cigarettes. Most of the time due to low prices he got less than 1 cent. The manufacturer gets over 31/2 cents on each package of 20 cigarettes. The Federal Government comes along and imposes a tax of 6 cents on that one package of cigarettes, while the profit of the wholesaler and the retailer combined amounts to 41/4 cents, bringing the total up to 15 cents, which the consumer pays. That is what Congress has done to tobacco, and in many of the States there is sometimes a tax of 1 or 2 or 3 cents added to the 15 cents that the consumer must pay for this.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. In other words, the growers of flue-cured tobacco last year received approximately 20 cents a pound for what they made. The United States Government collected over $1 a pound on all fluecured tobacco used in the manufacture of cigarettes?

Mr. WARREN. That is absolutely correct.
Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The consumption of cigarettes in the last 2 years has increased tremendously. Can the gentleman explain that, and what effect the tax would have on curtailing the use of cigarettes?

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I think the tax is excessive. I have always thought that the tax ought to be reduced. It | prior to 1932. [Applause.]

is true, as the gentleman has just stated, that the consumption of cigarettes last year reached the very highest point it has ever reached in this country.

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MAIN. Did the gentleman mean "profit" or "cost of manufacture"?

Mr. WARREN. I meant gross income per package of 20 cigarettes.

Mr. MAIN. But does that 31/2 cents represent manufactured cost or is it his profit?

Mr. WARREN. I said gross income of the manufacturer. think these figures are correct.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am interested more in the construction of the Virginia statute, section 8, beginning on page 13 of that act, which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] discussed at length.

Mr. WARREN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was coming to that.

Mr. MAY. When he started the discussion of that I was inclined to agree with him, but upon reading the statute two or three times I find it simply provides that during the month of October in any year 10 percent of the producers of a particular kind of tobacco may, by petition, call a referendum, or the Governor may, by proclamation, call a referendum. Then on that referendum, after the election is held, if 66% percent of the producers of that tobacco vote to cancel the provisions of the law or set it aside, that may be done.

Mr. WARREN. That is absolutely true. Now, the gentleman from Michigan asked why is this brought before the House now. I will tell you why. Because time is the absolute essence. If we are to accomplish anything under this compact, then it has to become a law within the course of the next 10 days. The Virginia Legislature has acted and adjourned. One house in the South Carolina Legislature has already acted, and we have been told they will complete their action this week. We also have been reliably informed that if the Congress grants this permission, the Governor of North Carolina will immediately call an extra session of that legislature. So far as Georgia is concerned, for the year of 1936 only, it provides they can do their part by a signing up of tobacco growers, on account of the fact that we know their Governor will not call an extra session of the legislature.

Tobacco in North Carolina will be in the ground by the 1st day of May. The Department advises us that there will be an increase of from 7 to 10 percent over last year. Last year we had an increase of the flue-cured crop of about 345,-000,000 pounds. The price that was paid for 556,000,000 pounds the year before was nearly the same as that paid for the larger crop last year. We know from experience, and we know from the successful operation of this plan in those States for 3 years, that it is desired by 99% percent of all the farmers in our State. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cooley] attended a mass meeting on Saturday in his home county, where an actual poll was made of 1,500 tobacco farmers, and every single, solitary one of them voted for this legislation and urged the Congress to pass it. There has been going on in our State, in at least 50 counties, for the last 3 weeks mass meetings attended by hundreds, and in some instances by thousands, of farmers. In every case they have gone on record unanimously in favor of this legislation.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Is it not a fact that under the operations of the A. A. A. you had a larger production of tobacco than you had for many years?

Mr. WARREN. The A. A. A., unfortunately, over the protest of every single man in this House from a tobacco section, permitted an increase of that crop last year. As a result of that, we have today the second largest carry-over in all history. Unless this legislation is passed the tobacco farmer is going to be returned to that state of serfdom that existed

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has expired.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, what brief remarks I have to make will indicate that I am strongly in favor of the adoption of the rule and the passage of the bill which this rule makes in order.

The able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK], a member of the Rules Committee, has called to the attention of the House the fact that under the Smith-Kerr tobacco bill, the A. A. A., not only was the well-being of the tobacco grower promoted, not only was the tobacco farmer raised from the level of economic servitude and financial distress, but while that was true the tobacco consumers paid not a cent more for the tobacco which they consumed than they did before the Smith-Kerr Act was enacted.

My good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has called attention to the large amount of revenue that the Treasury derives from the tax on processed or manufactured tobaccos. It is well known to all the membership of this House that the income tax, both corporate and individual, is the largest source of revenue of the Federal Government. Second to that is the tobacco tax, producing last year, as was mentioned by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] $470,000,000 plus, and estimated to produce this year above $500,000,000.

I never have been a believer in special privilege being granted to any class of people, yet I maintain that those engaged in the production of a commodity that yields to the Federal Government this large amount of revenue are entitled to thoughtful dealing with their problems, if not some special consideration. All the farmers ask is to be given an opportunity to continue receiving in the future the benefits they derived in the past as a result of the tobacco-control legislation. If this is done, it is not going to impose any heavy burden on any class of people or on any section of the country.

Those of you who always have believed, and still believe, in a high protective tariff whereby the manufacturers receive special benefits directly should be the last to oppose this legislation. This being so, why should we here split hairs over constitutional technicalities?

The tobacco growers believe that if this or some similar legislation is not enacted soon, then the same tragic conditions that obtained before the Kerr-Smith Act was enacted will again prevail.

May I express the earnest hope that the Congress will speedily enact the necessary legislation proposed in the bill this rule makes in order. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to note that some rather strong resistance has developed to this bill. I am sure most of the Members know how I think and feel with respect to all proposals to extend Federal power to the point of endeavoring to control or regulate production. Time and time again production has been held to be a domestic question. Congress in its effort to enact legislation along this line has not met with complete success.

There is no delegation of Federal power in this legislation, no attempt to delegate Federal power to any of the States. The purpose of the bill is simply to give congressional consent to a group of States undertaking to do that which States acting separately may do. This is what the bill proposes and all it proposes. If production be a domestic question-and in my judgment it is a domestic question—there is nothing wrong in Congress giving consent to a group of affected States; that is, as in this instance, States where tobacco is produced, undertaking to exercise State influence upon a State's problem.

In all of this is involved the question of unlawful taking. I concede that if a State undertakes to deny the individual farmer the right to employ his land in such manner as he may see fit, the question of unlawful taking may be raised. This question, however, will be fought out within the States.

Be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress, through the pending bill, is not undertaking in anywise to delegate any Federal power to any State. Congress might do for the wheat section what it is undertaking to do for the tobacco section; that is, give consent to wheat States to enter into State compacts to perform purely a State function.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is the proposition before the House that of giving consent to a compact the provisions of which have already been drawn and agreed to, or are we being asked to give consent to a compact to be negotiated in the future along broad lines laid down in the Virginia Tobacco

Mr. COX. I may say to the gentleman that there is nothing unusual in granting consent to the formation of State compacts. This is the usual and customary manner in which the grants are made. I do not think Congress should withhold consent until a compact is formed. I do not want to see Federal power brought to play upon the question of a compact. I want that to be a voluntary act on the part of the interested States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be granted 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done. The time is under the control of the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, 4 minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was presented to the Rules Committee we felt there was an emergency, in view of the immediately approaching tobacco planting season. Secondly, we felt that the State primarily interested in this commodity, which is different from other commodities, were entitled to enter into these compacts if they saw fit and that the Federal Government should grant its consent. We felt that each State-and I am a believer in States' rights-was entitled to determine for itself what was for the best interests of the inhabitants of that State: and we felt that when these four great States concerned with flue-cured tobacco agreed to a compact that the Congress was doing its duty in agreeing to the compact.

Questions have been raised as to the constitutionality of this bill, that under the provisions of the Constitution the claim being that the States must first enter into the compact before Congress can act. I have looked into this question only slightly, but I believe the general terms of this proposed compact are sufficiently set forth in the Virginia statute to authorize the Congress to act, because the Congress knows substantially what compacts are going to be entered into. I do not believe that the Congress should insist, under the provisions of the Constitution, on knowing every minute detail with reference to an agreement between the States.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then the gentleman thinks that in the present situation the Congress has sufficient knowledge of the nature, character, and provisions of the compacts to act?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do. Mr. LEHLBACH. I merely ask for information.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It seems to me, if the gentleman will allow me to say a word, that under the conditions precedent involved in this bill it is made absolutely certain what the effect and purpose of the compact will be, because it is predicated entirely, as I understand, on the fact that each of the States shall agree to the provisions of the Virginia law; so that makes it a matter of definiteness what the compact will be.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not dare contend against these constitutional lawyers. The Rules Committee felt this bill presented an exceptional instance of immediate importance, and for this reason the committee reported the rule. I hope the rule will pass the House, and I hope the bill will likewise pass.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Martin of Massachusetts), there were—ayes 88, noes 32. Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise a point of order against section 7, paragraph (a), of the bill. This section is virtually an appropriation reported by the Committee on Agriculture, which committee does not have authority to report appropriations.

The rule involved, as the Speaker knows, is rule XXI, section 4, reading as follows:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropria-tion be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was some confusion in the Chamber and I could not hear entirely the statement of the gentleman. Is he making the point of order that this is an appropriation which has not been acted upon by an appropriation committee?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; it is my contention, I may say to the gentleman, that paragraph (a), section 7, is subject to a

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I call the gentleman's attention, and also the attention of the Speaker, to the fact that this is a mere reallocation of funds that have already been appropriated by the Congress?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is not really a reallocation. It is the use of funds heretofore appropriated for this very purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I intended to say.

Mr. MAPES. Both of the gentlemen have admitted themselves out of court, according to the precedents, and if the Speaker has any question in regard to the matter I would like to be heard further for just a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. Section 7 (a) reads as follows:

For the purpose of administering this act the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend $300,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose out of funds appropriated by section 12 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended.

Jefferson's Manual, page 397, referring to the precedents on this question, says:

The term "appropriation" in the rule means the payment of funds from the Treasury and the words "warranted and make available for expenditure for payments" are equivalent to "is hereby appropriated" and therefore not in order.

That is from a decision in the Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.

It is further stated:

The words "available until expended", making an appropriation already made for 1 year available for ensuing years, are not in order.

And again:

Language reappropriating, making available, or diverting an appropriation or a portion of that appropriation already made for one purpose to another is not in order.

And further:

A direction to a departmental officer to pay a certain sum out of unexpended balances is equivalent to an appropriation and not in order. Language authorizing the use of funds of the Shipping Board is not in order. A direction to pay out of Indian trust funds is not in order.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a decision rendered in the Seventythird Congress. The debate was participated in by the present Speaker and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANK-HEAD], and the question was decided by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Lozier. It is an exact parallel to the case before us.

A point of order was raised by the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Beedy.

If the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], who interrupted me, will refresh their recollections, I think they will recall this discussion and the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at that time.

This identical question and practically the identical language were under consideration and the Chairman of the Committee, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Lozier, in rendering his decision, page 989 of the RECORD, said:

Is it not the use of money that has been allocated by an appropriation act for another purpose, and is not the effect of this lan-guage to take from the Treasury, without any further appropriation, funds that the Congress has heretofore appropriated for other purposes?

This really, if anything, goes further than an appropriation, because it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to take these funds and to use them. Chairman Lozier went on to say:

It seems to the present occupant of the chair that there is a very wide difference between the language "authorized to be expended" and "authorized to be appropriated." Here is a proposition not to authorize an appropriation. If this were a proposal to authorize an appropriation, then some additional act of Congress would be necessary to make the authorization effective, but this language provides that—"There is hereby authorized to be averaged at a congress."

"There is hereby authorized to be expended out of any unobligated moneys heretofore appropriated"—

While the language in this bill isfor the purposes of administering this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend $300,000.

Chairman Lozier continued:

Section 4 of the bill under consideration, to which this point of order is directed, reads as follows:

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act"—
Which implies, of course, an expenditure of public funds under the provisions of this act out of the Public Treasury—

"there is hereby authorized to be expended"—

Not hereafter appropriated, but to be expended-"under the direction of the President."

Now, what money is to be expended?

This is the language of Chairman Lozier.

Any money out of any unobligated moneys heretofore appropriated for public works.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman give the page of the RECORD from which he is reading?

Mr. MAPES. Page 989 of the Record of March 29, 1933, the first session of the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. O'CONNOR. When I first asked the gentleman from Michigan the question, I assumed that the money appropriated under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was for the very same purpose as the purpose proposed here. Of course, if it were not, it would be, in effect, a reallocation or a reappropriation and the gentleman would be correct. I think there were so many purposes contained in section 12, on looking at it, that the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAPES. I thought the gentleman would reach that conclusion upon a further consideration of the point of order.

Does the Chair desire to hear me further? The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] makes a point of order against section 7 (a), which reads as follows:

For the purpose of administering this act the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose, out of funds appropriated by section 12 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended.

The gentleman from Michigan calls attention to clause 4 of rule XXI, which provides:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

The question, of course, arises as to whether or not an appropriation made by a preceding Congress or by this Congress for a particular purpose may be diverted for another purpose not contemplated at the time the appropriation was made, under the rule which the Chair has just read.

were made in the Seventy-third Congress, first session, in which it is said-

Language reappropriating, making available or diverting an appropriation or a portion of an appropriation already made for one purpose to another is not in order.

Of course, we all know that the Committee on Agriculture is not authorized under the rules to report appropriations. In the opinion of the Chair it is very clear, in a reading of the section referred to, that the language constitutes a diversion of funds heretofore made by the Congress for an entirely different purpose and, therefore, sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] against section 7 (a).

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12037, relating to compacts and agreements among the States in which tobacco is produced, providing the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Christianson].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order that I may be able to direct a few questions to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I am asking these questions for the purpose of getting such information as will enable me to vote intelligently on the bill. It is true, is it not, that under the proposed compact a limitation is to be placed by the States that are parties thereto upon the acreage which farmers within the States may devote to the raising of tobacco?

Mr. JONES. There may or may not be. That depends upon the action of the States. As far as the National Government is concerned, there would be none.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. What provision, if any, does the bill contain that safeguards it against attack upon the ground that it is an effort by legislation to say that an individual owner may raise only so many acres of tobacco upon his land, and as such deprives him of his constitutional

Mr. JONES. That raises a number of questions. The question of the reasonableness of the law, for instance, is raised, and that is a question that we do not undertake to grant anything on. This does not change that status one way or the other. If North Carolina or Georgia or South Carolina or Kentucky or Pennsylvania undertake to enact an unconstitutional law, if they undertake to enact a law which deprives a citizen of some of his rights under the Bill of Rights under the Constitution, certainly the law will fall, but it will be their funeral. We do not grant or take any power on that subject.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman admits, does he not, that the purpose of the proposed compact is to legalize action by the States concerned in limiting production?

Mr. JONES. We simply give our consent for the States to enact such statutes as they may legally enact, without interference on our part. We grant no powers, we withhold no powers, except as we may give our consent under the Constitution to the formation of legitimate compacts.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Is it not true that what the resolution attempts to do is by a mere statute to authorize States to limit the use which individuals may make of their own lands in the pursuit of their lawful occupation, which limitation would constitute the taking of property without due process of law?

Mr. JONES. As I understand the matter, we simply grant our consent to compacts along the line of the Virginia statute. Of course, we do give our consent to compacts that

The gentleman from Michigan has read rulings which | may control production, but I think we confer no power upon the States to take private property without due process of law, as the gentleman well knows we could not do that.

> Mr. CHRISTIANSON. If such power is not granted, then I would say that this legislation will fail to accomplish the purpose for which it is intended.

> Mr. JONES. Then the gentleman should have no objection to it.

> Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I am sympathetic with the purpose of this resolution, which is to enable certain States to improve the condition of their tobacco farmers. If it were proposed to do this in a proper and lawful manner, I should vote for the bill.

> But if I understand the situation correctly, it is this: The State of Virginia has enacted a law which attempts by compulsory provisions to limit the number of acres a farmer may devote to tobacco. Such provisions are clearly in violation of the fourteenth amendment. Certain other States desire to pass identical laws. In order to make these laws mutually binding upon the States concerned, it is proposed that they enter into a compact—a compact to deprive their citizens of a right guaranteed by the Constitution. Congress is asked to ratify that compact.

In my opinion, the argument that if the State laws which are the subject matter of the proposed compact are invalid, the resolution ratifying the compact is pro tanto a nullity, constitutes no justification.

It might with equal force be argued that Congress is justified in passing unconstitutional statutes because, being unconstitutional, they are void, and the result of passing them is ultimately the same as if they had not been passed at all.

By ratifying this compact we are giving assent to a policy which contemplates taking away from citizens, at least until the courts can intervene, a right guaranteed by the Constitution.

I want to do all within my power to help agriculture. It is the predominate interest of my State. My own investments are almost all in farm land. I voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act, believing at the time that it was constitutional. I voted for the Soil Conservation Act. It is with regret that I confess that I voted for the Cotton Control Act, which embodied the same principle of compulsory regimentation that this resolution seems to contemplate.

Unless it can be shown that the statutes which will be the subject matter of the proposed compact provide for voluntary assent rather than compulsion, I shall be unable to support the pending resolution.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Andresen].

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to ratify an act of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, which provides that if the States of North and South Carolina and Georgia enact similar legislation, a compact is ratified between them according to the terms of the Virginia act. We are not merely giving our consent to a compact between these States, but we are at this time ratifying the act of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, which attempts to regulate and control the production of tobacco within that State and within the other States that are parties to the compact. The act of the Legislature of the State of Virginia provides for future action on the part of Congress to aid in the proper enforcement and the accomplishment of the purposes of the Virginia act. Section 4 of the Virginia act specifically provides-

That upon approval of this act, the Governor is authorized and requested to submit the same to each of the Members of Congress from the Commonwealth of Virginia, and to ask that they take prompt action to obtain the consent of Congress to the establishment of a compact as provided for in this act, and the enactment of legislation by the Congress providing for regulation of inter-state and foreign commerce in tobacco in such manner as to make ossible the enforcement and accomplishment of the purposes of

That is a specific part of the act of the State of Virginia which we are called upon to consent to and ratify today.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In principle, what difference is there between the provisions of the Virginia act with reference to the regulation, production, and control of crops and the old act of this Congress known as the A. A. A.?

Mr. ANDRESEN. There is very little difference. The same purpose is sought to be accomplished in the bill before us and in the arrangements between States, so that State officials may, by legislative act, compact, and agreement, control the production, the amount of tobacco which could be produced and marketed, impose penalties for any attempt to sell over and above the allotted quota which is given to any producer within the compact area.

Mr. MAY. Then it is a regulation bill, outright?

Mr. ANDRESEN. It is no doubt a regulation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not the gentleman's construction of this matter that this act is in conformity to the principle laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the A. A. A. case, to wit: That if there is to be any control over this matter of production, it is not a matter of congressional sovereignty, but that it must be remitted back to the States. Is that not true?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Undoubtedly the sponsors of this legislation are proceeding on that theory.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But does not the gentleman agree that that is the spirit and letter of that decision?

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is correct. The Supreme Court said that the Federal Government or Congress had no power to regulate production and that that power was reserved to the States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, is this not merely an effort, by constitutional act for the States interested in this question, to pursue a policy suggested by the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I think the gentleman is correct; but in consenting to what has been done in an arrangement to perfect a compact, I believe it is our duty to see that the States proceed in a proper manner so as to have enacted constitutional legislation as the basis of the compact.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Not just now. I am sorry. I will yield later

I want particularly to call the attention of the committee to the Constitution of the State of Virginia. Article I of the Constitution of the State of Virginia provides:

That all men are by nature equally free and independent and that all men are by hatthe equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot by any compact deprive or divest their posterity, namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

This provision of the constitution has been construed by the Supreme Court of the State of Virginia. I am just going to read a portion of two decisions by the supreme court of that State

The liberty of the citizen which is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of this State embraces not only the right to go where one chooses but to do such acts as he may judge best for his own interest not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, to follow such pursuits as he may deem best adapted to his faculties and will afford him the highest enjoyment, to be free in the enjoyment of all of his faculties, to be free to use them in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, and to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling, and for that purpose to enter into and enforce all contracts which he may deem proper, necessary, and essential to successfully conduct his private concerns.

Further the court says:

The only valid authority which a State has to prohibit, regulate, or control the private business of a citizen grows out of its "police power" or power to enact laws pertaining to the public health or public safety or the public morals.

Further the supreme court of that State has said:

The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business or impose unusual or unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations.

The sponsors of this legislation stated to the members of the Committee on Agriculture that the attorney general for the State of Virginia had handed down an opinion to the effect that such act was constitutional under the Constitution of the State of Virginia. I am sorry that I have not been able to secure that opinion. Otherwise I probably would not have made this point here today. However, it seems to me that it is important that we should lend a guiding hand to see that the State of Virginia and other States involved would not make the same mistake that the Congress did when it passed other acts which have been declared unconstitutional by our Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Does the gentleman feel that this Congress made a mistake when it passed the A. A. A.?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Well, I was not in the Congress that passed the A. A. A. We are not dealing with that, because the Supreme Court has already expressed its opinion on that law, and we have to abide by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am sorry; I cannot yield further.

The State of Virginia and other States, if they have the right, which the Supreme Court says is a right inherent in the people of the States, to regulate the production of any agricultural commodity, then they should secure an amendment of their own State constitutions in a constitutional way, and then proceed to negotiate for a compact and secure the consent of Congress.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I understand the gentleman to take the position that the act passed by the Legislature of the State of Virginia is unconstitutional in that State.

Mr. ANDRESEN. According to the constitution as I have read it and the decisions.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Do I understand by that that the gentleman is taking the position here in this body that he is more familiar with and better qualified to interpret the Constitution of the State of Virginia than the legislature of that State, its attorney general, and its present Governor?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman, I hope, has not received that impression, because I do not want to be misunderstood.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman knows the act was passed by the legislature, does he not?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes. I know, furthermore, that the act was prepared down here in the Department of Agriculture by the same men who sponsored and prepared the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and they knew it was unconstitutional at the time they presented it to us.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman know also that the attorney general of Virginia was in Washington and considered the entire matter; that the Governor of the State of Virginia was here and members of the senate and lower branch of the general assembly of that State?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am not aware of that, because these gentlemen did not appear before our committee.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman know the Governor of the State of Virginia signed this act?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I assume he did; otherwise it would not be presented here by the gentleman from Virginia as the law of the State of Virginia.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. If this bill becomes law, as I understand it, the only compact which can be in effect would be one embodying a verbatim copy of the act passed by the Virginia Legislature.

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is our understanding, that it would be similar and uniform.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. No; a verbatim copy of that act.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The sponsors of the bill have stated that it must be similar and somewhat uniform. The compact itself between the States is based upon the act of the Legislature of Virginia.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. One further question, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. If that be the case and the Virginia law covers interstate commerce, as the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has said, they have avoided any reference to interstate commerce in this bill. Are we not, then, ratifying a compact in part and leaving part of it out of the act of Congress when this bill gives the impression that the entire compact is ratified?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I think the gentleman is correct,

Mr. COLE of Maryland. If this be the case, I think it is a clear violation of what is contemplated by article I, section 10, of the Constitution, which states that—

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, • • • enter into an agreement or compact with another State.

I think there should be something far more specific and definite in this bill.

Mr. ANDRESEN. If it is intended that we are ratifying the compact upon the act of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, and we have eliminated the other provisions from the bill which is up for consideration, then we are only ratifying in part, although the general terms of the bill before us would indicate a ratification of the entire compact.

Just one other thing along this line. The act of the Virginia Legislature provides for additional legislation on the part of Congress in order to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman refers to section 4 of the Virginia act.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. They call upon their representatives in this act to obtain the consent of Congress to the establishment of a compact as provided for by this act. This is one thing they ask.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The other part is a distinct matter, the enactment of legislation by the Congress providing for regulation of interstate and foreign commerce in such manner as to make possible the accomplishment of the purposes of this act. The bill under discussion, H. R. 12037, deals with the compact end of their request but has nothing whatever to do with the regulation of interstate commerce. Is the gentleman in accord with me on this statement?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am in accord with it. I would like to state further along this line that apparently the sponsors of this legislation contemplate necessity for further action on the part of Congress in the regulation of interstate commerce so that this compact may be of some value.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That may be true. The gentleman will remember that in the bill immediately preceding this one, sections 3 and 4 referred to interstate commerce, but that was stricken and is not in the pending bill.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am sorry; I cannot yield further. Let me conclude my statement.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I know the gentleman does not want to use the word "ratification" in connection with his statement when the word "ratification" is not in the Constitution.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Answering the gentleman I will say that we are giving carte-blanche ratification to the act of the Legislature of the State of Virginia which is the basis of the compact.

Nothing will come back to us in the future for consideration as far as this compact is concerned.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The language is that no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into an agreement or compact with any other State. We are simply giving the consent of the Congress to enter into such compacts.

Mr. ANDRESEN. All such compacts would have to come back for ratification, but in this particular instance we are making an exception to the general rule by ratifying a compact in advance without any knowledge on our part of what the final compact will be, because of the fact that the tobacco commission is given power to set up rules and regulations to control production according to the general provisions of the act. They are given the power to assess penalties when a farmer produces more or attempts to sell more than his allotment. He may sell this overproduction by paying a tax of from 25 to 50 percent of the value of the commodity; and if he fails to pay this tax and secure his marketing certificate, he may be assessed a penalty of three times the value of the tobacco which he has sold, and in addition to that the tobacco may be confiscated.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Is it not a fact that what we are actually doing here is ratifying a statute of the State of Virginia? Does not the word "compact" imply an agreement between two or more States?

Mr. ANDRESEN. There should be no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon. Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Minnesota stated a moment ago that the Virginia Tobacco Control Act was written down here in the Federal Department of Agriculture and handed to the Virginia Legislature for enactment. This seemed to surprise some gentlemen. Is it not a fact that in doing this the Department of Agriculture has simply followed a custom that has existed for the last 2 or 3 years of the Federal departments dictating the legislative programs of all the States of the Union wherever they could?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I have only been here for the last 12 or 14 months. I do not know what the custom was before that except what I read in the newspapers.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I suggest the gentleman insert the Virginia statute as a part of his remarks, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I certainly would like to accommodate the gentleman, but I would rather have that done by one of the gentlemen sponsoring the bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. HUDDLESTON. We are legislating here with reference to an act that does not appear in the committee's report and is not contained in the hearings.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I think it is in the hearings.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; it is not in the hearings. There is a bill purporting to have been introduced in the South Carolina Legislature included in the hearings, but the Virginia act is not in the hearings at all.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I understand the South Carolina act, which is in the record of the hearings, is essentially identical to the Virginia act. At the time of the hearings before the committee, copies of both acts were handed to the reporter, but for some reason the Virginia act was misplaced and did not get in the record. It is available to any Member, however.

Mr. ANDRESEN. It would appear that we are being called upon to ratify something that most Members of Congress have not had an opportunity to study. I do not object to States entering into compacts, but when they do so the compact agreements should be in harmony with the respective State constitutions in order to avoid unfavorable decisions of the courts and damage to producers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent | to have printed in the RECORD at this point copy of the Virginia act, referred to in H. R. 12037, so that all Members of the House may have an opportunity to apprise themselves of the State law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Virginia act referred to is as follows:

HOUSE BILL No. 546

(Committee substitute for House bill No. 348)

A bill to provide for the supervision and regulation of the sale, marketing, and distribution of tobacco; to create a tobacco com-mission and provide for local tobacco committeemen and other mission and provide for local tobacco committeemen and other agencies and employees, and to define and to provide for their functions, duties, and powers; to provide for the appointment, suspension, removal, compensation, costs, and expenses of said commission, and of committeemen, agencies, and employees thereof; to provide for the raising of funds for the administration of this act and for the disposition of the revenue hereunder; to provide a fund to compensate tobacco growers for crop feilures and losses from fire to impose penalties for violacrop failures and losses from fire; to impose penalties for viola-tion of this act and to provide for the establishment of a com-pact and agreement between the Commonwealth of Virginia and certain other States for the purpose of regulating and controlling commerce in tobacco in and between the Commonwealth of Virginia and each of such States

SECTION 1. Whereas the production and distribution of tobacco

SECTION 1. Whereas the production and distribution of tobacco is an industry upon which, to a large extent, the prosperity and well-being of the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia depends; and the well-being of the producers of tobacco depends upon the maintenance of a purchasing power for tobacco comparable with the purchasing power of other commodities and, unless such purchasing power is maintained, the reduced power of tobacco producers to purchase industrial products seriously impairs the assets supporting the credit structure of the Commonwealth and local political subdivisions thereof; and

Whereas prior to the recent regulation of the marketing and sale of tobacco by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the United States, pursuant to an act recently adjudged invalid, there grew up and were carried on unfair, unjust, destructive, and demoralizing trade practices in the production, sale, and distribution of tobacco in the Commonwealth which tended to prevent the maintenance of a continuous and stable supply of tobacco adequate to meet the demand, and constituted a menace to the general welfare and prosperity of the inhabitants of the Commonwealth; and wealth; and

Whereas the invalidation of said act of Congress and the discon-

Whereas the invalidation of said act of Congress and the discontinuation of regulation of the marketing and sale of tobacco presents a serious threat to the well-being of the tobacco growers of Virginia and other tobacco-growing States; and

Whereas weather and diseases affecting the growing of tobacco and losses from fire make it desirable to protect farmers whose tobacco crops are affected adversely thereby; and

Whereas in order to protect the well-being of the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and to promote the public welfare and general prosperity of the State, the production, sale, and distribution of tobacco in the Commonwealth of Virginia, is hereby declared to be a business affected with a public interest which should be supervised and regulated in the exercise of the police power of the Commonwealth in the manner hereinafter provided: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, as follows: SEC 2. As used in this act, unless otherwise stated or unless the context or subject matter clearly indicates otherwise, "Person" means any individual, partnership, joint-stock company, corporation, or association.

"Operator" means person engaged as owner-operator or as cash-

"Operator" means person engaged as owner-operator or as cashrent, standing-rent, or share-rent tenant in the operation of a farm; that is, any tract or tracts of land operated as a unit with the same machinery and other equipment (on which tobacco is produced), and may include a sharecropper who operates a farm if the owner-operator or tenant does not provide for the obtaining of marketing certificates with respect to the tobacco crop of the farm.

Section 3. (a) There is hereby created as an agency and instrumentality of the State Government a commission to be known as the "Virginia Tobacco Commission." The commission shall consist of not less than three nor more than seven members to be appointed of not less than three nor more than seven members to be appointed by the Governor for a term of 1 year. A majority of the members of the commission shall be "producers" and one member shall be the "director", as defined in section 2 of this act. The Governor shall designate the chairman of the commission. A majority of the members shall constitute a quorum. The Governor shall appoint the members of the commission at the time this act becomes effective as hereinafter provided, or as soon thereafter as practicable. Vacancies on the commission shall be filled by appointment by the Governor. Members of the commission may be removed by the Governor at his pleasure and the vacancy thus created filled as above provided. Each member of the commission not already in the employment of the State shall be paid the sum of $10 for each day actually spent in the performance of his official duties, and all members shall be reimbursed for necessary travel expenses and subsistence not exceeding $5 per day. of not less than three nor more than seven members to be appointed day actually spent in the performance of his official duties, and all members shall be reimbursed for necessary travel expenses and subsistence not exceeding $5 per day.

(b) This act shall not become effective unless and until the Congress of the United States shall pass an act consenting to the establishment of compacts such as are authorized by this act; and thereafter this act shall become effective with respect to flue-cured tobacco upon the enactment of a similar act by the Legislatures of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and shall become effective with respect to burley tobacco upon the enactment of a similar act by the Legislatures of the States of North Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and shall become effective with respect to fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco upon the enactment of a similar act by the Legislatures of the States of Kentucky and Tennessee: Provided, however, That with respect to flue-cured tobacco this act shall become effective, for the 1936 crop year only, upon the enactment of a similar act by North Carolina and South Carolina if and when the Governor shall find as a fact and proclaim that, in his opinion, effective means have been adopted to regulate, by agreement or otherwise, the marketing and sale of such kind of tobacco in Georgia substantially in accord with the general quota and marketing provisions of this act: And provided further, With respect to burley tobacco this act shall be in effect for the crop year 1936 if similar acts are enacted for said crop year on or before July 1, 1936, by the States of Kentucky and Tennessee: And provided further, That this act shall not become effective for the 1936 crop year with respect to any kind of tobacco unless this act and a similar act of each of the other States with respect to such kind, or in lieu of a similar act, an effective agreement or other regulatory means with respect to Georgia, as provided above, shall be enacted or entered into prior to July 1, 1936.

(c) The enactment of this act and of similar acts by any of the aforesaid States, or by other States, shall constitute the basis for a compact between the Commonwealth of Virginia and such States, if the consent of the Congress be given to such a compact.

SEC. 4. Upon the approval of this act, the Governor is authorized.

ized and requested to submit the same immediately to each of the Members of Congress from the Commonwealth of Virginia and to ask that they take prompt action to obtain the consent of the Congress to the establishment of a compact as provided for by this act, and the enactment of legislation by the Congress provid-ing for regulation of interstate and foreign commerce in tobacco in such manner as to make possible the enforcement and accomplishment of the purposes of this act.

Sec. 5. When this act becomes effective with respect to any one or more of the kinds of tobacco as hereinbefore provided, the ernor is authorized and directed to enter into a compact with the Governors of all of the States required for the compact for said kind or kinds of tobacco as herein provided, which enacts a similar act, such compact to be in accordance with the provisions of section 26 of this act.

SEC. 6. In the event that this act does not become effective for the crop year 1936 as to any kind of tobacco, it shall be effective for the crop year 1937 as to such kind of tobacco, if similar acts are enacted by the necessary States prior to May 1, 1937, and there-upon the State quotas pertaining to such kind of tobacco shall be determined within 30 days from such effective date.

SEC. 7. The Governor is authorized and directed: (a) To suspend the enforcement and effectiveness of this act in any crop year (1) with respect to flue-cured tobacco whenever he shall find as a fact and proclaim that acts similar to this act are not in effect in either North Carolina, South Carolina, or Georgia by reason of legislative repeal or by reason of an injunction issued by any court of competent jurisdiction, and (2) with respect to burley tobacco whenever he shall find as a fact and proclaim that acts similar to this act are not in effect in North Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee by reason of legislative repeal or by reason of an injunction issued by any court of competent jurisdiction, and (3) with respect to fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco whenever he shall find as a fact and proclaim that acts similar to this act are not in effect in Kentucky and Tennessee by reason of legislative repeal or by reason of an injunction issued by any court of competent jurisdiction.

(b) To reinstate the enforcement of this act with respect to any kind of tobacco for any crop year following any period of suspension with respect to such kind of tobacco pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section, whenever the Governor shall determine and proclaim not later than January 1 next preceding the beginning of the crop year that the reason for suspension of enforcement of this act with respect to such kind of tobacco no longer exists, and upon the issuance of such proclamation by the Governor this act shall again become effective.

ernor this act shall again become effective.

SEC. 8. Notwithstanding any of the provisions of sections 3, 6, and 7, this act shall temporarily cease to be in effect with respect to any kind of tobacco whenever a proclamation is issued as hereinafter provided: Whenever, during the month of October of any year, a petition or petitions, requesting that this act become ineffective with respect to any kind of tobacco in the next succeeding crop year, shall be filed with the commission by 10 percent or more of the producers of such kind of tobacco in the State, or whenever, during the month of October of any year, the Governor requests the commission to conduct a referendum among the producers of any kind of tobacco, the commission shall thereupon conduct a referendum in which each producer of such kind of tobacco in the Commonwealth shall be entitled to cast one vote, and if, in such referendum, one-third entitled to cast one vote, and if, in such referendum, one-third or more of such producers in the State vote against having this act continued, the commission, prior to December 15, next following the filing of the said petition or said request of the Governor, shall so certify to the Governor, who, within 15 days after the receipt of such certification, shall proclaim such fact to the people, receipt of such certification, shall proclaim such fact to the people, and this act shall, at the beginning of the next crop year after the date of such proclamation, become ineffective with respect to such kind of tobacco for such crop year; but shall be effective with respect to succeeding crop years, unless again made ineffective in accordance with or by reason of other provisions of this act, or by a new, like referendum.

SEC. 9. The commission for the State shall meet and cooperate with the commission for other states and cooperate.

with the commissions for other States, and any persons designated by the secretary for the purpose of making certain determinations as enumerated in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of this section 9, and when such determinations are agreed upon by the majority of the members of the commission for this State, and a majority of the members of the commissions for other States, such determinations shall be accepted and followed in the administration of this act:

(a) To determine from calculations from available statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture the quantity of any kind of tobacco produced in the United States which will be required for world consumption during any crop year, and same shall be that quantity of such kind of tobacco produced in the United States which according to such calculations will be consumed in all countries of the world during such crop year, increased or decreased, as the case may be, by the amount which the world stocks of such kind of tobacco at the beginning of such crop year are less than or greater than the normal stocks of such kind of tobacco.

(b) To determine a marketing quota for the State for each kind which this act is in effect with (b) To determine a marketing quota for the State for each kind of tobacco for each crop year in which this act is in effect with respect to such kind of tobacco. Such quota shall be determined during the month of January next preceding the crop year for which it is established, except that each such marketing quota for 1936 or for any first year in which this act becomes effective as to each kind of tobacco shall be determined within 30 days after this act becomes so effective as to such kind of tobacco. Such quota for flue-curred tobacco shall be that quantity of such kind of tobacco which bears the same proportion (subject to adjustment as herewhich bears the same proportion (subject to adjustment as here-inafter provided) to the total quantity of such kind of tobacco required for world consumption (as determined pursuant to para-graph (a) of this section 9) as the production of such kind of tobacco in the State in 1935 bore to the total production of such kind of tobacco in the United States in 1935. Such quota for burley tobacco and for fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco shall be that quantity of each such kind of tobacco which bears the same proportion (subject to adjustment as hereinafter provided) to the total quantity of each such kind of tobacco required for world consumption (as determined pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section 9) as the average production of each such kind of tobacco in the State in the years 1933, 1934, and 1935 bore to the average of the total pro-duction of each such kind of tobacco in the United States in such year. Such proportion for the State shall be subject to such adjustment as the Commission determines is necessary to correct for any abnormal conditions of production during such years and trends in production during or since such years: Provided, however, That no such adjustment shall be made for any year which would decrease such proportion for the Commonwealth of Virginia by more than one-fiftieth of the said proportion, or increase the proportion for the Commonwealth of the said proportion. portion for the Commonwealth, or the proportion for any other State, by more than one-twentieth of the said proportion. (c) To determine and make adjustments in the marketing quota

(c) To determine and make adjustments in the marketing quota determined pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section 9 for any kind of tobacco for any year, not exceeding 10 percent of the said quota, from time to time during the period from August 1 to December 15 of such year, if, upon study of supply and demand conditions for such kind of tobacco, the commission finds that such adjustments are required to effectuate the purpose of this act.

(d) To determine regulations with respect to the sale and marketing of tobacco, and limitations of the quantities thereof the keting of tobacco and limitations of the quantities thereof, the issuance of marketing certificates and the rate of charge for marketing certificates for surplus tobacco, and in all other matters with respect to which regulations are required to be prescribed pursuant to any provision of this act and the similar acts of other States.

SEC. 10. The determinations referred to in section 9 of this act shall be recorded in writing and copies thereof shall be available to each of the members of the several commissions, and to the secretary and persons designated by him; and such determinations shall be followed in the administration of this act: Provided, That in the administration of this act, or in connection with regulations issued pursuant thereto, the commission shall not be required to adopt any specific wording or form in issuing regulations or other material in accordance with such determinations, but shall express the intent and purpose of such determinations.

SEC. 11. The commission is authorized and directed: (a) To establish, in accordance with section 12 of this act, tobacco-marketing quotas for each kind of tobacco for individual farms within the State for each year, the total of such quotas not to exceed in amount the marketing quota for such kind of tobacco established for the State pursuant to section 9; and to provide for the establishment of such committees of tobacco producers as the commission may find necessary to assist in the establishment of such farm quotas.

To notify the operator of each farm for which a tobaccomarketing quota is established, as promptly as possible, the amount of the marketing quota for the farm; and, if any adjustment is made in the tobacco-marketing quota for any kind of tobacco for the State pursuant to paragraph (c) of section 9 of this act, to notify and inform such operator of the corresponding adjustment in the marketing quota for such farm.

(c) To supply, upon application therefor, to the operator on each farm for which a tobacco marketing quota is established, such evidence supporting the establishment of the amount of such as may be required under any system established by the com-mission with respect to sales made under marketing quotas.

(d) To provide for the conduct of such investigations and the holding of such hearings as the commission, or the chairman thereof, deems necessary in connection with the establishment of marketing quotas for farms, and to designate persons to conduct such investigations and hold such hearings in accordance with regulations prescribed by the commission.

Sec. 12. The marketing quotas to be established for farms, as provided in paragraph (a) of section 11, shall be determined as

(a) For each farm for which a base tobacco production has been heretofore determined by the United States Department of Agricul-ture, as shown by available records and statistics of said Depart-ment, the said base production so last determined shall, after the making of such adjustments therein as shall be determined upon the recommendation of the tobacco committeemen and approval by the commission to be in conformity with the provisions of para-graph (c) below of this section 12, constitute a tobacco base for such farm. (b) For each farm for which a tobacco base is not established under paragraph (a) of this section 12, and for which the operator thereon files an application, such tobacco base shall be established as shall be determined upon the recommendation of tobacco committeemen and approval of the commission to be in conformity with paragraph (c) of this section 12, provided that the total of the tobacco bases for all such farms in any year shall not exceed 2 percent of the total of the tobacco bases established for farms under paragraph (a) of this section 12, plus the tobacco bases established under this paragraph (b) in preceding

(c) The tobacco base established for each farm, under paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section 12, shall be fair and reasonable for such farms as compared with the tobacco bases for other farms which are similar with respect to the following: The past production of tobacco on the farm and by the operator thereof; land, labor, and equipment available for the production of tobacco; the crop-rotation practices; and the soil and other physical factors tending to affect the production of tobacco.

(d) To the tobacco base established for each farm, pursuant to paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section 12, there shall be applied the percentage which the marketing quota for the State is of the total of the tobacco bases for all farms in the State and the resulting figure shall be the marketing quota for the farm.

Second, to pay any expenses incurred in the administration of this act except salaries and expenses of court officials and other law-enforcement officers.

Third, to make payment, in accordance with regulations of the commission, to tobacco producers whose sales of tobacco, because of loss by fire or weather, or diseases affecting their tobacco crops adversely during any year, are less than the marketing quotas for their farms for such crop year. Such payments shall be at a rate per pound of such deficit, which rate shall be determined by dividing the funds available for such payments by the total number of pounds by which the sales of tobacco by all producers fell below the marketing quotas for their farms; provided such deficit is due to loss by fire or weather, or diseases affecting their crop adversely; and provided further, that such rate of payment shall in no event exceed 5 cents per pound, and that no such payments shall be made until there is established as a reserve an amount

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke upon the rule this afternoon may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE RECORD OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech which I made over the radio station located at Calumet, Mich.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address which I delivered over the radio on September 14, 1935:

The third year of the Democratic administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt is drawing to a close and the time is rapidly approaching when the Democratic Party will submit to the people of the United States for their approval or rejection its program, its policies, its ideals, and its record. Time has moved rapidly since the date when President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party took charge of the administration of our Government in March of 1933. Many things have happened since that date, but I am sure that the American people have not forgotten date, but I am sure that the American people have not forgotten the condition of our country immediately preceding March 1933. No administration was ever faced with problems of greater magnitude. At no time in the history of our Nation was an administration faced with more serious responsibilities than that of President Roosevelt in March 1933. For 4 long years the people of America had suffered under the crushing weight of economic depression. Misery and destitution were widespread. Millions of Americans were unemployed. Hysteria and fear were gripping the hearts of many. The voices of multitudes were Millions of Americans were unemployed. Hysteria and fear were gripping the hearts of many. The voices of multitudes were crying for an end to the do-nothing policies of the Hoover Republican administration. The people of America wanted leadership—they wanted a leader who would put an end to the aimless policy of drift. The American people wanted someone who would take hold of the problems of America in characteristic American fashion. They wanted a leader with resoluteness, a leader with courage and with vision—someone who realized the extent of misery and suffering and insecurity that existed among the American people; they wanted someone who was not afraid to inaugurate the program of reform necessary to recovery and necessary to the foundation of a system that would function in the interest of the common man. The American people found such a man in Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The policy of drift was ended in March of 1933. Decisive action

The policy of drift was ended in March of 1933. Decisive action has replaced the inaction of the Hoover administration, an inaction due to the subservience of the Republican Party to the lords of industry and the barons of finance, an inaction that asked the American people to hold still while the depression took its toll in misery and suffering. After March of 1933 we left that period in which the only attempts to combat the depression were similar to the actions of the Indian medicine man who beats his tom toms in which the only attempts to compat the depression were similar to the actions of the Indian medicine man who beats his tom toms to scare away the evil spirits.

The program of the Democratic Party under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt has been twofold: First, an emergency program to take care of those millions who, through no fault of their own, were out of jobs—to take care of those families whose children were denied proper food. This was the emergency program; in other words, to prevent starvation and to relieve misery—an emergency program, if you will, to save those millions of Americans who had been brought to the brink of disaster by a dozen years of Republican inaction and vaccilation.

A second part of the Democratic program has been more fundamental. It is a program of reform—a program of readjustment in our economic life—a program of reform that is designed to make America a more secure place in which to live. I cannot in one afternoon discuss with you all of the various measures—emergency and reform—undertaken by the Democratic Party in the past 3 years. I may state, however, that the ideals and the philosophy underlying both parts of the program are similar and can be summed up in one statement: That the Democratic Party realizes that America can never be prosperous and that prosperity and good times can never the prosperous and that prosperity and good times. that America can never be prosperous and that prosperity and good times can never return until the laboring man and the farmer are given security, until these two groups are given an income sufficient to maintain themselves decently—that good times can never return until the millions of Americans are given purchasing power to buy the products of industry and to keep the wheels of industry moving.

industry moving.

We Democrats have been criticized by our conservative Republican friends. They have ridiculed our program. I challenge them to state which of the major legislative acts of the Democratic administration they would wipe from the statute books. Do they deny today as they once did the necessity of active relief assistance on the part of the Federal Government for those who were unfortunate? They do not take this line of attack today. No; today they are criticizing us because our emergency program has cost money. Surely it has cost money. I know of no greater Christian mission in the world than the spending of money to prevent hunger and starvation. The social ideals and the human quality of kindness must indeed be dulled in a man who counts in terms of dollars the value of giving food and clothing—giving a bare living to a family unfortunate enough to be out of a job. My friends, this has been an emergency job. If your baby were sick, if your wife or your husband or your son or daughter became critically ill and faced death without medical aid, would you count the cost in terms of money? Would you haggle as to the cost of an operation or the cost of the doctor's fees? Would you fail to secure the best of attention possible because the cost was too high? You would not. You would obtain the best that was possible for your loved ones without counting the cost in dollars and cents. When men and women are starving and children are denied the rights of childhood, the important thing to do is to act to save them. Americans will pay the bills without regret. Surely it has cost money to prevent starvation. God knows, little enough has been spent, and I, for one, cannot regret that the money has been spent in this manner.

we will be criticized by our Republican friends because of the emergency appropriation of $4,000,000,000 of this session of Congress—an appropriation that will put the unemployed of this Nation to work. That $4,000,000,000 is to become a part of the income of the workers of America. With it American laborers will buy goods. Their purchases will stimulate industry, and I predict that this is the last long pull up the rocky road to recovery.

Much criticism has been leveled against the Democratic Party for its measures for permanent reform. I want to warn you

Much criticism has been leveled against the Democratic Party for its measures for permanent reform. I want to warn you against the propaganda that will be used in increasing amounts for the next 18 months. You are going to be told repeatedly through the press, by the radio, from the platform, that reform was not and is not necessary. In fact you are going to be told that if it had not been for the election of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party and the proposals of reform which they have sponsored that there would never have been a depression. That campaign of propaganda on the part of the big financiers, the banks, and the big industrialists has begun and will continue. The memory of some is indeed short. You recall March of 1933. America faced the greatest financial crisis of our history. Banks were closing on every hand. We should remember this in Michigan for our State led the way in Republican financial unsoundness. In this March of 1933 these bankers went to the newly elected President Franklin Roosevelt and begged him on their knees to do something to save the country from chaos. You know too of the decisive action of President Roosevelt in providing for the banking moratorium. His action restored confidence in the stability of the banking structure. And now since the plutocrats, the financiers, and their satellites, the industrialists of this Nation, feeling that the ground is a little more secure under their feet, are telling us that it was the election of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party that caused all the trouble in the first place. I warn you against this propaganda. When you are told that there was and is no need for reform, ask the Republican gentlemen just which of the reform measures they would eve provide for the economic security of the American people.

Would these gentlemen repeal the Home Owners' Loan Act, an act that has refinanced mortgages on 889,000 homes; an act that has saved a million families from being thrown out in the street? Would they repeal the Farm Credit Act, that has saved the farms of a million farmers from mortgage foreclosure?

Do our Republican friends want us to abandon the C. C. C. camps and the program of conservation of our natural resources? Do they want to tear down the work the Democratic Party has done in building up our forests, and do they want to kill the program of soil conservation? Do they want to throw back into the streets of our cities the thousands of young men now taken care of in C. C. C. camps? Evidently they do, for they complain of the cost of these programs and they vote against their establishment.

Would the Republicans repeal the Social Security Act—this the greatest act ever passed by any legislature in American history? The Democrats have insisted that society has a definite obligation to take care of the old people, the crippled and orphaned children, the blind, and others who through no fault of their own are deprived of a means of livelihood. The Republicans may quarrel with the Democratic idea and proposal that there shall be insurance against unemployment. The Democratic Party will continue to maintain that the workingman shall be taken care of; that he shall not be forced to suffer because of the rugged individualism of profit-seeking employers. The workingman has a right to earn a living. Society has an obligation to provide him with an opportunity to have a job, and the employers of labor in this Nation have the highest obligation under God to furnish that employment. It has been the aim and the purpose of the Democratic administration to make the employers of labor in this Nation recognize that obligation.

The Roosevelt Democratic administration has enacted the Wagner labor bill giving, for the first time in American history, protection to the laborer in his right to organize. The Federal Government for the first time in history has gone on record as standing behind organized labor and the right of labor to organize. This bill is the magna carta of labor. It is a typically Democratic measure.

We have passed the Guffey coal bill to protect the laborer in the coal mines and to stabilize this industry. We have passed the Railroad Retirement Act for the benefit of the railroad workers. I ask the Republicans, Would you repeal these acts? The Republicans may be willing to do so, but I am sure that the people of America are not willing to abandon these milestones on the road to security.

We have enacted a new program of taxation that places the burden of taxation on those able to pay—a tax program designed to correct the evils of the great concentration of wealth and to make America again a land of equal opportunity for all. The Republicans may well oppose this bill and this principle. Their party has been always the representative of property and privilege. I stand by the principles of the Democratic Party, which places human rights above those of property.

There are other acts and other achievements of the Democratic Party of equal importance with those which I have mentioned. I repeat my challenge to the Republicans—which ones of these would you repeal? These acts are not perfect; we do not claim that they are. But I submit that we have made a beginning; we have established principles; and when time and experience show

There are other acts and other achievements of the Democratic Party of equal importance with those which I have mentioned. I repeat my challenge to the Republicans—which ones of these would you repeal? These acts are not perfect; we do not claim that they are. But I submit that we have made a beginning; we have established principles; and when time and experience show us where the weak spots are, show us where there is need for change and amendment, those changes and amendments will be made. Let me caution you, however, that it is your duty as citizens interested in the welfare of this Nation to elect men to your Congress and to the Presidency who are in sympathy with this program. I have faith in the American people. I know that you men and women realize the importance in the President's program and that in November of next year you will go to the polls and reelect Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress by majorities greater than those in 1932.

President Roosevelt's program has geen gigantic. Necessarily it

President Roosevelt's program has geen gigantic. Necessarily it had to be, for the problems faced were gigantic. Numerous new agencies of Government have been established and old ones expanded. Many of these come close to your daily life. All of them affect the welfare of the people directly. All too often, I am sorry to say, the direction of these agencies has fallen into the hands of men and women who are unsympathetic with the spirit and the ideals of the program. It is my contention that no program can succeed when the men who have charge of it are out of sympathy with its ideals. If the relief organization has not served its purpose in your community, if the E. R. A. has double-crossed you, and failed to give justice to the people of our Nation, it is not because the E. R. A. was wrong in principle or in purpose—it has been simply because individuals not in sympathy with the program have had charge of its administration. There is only one remedy for this evil, and I am insisting, I have insisted in the past, and I shall insist in the future, that all programs sponsored by the Democratic Party and the Roosevelt administration shall be administered by men and women who are in sympathy with the ideals of our great leader, and not by someone whose only purpose and desire is to discredit President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party.

Party.

It stands to reason that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation cannot succeed if the directors of the Corporation want to wreck it. The Forest Service cannot function in the interest of the people if its supervisors and administrators do not agree with the principles of President Roosevelt. The Farm Credit Administration will fail, the Federal Housing will fail, the Resettlement Administration will fail, rural rehabilitation will fail, the National Reemployment Service, the Public Works Administration will fail, the Works Progress Administration will fail, they will all fail if administered by men and women who want them to fail. I am not talking politics. I am simply talking common sense. You wouldn't trust any enterprise of yours to a man who disagreed with your purposes, or to a man who distrusted your ideas, or to a man who wanted you to fail. Neither can the Democratic program succeed so long as rockribbed Republicans are supervising and directing its agencies. I as Congressman of this district have made it a part of my duty to insist that this evil be taken care of. I want you as my constituents interested in the success of the Democratic program to keep me informed on instances of sabotage. Let me know who the wreckers of the program are and I shall do my best to see that changes are made.

THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION—ITS HERITAGE, ITS ACTS, AND ITS FUTURE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein two short statistical tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Nation was out of focus in 1932–33, panting on a political sick-bed. The daily, yes, hourly, imperceptible loss of employment by millions of men in 1922–1933 with the resultant shut down of factories, the damming up of purchasing power, the overwhelming fear that seemed to throttle every avenue of commercial progress, and the growing hysteria in banking circles, all pointed to a well-recognized diagnosis of maladjustment.

Not only in the financial centers but in the rural areas panic seized the millions. Incipient revolution got a toehold and foreclosure sales were halted; a judge was dragged from his bench; milk was dumped; a holiday for farmers was declared; an embargo on wheat was instituted; highways were picketed-all betokening an irately-awakened rural and urban electorate apprehensive with a vague instinct of fear lest the widening disparity between agriculture and industry and attendant evils should ruin them all. Maddened mobs crowded the city streets, milling about banks in huge metropolitan centers, beseeching the return of their hard-earned savings while others less in numbers stayed at home with their fortunes lost and irretrievable in the stock

The plodding, earnest, daily consumer went his toiling way unable to understand why he should have so little and others should have so much. He could not fathom the cause in the equally widening gulf between the investing classes, who had so much, and the consuming groups, who had so little.

The same average man stood still in his factory yard as he pondered in the sorrow of his lost job as to what had happened to the work that a few short months before seemed endless. Some day he was to learn as the story unfolded itself of inroads on man-hours by machinery and the gigantic waste that haphazard business practices had caused in their unfortunate duplication of productive facilities; the ever-present urge for new machinery and the scrapping of still workable equipment. The equally causal efforts in the wide expansion and speculative efforts to increase and then increase beyond all reasonable bases other than the urge for profits and more profits were blamable factors also.

With such a state of threatening chaos there could be no planning. Instead individualism ran wild, the laws of supply and demand and the laissez-faire policy of the day precipitated its unthinking victims into the yawning chasm of business paralysis. There they sat in the Adullam's cave of 1932 awaiting the efforts of the incoming administration.

That awaited day saw the preceding evening close with the threat of the closing of every bank in the United States, a fear which was an accomplished fact on March 4, 1933. Was the cause post-World War inflation, our hoarding practices, or was it in the basic defects of the system itself? Some critics saw it due to the almost 100 percent increase in outstanding credit floated upon a gossamer structure in a Florida land boom, a stock-market saturnalia, others stressed the introduction of installment payments, an unwise system of loans to foreign nations who used the money to construct factories in competition with our own, a vicious tariff system, or inherent defect in the credit structure

Inherently within the banking system itself there were those who sensed the structural weakness in management and policy. The rush of nondescripts in many sections of the Nation, who aspired to bank control flooded the seats of the financial mighty with incompetents who knew no more about banking than a speculator in Argentine wheat knows about marginal production in that country. Under such control banking policies drifted into most unwise hands. Further defects in capital resources left its toll, though this was entirely due to unwise State laws of incorporation and management. Perhaps in the controllable policy line few causes were so productive of harm as the flight into investment speculations.

This caused an about face or even a no face at all to previous rules of safety and caution. With sanity to the winds, enraptured only by the high profits available, this type of speculative banker embarked upon long-term investments on a quicksand structure, the very first weakness of which was that every depositor had a right to demand the return of cash at any moment. Obviously, with the funds themselves locked up with the time lock of long-term investment, trouble was possible.

Dumping credit repercussions in Europe not only stagnated the foreign goods markets but upset the refunding plan of the World War Debt Commission and killed the efforts of the Young and Dawes plans overnight. Was the banking situation serious?

In other fields, terror seized all and the evils cried out for correction. Duplication of transportation facilities and terminals, all colored the future of the railroad and even in public-utility fields there were recognizable cancers that needed eradication.

In the home, the mortgage fears took on a dramatic dress that outdid all of the old melodramas. With over 2,000,000 applications for relief and an extension of aid that totals over 5,000,000,000, these figures tell a story that needs no emphasis. Farm relief was equally pitiful, with perhaps greater misery and suffering because of isolation and the failure of States to help as was possible in the urban centers, where greater administrative perfectibility made access to relief comparatively easier.

Cities, despite their greater organization, witnessed labor troubles in sweatshops and child-labor rackets; frightful losses of man-hours in the seemingly hopeless struggle with machines; brutal and unfair competition; price discrimination; and the absence of planned policy.

Under such terrifying conditions there were two fundamental courses; one was to allow the depression to run itself out, if that was possible, or to rush the instrumentalities of Federal aid to the solution of the problem. Certainly, in the assistance rendered to home industries under the tariff programs of prior Republican administrations there had been witnessed the previous necessity of recourse to Federal resuscitation. As a matter of fact there were those who even intimated that it was this very artificial tariff stimulus that had opened the lid on the casket containing the evils of Pandora. But, like the sailors who heeded Admiral Dewey's injunction not to shoot while the poor lads were dying, these equally magnanimous critics withhold their causticity and reserved their fire on the tariff and its evils.

Two decades ago Walter Lippmann, now the featured commentator in the New York Tribune, penned this paragraph in his Preface to Politics:

Social life has nothing whatever to fear from group interests so long as it doesn't try to play the ostrich in regard to them. the burden of national crises is squarely upon the dominant class who fight so foolishly against the emergent ones. That is what precipitates violence, that is what renders social cooperation impos-precipitates violence, that is what renders social cooperation impossible, that is what makes catastrophes the method of change.

The wisest rulers see this. They know that the responsibility for insurrections rests in the last analysis upon the unimaginative greed and endless stupidity of the dominant classes. There is something pathetic in the blindness of powerful people when they face a social crisis. Fighting viciously every readjustment which a nation demands, they make their own overthrow inevitable. It is they who turn opposing interests into a class war. Confronted with the deep insurgency of labor, what do capitalists and their spokesmen do? They resist every demand, submit only after a struggle, and prepare a condition of war to the death. When farsighted men appear in the ruling classes—men who recognize the need of a civilized answer to this increasing restlessness—the rich and powerful treat them to a scorn and a hatred that are incredibly bitter.

That comment of Mr. Lippmann was delivered in a political vacuum. Today we find this statement in the United States News, a powerful and conservative medium of expression, pointing out weaknesses in the old system in a kindred but illuminating phase. It begins the study with an opinion of Sir Arthur Willert, who "used to be the Washington correspondent of the London Times and who has lately been making a tour of America." He told David Lawrence, owner and editorial writer of the United States News, that he believed the main reason why England had come through the depression during the last 30 years was that it had met successfully the demand for social-justice programs, whereas America has delayed giving them attention, and is now confronted with reform in the midst of recovery.

Mr. Lawrence comments under his byline "There is much merit in what this distinguished visitor says. For in truth social reform in America has been delayed." Here is the brilliant high priest of the conservative opposition admitting this; he, the most trenchant and caustic of the opposition to our President. He gives two reasons for this failure; one is the debility of party leadership, which is the same as saying that we have no real party government, and the other is the failure of leaders to speak the truth and not utter political | platitudes. Correctives are possible here.

Another learned critic, Mr. Russell Owen, has this to say about England's handling of social legislation:

It is true that what President Roosevelt calls social-security measures have long been in effect in Britain. The Conservatives have accepted them, and the social services, together, absorb nearly one-third of the British national budget. In social legislation the New Deal involves merely an attempt to catch up with Britain by improvising in an emergency some of the social services which she has taken a generation to build up

On the other hand, the American conservatives who cite Britain as a model seem to have overlooked her vast program of housing as a model seem to have overlooked her vast program of housing and slum clearance, financed partly by the Government; her Coal Reorganization Act; the scheme to control textile production; the state supervision of farm marketing and international trade; the publicly supported social services; the general acceptance of trade unions, and Britain's unorthodox monetary policy. They seem to forget that, as the Midland Bank's review put it, "The Government has accepted a large measure of direct responsibility for the trend of business", through numerous measures of control and subsidies to agriculture and trade; and that the recovery is largely due to actions taken by the Government, all acts which are due to actions taken by the Government, all acts which are anathema to New Deal critics.

Britain has no New Deal, because, as regards social legislation, she has already done what it seeks to do.

From 1906 until 1933 there was but one Democratic administration sandwiched in literally between the brackets of Republican control and what control on both sides of the almost three decades. That single Democratic administration for 8 years found itself as a neutral in the most gigantic of world wars, only to later see itself caught in the tide of the engulfing eddies; yet in its short history prior to the war this lone Democratic administration set out with higher ideals and actually carried through to conclusion more social legislation of the English type than the whole remaining or prior periods of Republican stand-pattism up to the Roosevelt regime in 1933.

Briefly, the Republican Party had the fullest opportunity to develop this needed social program, but it did not heed the age's needs. During all those brimming years of superfluity and seemingly vaulting prosperity they acted as described by Walter Lippmann. Prophets are notoriously without honor in any country; and if the distinguished political writer was at all amusingly cynical, he must have enjoyed the aftermath of Republican dilemma.

When the depression did hit us with the full force of a whirlwind that unexpectedly swept "around the corner" that the friends of President Hoover had set out as the right-angled entrance for prosperity, that President's administration was so flabbergasted and stunned by its enormity that for the first 2 years it pursued an aggravating waiting policy in budgetary matters especially. It was felt that the depression would end within a few months; but by the middle of the fiscal year of 1932 the administration requested Congress to enact a program of drastic reductions in expenditures on the one hand, and of comprehensive additional taxation, including the imposition of a manufacturer's sales tax, on the other. Back of these suggestions was the feeling that the restoration of the budgetary balance would restore and instill confidence among businessmen and would spur commercial activity. If that was not done, they felt that the failure to restore the balance would kill governmental credit. Paradoxically and in a most left-handed manner with all this Budget-balancing talk the administration offered a plan for the extension of loans to private financial institutions.

We know that Congress acquiesced in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation activities but bolted on the Budget balancing, for in its surer sense of popular want it felt that relief was vitally necessary. Backed by this progressive bloc they won the day and even inserted the progressive type of taxation in direct contravention of the President's wishes for a manufacturer's tax. It was a sorry and humiliating spectacle for the administration. When action was the real need of the hour they still held on to the cherished fetishes of decades ago, literally awaiting a "break", which came, but as a compound fracture in the body politic.

It must never be forgotten that in the summer of 1932 and some increase in business. The settlement of reparations at Lausanne had done much to help, and there was renewed hope that the debt settlement would in addition reduce the economic barriers to trade, encourage a disarmament agreement, effect a restoration of international confidence and investment resumption. But the Hoover regime was unable to see its way clear to capitalize on these spurting aids. Coma drugged the efforts of the White House and a paralysis seized the sinews of Government. Money left the country and Federal credit hit a new low. Nothing but herculean measures could stay further paralysis, if even that was possible.

The great concentration of power and control in such groups as the sugar, steal oil, and other basic industries was holding the whip hand over legislative puppets. These trained seals looked back and only veered from the perpendicular line of dictation to see if they were still on the perpendicular. What was, was right and would be so seemingly forever. As a matter of fact they never even thought of the future so content were they with that roseate present.

In a period in which the conquest of the wilderness of America was a realization and the even greater problem the absorption of alien races seemed possible no one had time to speculate or prepare for the greatest of all problems, the protection of the masses against the colossal octopuses in the form of trusts who were sweeping everything out of their way in their pursuit of manifest destiny. They were heading for the fall, and it came in 1932-33.

Who would save us and how?

Who was to blame for this debacle in the midst of plenty? Well, for over 30 years we have heard nothing but the slogan of the party that was only fit to rule and whose permanence in our political system seemed a divine necessity. Then came the realization that the blind forces of nature. and the very resources of the country, coupled with a virginal extension of frontiers, made rapid progress a certainty in spite of political parties. What was needed and what was wanting was direction. In the realm of practical politics which according to one writer was the systematic organization of hatred, there could be no outlook that was not essentially tied to vote-getting schemes. Politicians had not learned to think in a vacuum. Worse still, the men with self-possession who could stand alone never entered politics. The dominant Republican Party was, therefore, deficient in men and foresight, to its shame.

The Republican Party, big, powerful, and well-organized, could stifle every outburst of independence. District after district was content with a condition of things that they did not understand. Fictitious activity waltzed around in political dress masquerading as genuine achievement. George Bernard Shaw's oft-quoted statement that "the famous Constitution survives only because whenever any corner of it gets into the way of the accumulating dollar it is pettishly knocked off and thrown away" was all too true. The Roman legions of solidly entrenched corporations were holding the citadels of political prominence in direct violation of the most fundamental rule of political theory as expressed by Lord Acton:

People who pay wages ought not to be the political masters of those who earn them for whom misgovernment means not mortified want or stinted luxury, but want and pain and degrada-

Laws should be adapted to those who have the heaviest stake in the country.

Those were the halcyon days when the dominant political party exhorted everyone to "stay in Jericho", which meant to remain with the Republican Party. What days they were as the American electorate sat on a tinder box of political dynamite. No one thought of the morrow, analyzed the causes, or attempted to foresee the future. Cause and effect were inextricably interwoven in the presence of the Republican Party in power. Were they to be removed by an absolutely unthinkable revolution, the cause of our then prosperity would be removed and we would be in chaos.

The Republican analysis of cause and effect is as famously there had been a revival in the shape of a rise in gold prices | fatuous as that of the story of the belief of generations of people on the Isle of St. Kilda. For years the arrival of a ship in the harbor was accompanied by an epidemic of colds in the head. All the ingenuity of the harbor people failed to fathom the connection between the ship's arrival and the presence of the cold at the same time. Finally someone thought that it might not be the ship's fault at all. When that day dawned the people looked for another reason. They found it when they remembered that the ships could only enter the harbor when a strong northeast wind was blowing. Then they laughed at their own incredulity. have laughed at the myth of the only party fit to rule.

Nothing like that happened to us, for the overwhelming cataclysm was upon us before we stirred. In a brilliant piece of satire, yet only too true, it was said of Lord Liverpool what might well have been said of the Republican administrations that forgot the lessons they should have learned from Theodore Roosevelt. If we substitute the Republican Party for the name of Lord Liverpool we can catch the subtle irony. Substitute American names for the English ones also.

Lord Liverpool (the Republican Party) governed England (America) in the greatest crisis of the war, and for 12 troubled (America) in the greatest crisis of the war, and for 12 troubled years of peace, chosen not by the nation but by the owners of the land. The English (American) gentry were well content with an order of things by which for a century and a quarter (almost three decades) they had enjoyed so much prosperity and power. Desiring no change they wished for no ideas. They sympathized with the complacent respectability of Lord Liverpool's character and knew how to value the safe sterility of his mind. He distanced statesment like Grantilla Wellegley and Camping not in with of the infection. like Grenville, Wellesley, and Canning, not in spite of his inferiority but by reason of it. His mediocrity was his merit. The secret of his policy was that he had none. For 6 years his administration outdid the Holy Alliance. For 5 years it led the liberal movement throughout the world. The Prime Minister hardly knew the Obviously other changes in the ideas expressed must be made, but the picture above of a complacent administration, or series of administrations, enjoying the windfalls of a virgin nation emerging from a war that had prostrated two dozen other sovereignties is too much like the parallel case of the English Prime Minister to miss. In neither case did either one attempt to study the causes and provide for the future. In both instances disaster only uncovered the hypocrites.

In another quotation we have the remarks of Senator Smoot defending the World War Debt Commission's recommendation by the contrasts in the position of American workmen and that of the foreign nations. He points out that-all expect the two chickens in the pot and a car in every garage as well as the elimination of the poorhouse.

The American workman, well nourished, well fed, well clothed, his children in college, with all the wonderful opportunities staring him in the face, with present and future advancements and educa-tional opportunities; the presence of movies, automobiles, country week ends.

But the distinguished Senator and leader did more than this. He introduced tables to startle us now as we look back and saw what America was. I have unanimous consent to put these tables in at this point for your inspection and study. I am quoting from page 601 of the World War debt report. Senator Smoot talking:

I ask Senators to follow me now while I give the comparative pre-war wealth of Italy, France, the United Kingdom, and the United States, with the wealth of those countries in 1925. The several currencies are converted into dollars at par value of the pre-war period. The figures for 1925 are converted into dollars according to the average quotation of the several currencies on New York during the first half of 1925:

[All figures in billions]

	Middle 1914		Middle 1925
	Wealth	Income	Wealth	Income
Italy France United Kingdom United States	21. 4 57. 9 68. 1 200. 0	3. 76 7. 24 10. 95 33. 00	22. 3 51. 6 117. 8 380. 0	4. 06 7. 74 19. 00 70. 00

Before the war the economic resources of the United Kingdom were, roughly, one-third of those of the United States; those of France, one-fourth; those of Italy, one-tenth. In 1925 the economic resources of the United Kingdom were less than one-third of the United States; those of France were reduced to one-eighth and those of Italy to about one-seventeenth.

If you reduce the 1925 dollars to the pre-war dollars and divide them by an index number representing the increase in wholesale prices which has occurred in the United States, we find that while the wealth and income have increased in the United States by 20 and 34 percent representingly and in the United States by 20 and 34 percent, respectively, and in the United Kingdom by 9 and 10 percent, they have, on the other hand, very considerably decreased in Italy and France. The wealth of Italy in the middle of 1925, calculated on this basis, was about 34 percent less than in 1914, and the income of Italy showed a decrease of about 32 percent cent

It is perhaps more striking to take the average per-capita wealth and income of the several countries for the two periods. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a table making these comparisons, calculated in dollars

Average per-capita wealth and income (in dollars) šio remono, nekajoni-ka Isoloma se kajonija nekaj	Middle 1914		Middle 1925

	Wealth	Income	Wealth	Income
Italy	0. 596 1. 455	105 182	0. 553 1. 306	101
United Kingdom	1. 471 2. 040	237 337	2, 600 3, 333	614

Was this the El Dorado? Well, look at the following quotation from the same source on page 604 depicting the income taxes and showing how a little foresight might have developed a sinking fund for the future:

Income	Income taxes
	Italy	Belgium	France	England	United States
$1,000 $2,000 $3,000 $4,000 $5,000	$189, 21 392, 18 599, 30 812, 18 1, 025, 06	$29. 15 107. 70 238. 45 413. 35 619. 90	$48. 99 174. 55 348. 00 569. 40 838. 75	0 $67.50 202.50 382.50 787.50	0 0 $7.50 22.50 37.50

That contract shows the Nation in the days of the "golden Wealth stifled thought and planning.

With these reasons, therefore, social reform has been delayed, and the inevitable consequences of such delay have poured in like a swollen mountain stream to uproot the gains of ages. No more pitiful and disillusionary panorama existed in the world than the scenes of desolation and heart-rending grief in the very homes of American citizens, pitiful far more relatively than in any other country because the descent into trouble had been more hasty and quicker and so seemingly far away.

Our system, reaching the point of deification almost overnight, because the triumph of the mock heroic and the allcertain tendency of our American institutions to elevate the masses of people to increase their part in the work and the fruit of civilization in comfort, and education in selfrespect and independence was abruptly halted and seemingly there was nothing to do but await a political manna.

In that general decay the fundamental principles that property should escape insecurity and labor should be independent, with protection of the rich against envy and the poor against oppression, were jettisoned in the mad scramble of individualism for personal gains. Individualism in the raw presented a sorry spectacle.

The year of 1933, in March, presented the new President with an avalanche of problems. What he did and how he did it is history.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who in emergency proved himself resolute, excusably peremptory, and prompt to be obeyed, made ample use of the credit and other available resources of this country to stem the tide. He expanded the efforts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation-a President Hoover device. Up to the end of the last fiscal period the debt was pushed upward to $10,000,000. A parade of the means and instrumentalities in that gigantic peace-time organization which outdid any prior effort is needless with the enlightenment of American people today except to touch on the expenditures in round numbers.

Seven billion dollars have been spent for relief and public works and four billion through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation itself to private corporations, groups, and public units, as well as those that occupy a place intermediate between a private corporation and a public institution.

There was a resultant increase in purchasing power of the consuming public and a greater market demand for commodities. It may be well said that the consequent increases were greater than the amount spent to set them in motion. Did not industry move forward with orders, and did not labor profit in shortened hours and higher wages?

It would be difficult to say that the one billion loaned to the banking structure, and to the systems of transportation, the same round numbers to such sustaining units as building and loan, mortgage, and kindred institutions, another one thousand million or more to the administrative units of cities, towns, States, and to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and to similar enterprises, and finally the one billion in purchased bank stocks—were not helpful in averting the impending confusion and business anarchy.

All of these emergency measures included the shoring of the weakening framework of our banking houses. Today these loans are recoverable so that in the strictest sense the heroic measures of the Roosevelt administration were not only palliatives but they continued within themselves restoratives, which when intermingled with the focal points of the disease itself not only neutralized the microbes but gave new and invigorating values.

These restoratives gave confidence too and engendered enthusiasm and in that alone the prescriptions were worthwhile. America turned from fears and incubuses to tackle with enthusiasm the new era. It is easy now to laugh at the hippodrome-appearing efforts but you cannot keep down enthusiasm. Emerson said, "Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm."

With all the beneficent results attendant from those huge leans and investments, private business took on a new lease, but like a convalescent patient irritated by the sick-room routine and the necessary convalescent aids it has begun to fight back and show an ugly return for the helping hand that pulled it out of the difficulty.

We know that local units never could have undertaken the necessary steps for this recuperation. Because of Federal aid there has been little or no relative increase in the State debts. Despite the added load the Federal credit has remained unimpaired and the colossal success that attended the last offering of the Treasury indicates that the Federal credit is better now than at any time in our history.

THE FUTURE

With recovery in motion it would be the height of folly for us to hope to continue this unnatural and extraordinary spending and lending by the Federal Government. Most of all would this tend to throw out the progress of industry itself, which is apparently on the way up, and all other things being equal ought to be near the point of full restoration. If we grant that our tremendous loans and expenditures did stimulate private business in an artificial way, we must face the possibility that it might overplay its part and result in an unnatural inflation or room bonanza that would be utterly inconsistent with the forces of economy and present growth.

For that we must be on our guard and curtail the efforts that will lead to unwarranted expansive propensities. Seemingly we must reduce our expenditures and by that very fact take up the slack in added immediate taxation, as the former must be a gradual procedure.

Obviously any tax that will hit at the root of speculative funds or even idle uneconomic veins will act as a deterrent. In a large sense the Presidential message is an attempt to tap a hidden vein. It may prove helpful in this sense in bringing to the surface the funds that have hitherto allegedly been used to evade taxation.

Certainly the added need for taxation involved in the bonus mandate from Congress and the Triple A, change may temporarily halt the application of the brakes, but this retardation can only be momentary. Those brakes must be applied.

In this difficult field of taxation our problems will arise more trenchant with difficulties than any prior ones. Anyone can spend; the few alone can save. From time immemorial the spenders have been better organized than the taxpayers. The biggest problems of the Nation today center around judicious taxation and equally judicious but restrained withdrawal of public Federal aid.

The gains in social reform which have been made with imperishable renown by our President and the administration must be consolidated. Further advances must await the clearing up of the back areas. In the consolidation the temporary replenishment of confidence and rest to a bewildered people who must look with grateful, even though startled, eyes at the success of the most daring innovator in American history.

The President has done in the executive field what John Marshall did in the judicial. Has he, too, carved out a new empire?

No matter what one may think about the New Deal, it must be admitted that the administration met the challenge that industry through the dominant party should have met. The best proof of this is in the recent utterance of Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of the General Motors Corporation:

Added responsibilities must be assumed by industry. Industry must assume the role of enlightened industrial statesmanship. It can no longer confine its responsibilities to the mere physical production and distribution of goods and services. It must aggressively move forward and attune its thinking and its policies toward advancing the interests of the community at large, from which it receives a most valuable franchise.

Most assuredly the gains in social reform which have been made with imperishable renown by our President and the administration must be consolidated. Further advances must await the clearing up of the back areas. In the consolidation the temporary replenishment of confidence and rest to a bewildered people, who must look with grateful even though startled eyes at the success of the most daring innovator in English history, must be maintained.

INCOME TAXES

If the returns in this avenue of revenue are unexpectedly large, it might be well for us to consider changes in the percentages of income that we are deriving from pure income, customs, and excises, the three major sources, and all the other minor modes. The generalizations that will be drawn from our tax reports are well worth the time and attention of this body. Our whole taxing policy may well be changed on the outcome of this study.

THE CONSTITUTION

Social legislation must go on, however, and we must cover the ground that 30 years of purblind inactivity of the Republican standpatters left behind as a solitary waste in the field of political action and theory. With the emergency happily past, the return to the absolute theory of the separation of powers becomes not a simple duty but a paramount one. I am not one of those who believes that the Constitution of these United States is a sacrosanct instrument of divinely inspired wisdom, around which we should plant the taboos of conservatism. Our Constitution is as good as its response to the times and needs of the day we live in at all times. Through over a century and a half of growth and the most vexatious of questions it has proved admirably sufficient with the exception of the Civil War. It has survived the most severe of all tests, practicability and adaptability, but that adaptability was not inherently found in the document itself, but through the expanding interpretations of the immortal John Marshall. We cannot blind ourselves to the fact that the judicial veto was not in the minds of the Constitutional Convention as we see it, but that it was a development that circumstances and John Marshall dictated.

However much I try personally to ask myself about article VI, section 2, where we note: "This Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereto shall be the supreme law of the land", I cannot avoid the conclusion that someone was to have the decision as to what laws were within the Constitution and what were not, unless we assume that there was an oversight. If the latter was true, then we have all the more reason to say that since our founders overlooked this need for a reviewing body, we ought to accept the principle which over a century of practice and precept has proved to be right. Only the Supreme Court is the arbiter, call it judicial veto or not.

I believe that many of our great social reforms may well come through the amendatory features of article V, thus affording time and discussion once the emergency is over for thorough analysis. I believe that emergencies will always find enough power reposing in the Congress or Chief Executive for two reasons. One is that in the Great War emergency the courts read into the Constitution the wide type of constructive expansion in the Congress and will do so again in civil cataclysms.

Under the war powers of the Congress there were espionage acts restricting freedom of speech and press; regulations on the price of fuel and of rents within the District of Columbia; governmental operation of railroad, telegraph, and telephone systems; commandeering ships and factory products; prohibition; national highways; cemeteries, all in the broadest sense of interpretation.

It is fair to assume that if the Supreme Court were asked to pass upon the emergency acts of the President in relief, the answer would be in favor of the broad extension. There is another element that works to the advantage of the Executive and even of the Congress, and that is time. From the promulgation of the order against the elements of depression time must intervene until the Supreme Court can pass upon it. In addition, the need for such prompt and heroic action is so universally felt that it is inconceivable that an action could be started to dethrone the policy. Time and popular need of an overwhelming nature ride with the Legislature and the Chief Executive in these cases.

There are tremendously significant words in the great case of Missouri v. Holland (252 U. S. 435), where an equally great Supreme Court Justice, Oliver Wendell Holmes, says about the right of the Federal Government to legislate in implementation of a treaty, "Here a national interest of very nearly the first magnitude is involved. * * * We see nothing in the Constitution that compels the Government to sit by while a good supply is cut off and the protectors of our forests and our crops are destroyed. It is not sufficient to rely upon the States; the reliance is vain." These are strong words for wildlife conservation. What indeed would they be for the preservation of the very lives of our citizens? Do they not sound in prophecy?

It must be remembered when those epochal cases of the New Deal were considered by the Supreme Court the pressing burdens of the immediate emergent action had happily passed and the Supreme Court was considering these energetic responses to a modern Iliad of woes in the opening rays of a new sunlight. It is a fair inference to draw that had those questions been raised in the height of the enthusiasm of the N. R. A. whirlwind acceptance by industry, labor, and the consumer with those all too vivid demonstrations of enthusiasm the decision might have been different. No one believes that the Supreme Court sits in a legal vacuum with nothing but precedents in attendance. They can no more escape the trend and thoughts, as well as the needs of the times, than they could give up the elements of life itself. It is fair to say also that the gigantic nature of the impending doom that was overcasting the entire Nation in its paralyzing clutches, as well as the tremendous and almost unanimous nature in which these Achillean efforts of the New Deal would have been most influential in forming the background for early judicial imprimaturs.

Secondly, and in a nature fittingly corollary to the first premise, the very delays that the opposite of the above conclusions would work to the advantage of the emergency itself, for if it was impossible to obtain judicial judgment at once then obviously it would take time, and certainly if time was allowed the program might well go on to a fair trial and end in success or failure. In other words, the very passage of time that must follow before a case may come before the Supreme Court works to the advantage of emergency legislation. Then, too, in this very respect there is so great a need and welcoming a response throughout the Nation that the objectors think well before inserting their instruments of emergency sabotage.

In his admirable book on The Growth of the Law, Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo says in the matter of modern development of thought on the Supreme Bench:

In the complexities of modern life there is a constantly increasing need for resort by the judges to some fact-finding agency which will substitute exact knowledge of factual conditions for conjecture and impression. A study of the opinions of Mr. Justice Brandeis will prove an impressive lesson in the capacity of the law to refresh itself from extrinsic sources, and thus revitalize its growth. His opinions are replete with references to the contemporary conditions, social, industrial, and political, of the community affected.

Further on he adds:

Jurisprudence has never been able in the long run to resist successfully a social or economic need that was strong and just.

He quotes Graham Wall as-

One of the most important functions of any vocational body is the continuous revision and increase of the heritage of knowledge and thought which comes within its sphere.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with. I may say this is agreeable to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], who objected this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Dies, for 10 days, on account of business.

To Mr. Fernandez, for 12 days, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. Ellenbogen, for 1 day, on account of illness in family.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2288. An act to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes;

S. 2496. An act to amend the Railway Labor Act;

S. 3761. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain land to the town of Wamsutter, Wyo.;

S. 3860. An act to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the National Defense Act", approved May 28, 1928; and

S. 3971. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce for the day that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], the Senator from California [Mr. McApoo]. the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are absent because of illness; that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] is absent because of illness in his family, and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The managers on the part of the House will call their next witness.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Call Albert C. Fordham.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF ALBERT C. FORDHAM

Albert C. Fordham, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Your name, please, sir.-A. Albert C. Fordham.

Q. Are you an attorney at law of West Palm Beach, Fla.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present in the courtroom of Judge Halsted L. Ritter at Miami, Fla., on October 28, 1929?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would appreciate it, sir, if you would state, to the best of your recollection, what took place in the courtroom on that others; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I morning.—A. The counterclaim filed by Harold Moore was filed; and after a few preliminary remarks, Judge Holland arose and said that he had instructed—

- Q. Pardon me. Do you mean Mr. Bert E. Holland, of Boston?—A. Yes, sir. He arose and said that he had discharged Rankin and Metcalf as his lawyers and had instructed Mr. Rankin to dismiss the bill, and he now wanted to dismiss or withdraw the bill—I do not remember which it was; either dismiss or withdraw. Then Judge Ritter asked him how much he had been paid, and he said, "Nothing." Then Judge Ritter said that he would not allow people to come in from the outside and induce local attorneys to start lawsuits and then allow them to dismiss them. There was a lot of other things went on there, but I do not suppose you are interested in those.
 - Q. Was Mr. Clarence Grill there?—A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. Do you know why he was there?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Please state it.—A. He had made an affidavit at my request regarding some insurance or insurance policies; and, fearing that the affidavit was not sufficient, I asked him to come down there at the hearing. I was there in Miami for 2 or 3 days, and he came down on the early morning train on that day.
- Q. Mr. Fordham, I will ask you, please, to look at these two letters which I now show you.

(The letters were shown to the witness and also to counsel for the respondent.)

Are you familiar with the signature of Mr. Walter S. Richardson?—A. I am.

Q. Do you or not recognize the signatures of Walter to each of these letters as his signature?—A. I do. They are his signature.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Were you representing anyone there that morning?— A. Yes. sir.
- Q. Who were you representing?-A. Harold A. Moore.
- Q. He was trustee under the first deed of trust?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How long had you represented him?—A. In that suit?
 Q. Yes.—A. Mr. Walsh, I do not know; but I should say about 10 days.
- Q. Did you omit to state all that Judge Ritter said upon that occasion? Did not Judge Ritter say that the interveners had come in who had certain rights, and there was quite a good deal of discussion about that, was there not?—A. I do not recall.
- Q. You do not recall him mentioning the interveners at all?—A. I do not.
- Q. You represented the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?— Is that correct?—A. In what suit?
 - Q. In this suit you were there on that day?—A. No, sir.
- Q. I thought you asked me if it was not this matter, and I said "yes", and I thought you answered "yes."—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you have any professional occasion to be there?—A. I represented Harold A. Moore, the trustee, in connection with Shutts & Bowen.
 - Q. Then you were representing Mr. Moore?-A. Yes.
- Q. Had you formerly represented the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. For a long time? How many years?—A. I cannot say, Mr. Walsh. I have known the Moores for over 50 years.
- Q. How long have you represented them in the matters that were connected with these hotels in Florida?—A. Since the 26th of January, I think.
- Q. You introduced a couple of letters here. These are the letters, are they not? Before I come to that, however, was there a request made of the judge then not to appoint a receiver?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. By whom was that request made?-A. Mr. Holland.
- Q. Did anybody else make a request not to appoint the receiver?—A. I think Mr. Bowen and maybe Mr. McPherson.
 - Q. Mr. Lautmann was there also?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were you aware of the fact that at that time there had been a bondholders' committee formed in the city of Chi- cago, formed on the 24th day of October preceding this—4 days before this—at which time the bonds represented by Mr. Bert E. Holland were turned into the bondholders' committee or a pledge made to turn them in?—A. I was not aware of that. I was aware of this insofar as the bondholders' committee was formed, because Mr. Lautmann said he represented the bondholders' committee, which had a certain large percentage of bonds. He stated the percentage, but I do not remember it.

- Q. Was Mr. Sugden made a member of that committee?—
 A. I believe I found out later he was a member of the committee.
- Q. At the time of this discussion in court were the bonds put in the hands of the Chicago bondholders' committee?—A. I know nothing about that.
- Q. You know they got in there some time, though?—A. I do not even know that, except what I heard.
- Q. Very good. Mr. McPherson, for Shutts & Bowen, objected to the appointment of a receiver. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And the judge stated it was a case that called for the appointment of a receiver and he was going to appoint one?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did he not indicate he was going to appoint Mr. Richardson, who had had charge of the property before, as trustee?—A. He did.
- Q. Did Mr. McPherson ask that the matter be deferred until the afternoon?—A. He did.
- Q. You were present then when these two letters were brought in, in the afternoon?—A. I was not there in the afternoon.
- Q. You were not there in the afternoon at all?—A. No, sir. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Gentlemen, have you identified the letters by this witness?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. These letters were not introduced until afternoon, were they? You just identified Mr. Richardson's signature?—A. These letters were taken out of the Whitehall files in my presence by Mr. Mulherin and were given to me to keep them in the safe, to be held until I was subpensed to bring them to Miami.
- Q. Who had the Whitehall files at that time?—A. Whitehall.
 - Q. Where were they?—A. In Whitehall.
 - Q. Was Mr. Sweeny there?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Did they contain a great amount of correspondence?— A. Yes, sir.
- Q. A great number of letters?—A. A very large number.
- Q. Did you read those letters?—A. No, sir; I did not.
- Q. Did you read any of them?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Who asked you to preserve those?—A. Mr. Mulherin.
- Q. This was after the entire matter came up?—A. I do not know what you mean by that.
- Q. I mean after the investigation was started in the Whitehall case by the House committee.—A. It was at the time when Mr. Mulherin came the first time to West Palm Beach.
- Q. Was there a hearing going on at that time, or a House investigation?—A. I imagine there was, from the fact that Mr. Mulherin was there looking into it.
- Q. Is that the only reason you have for coming to that opinion?—A. I do not know.
- Q. Who picked out the two letters out of this great bunch of letters?—A. Mulherin.
- Q. He did not show you any others at all?—A. He gave me about a dozen.
 - Q. Have you got the dozen?-A. No, sir.
- Q. What did you do with the rest of them?—A. I took them into my office and put them in my file after I had testified in Miami, and some of them have disappeared. I do not know where they are. They were copies. I was only able to find four of them.
 - Q. Have you those letters with you now?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. May I look at them, please?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will you gentlemen give me the other letters?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. He can identify the other two if you like.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Have you gentlemen all of the Sweeny correspondence, this entire range of letters?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I am advised by Mr. Mulherin that we have copies of them all.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Of all the letters that were taken out of the Whitehall files?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes. Mr. Mulherin advises me that you have in your hands now copies of all communications that were taken from the files of the Whitehall Co.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask for information, were or were not those files still in Mulherin's possession until very shortly before this hearing?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. Mulherin advises me that he has never had any since they were turned over to the subcommittee at Miami.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will you ask Mr. Mulherin if he did get all the files at one time and give Mr. Sweeny a receipt for the same?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. If you have no objection, Mr. Mulherin may answer the question directly.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). He indicated that he did not. [Addressing Mr. Mulherin:] Did any person get the whole file from Mr. Sweeny and take a receipt for it?

Mr. MULHERIN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You gentlemen have not had time, as I understand?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No. We will offer these letters for identification, everything we have.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good; offer the whole file. Mr. Sweeny has it here under subpena duces tecum, has he not?

Mr. MULHERIN. We sent a subpena to produce them. Whether or not he has them or not, I do not know.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Is he in attendance here?

Mr. MULHERIN. He is.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will you ask him to give you the entire file?

Mr. MULHERIN. Yes. Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to propound a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas desires to propound a query, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

When Judge Ritter was requested not to appoint a receiver, did he say anything to the effect that a receiver ought to be appointed, or that the property's proper care necessitated the appointment of a receiver?

A. I think he said the first, but not the last. I do not remember the last at all.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I submit a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas submits a question, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McGill, as follows:

Did Mr. Holland say he wished to dismiss or withdraw the bill, or did he say, in substance, he did not want the court to appoint a receiver?

A. He said all of those. He said first he wanted to dismiss or withdraw, and after that was refused he said he did not want a receiver appointed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am going ahead, and you can offer this after I get through examining him.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May I suggest to counsel that, if convenient, we limit the examination to the transactions in the neighborhood of the court, and then we can get the rest of the papers later on.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very well; I will comply with that suggestion.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You were the attorney in the proceedings for the foreclosing of the third deed of trust, were you not?-A. Yes, sir-one of them; Shutts & Bowen.

Q. You were present at the sale?-A. I think so.

Q. It was bid in by Kenneth Moore?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Kenneth Moore was the son of W. J. Moore?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was the brother of the trustee in the first deed of trust?-A. Harold Moore: yes, sir.

Q. After this discussion that took place in the morning, you say you did not go back in the afternoon?-A. No, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, the Holland-Sugden interests, after the appointment of the receiver, allowed the case to progress along until it was finally disposed of, did they not?-A. I did not get your first few words, sir.

Q. The first few words? I will ask the question over again. After the proceedings there that morning, there were no appeals taken, no further motions filed in Judge Ritter's court, that you know of; were there?-A. I think your statement is correct.

Q. No challenge to anything that the judge did, no appeal from any order that he made?-A. There was no appeal from any order.

Q. And, so far as you know, no motion filed of any kind or character?-A. I do not know.

Q. And it ran along until the final settlement of the case; did it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Sugden, or the same interests that Mr. Holland had represented, with their bonds in charge of this Chicago committee, went through to the end; did they not?-A. I did not know that they had the bonds in the Chicago committee.

Q. Did they have a stipulation for the bonds?—A. I do not know any-

Q. Was Mr. Sugden a member of the bondholders' committee?-A. I know nothing about any stipulation. I know that Mr. Sugden appeared in published reports as a member of the committee.

Q. You do not know whether he was or not?-A. I do not even know Mr. Sugden.

Q. Did you yourself ever attend a meeting of the committee?-A. I did not.

Q. Are you still representing the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?-A. The American Bond & Mortgage Co. is not in existence any more.

Q. Do you represent what is known as the Moore interests down there?-A. I do not know what the Moore interests

Q. Did you represent the American Bond & Mortgage Co. up to the time that it went out of business entirely?—A. In

Q. In the things in Florida, did you represent it?—A. Not all of them.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No further questions. The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness may stand aside.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Call Mr. Lautmann, please.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF HERBERT M. LAUTMANN Herbert M. Lautmann, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. State your name to the Court, if you please.—A. Herbert M. Lautmann.

Q. Your residence is in Chicago, and what is the style of your firm now?-A. Sonnenschein, Berkson, Lautmann, Levinson & Morse.

Q. Mr. Lautmann, were you in Judge Ritter's court on October 28, 1929?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. State to the Court, if you please, what transpired during your presence in the court .-- A. When the case of Holland versus Whitehall was called, Mr. A. L. Rankin addressed the court on a presentation of his motion for the appointment of a receiver. He had not proceeded very far when Mr. Bowen, of Shutts & Bowen, asked the court for permission to have Bert E. Holland, the plaintiff, address the court. The court granted the permission.

Mr. Holland stated to the court that he was one of the complainants; that the other complainants were co-trustees, and that he spoke for them as well as himself; that he had requested that Mr. Rankin not represent him in the matter; that he appeared in his own person and on his own behalf He stated that since the employment of Mr. Rankin he desired to have the suit withdrawn; furthermore, that he wished to have the court know that he did not believe a receiver should be appointed for the Whitehall property.

The court, as I recall it, interrupted him and asked him, in substance if not in exact words, who had paid him or what he had been paid for taking the attitude of dismissing a suit which he had authorized in the first instance; that he did not like the idea of persons coming into the State of Florida from outside, bringing proceedings, and then asking that they be dismissed; that he was familiar with the Whitehall property, it had been in his court under his jurisdiction in bankruptcy, that he was familiar with the property, and believed that a receiver should take charge of the property for the benefit of the bondholders.

I think that was all that transpired between the court and Judge Holland.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Lautmann, whom did you represent that morning, that day?—A. I represented the committee that had been organized as the committee for the protection of the first-mortgage bondholders holding bonds sold by the American Bond & Mortgage Co.

Q. And upon what date was that committee formed?—A. Of my own knowledge I do not know, except that I was told at the time I was directed to go to Florida that such a committee had been organized. I took no part in the organization of it.

Q. You were not present at the organization of the committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you quite sure of that?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to look at the paper which I now hand you, entitled:

First meeting. Minutes of a meeting of the committee for the protection of the holders of the first-mortgage bonds sold through American Bond & Mortgage Co., held at the First National Bank of Chicago, October 24, 1929.

Was your firm represented there?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom was it represented? You may look at that. There are a number of pages, and I do not want to use it all.—A. To my knowledge, Mr. Hugo Sonnenschein and Mr. Edward P. Morse.

Q. Is Mr. Sonnenschein here?-A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Morse, I believe, is here?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May I see that, Judge, when you are through with it?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will give you a copy of it. Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I should like to see a copy soon.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am going to give it to you in 2 minutes [handing document to Mr. Manager Sumners].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while counsel are making inquiries among themselves, I send to the desk a question which I desire to have submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah propounds a question, which will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr.

King, as follows:

Did Holland state that he had notified Rankin not to file the complaint or commence an action?

A. He did not so state to the court.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Your firm remained as attorneys for the bondholders' committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The interests that Mr. Holland represented were what were known as the Sugden interests, were they not?—A. I believe so.

Q. And Mr. Sugden, some time between the 3d of October and the time this hearing took place in Judge Ritter's court, had become a member of that committee, had he not?—A. I had been so informed: yes.

Q. And the bonds that were formerly held by Mr. Holland as trustee, the Sugden bonds, went into that committee after it was formed?—A. They did not go into the committee. I understand they were subsequently deposited with the depositary selected by the committee.

Q. That is what I mean. I do not mean they went into it personally. Do you know the date that they went in?—A. I do not.

Q. But was it not a part of the plan when the committee was formed, and an agreement, that they should go in when he was made a member of the committee?—A. My information was that the Sugden interests were the largest single holder of bonds sold by the American Bond & Mortgage Co., approximately $300,000, and that all of the bonds which they owned were subsequently deposited, and for that reason he was selected as a member of the bondholders' committee.

Q. But I was asking for a date, Mr. Lautmann.—A. I do not know the date.

Q. When did those bonds go in?-A. I do not know.

Q. Did they go in at the first meeting or the inception of the bondholders' committee?—A. I cannot state of my own knowledge.

Q. You were there, were you not, representing the bond-holders' committee on that day?—A. In court?

Q. Yes.-A. Yes, sir.

Q. If those bonds had been put in, you were representing those as you were all the other bondholders?—A. Yes, sir; if they had been, I was.

Q. Assuming, for the purpose of this question, that they had been, that they went in when the committee was formed, then you were representing those bonds, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there were no motions filed subsequent to this challenging anything that was done by Judge Ritter that you know of?—A. By whom?

Q. By anybody. I guess I will ask you about your own knowledge. There was none filed by you, was there?—A. No, sir; I had no appearance in the courtroom. I was merely indulged in to speak.

Q. But you had an interest in the case?—A. I represented nobody of record.

Q. But you did have a very substantial interest, did you not, as attorney for the bondholders' committee which took in all these bonds?—A. I thought so and tried to make that clear to the court.

Q. Shutts & Bowen made no such motion, did they?—A. What do you mean by "such motion"?

Q. A motion challenging anything that Judge Ritter did there that morning?—A. They did challenge the selection of the court's appointment of a receiver.

Q. In what way? Did they file a motion?—A. They orally objected to the selection of Mr. Richardson as receiver and asked to be heard upon it.

Q. That was a motion to remove him, was it, or not to appoint him?—A. It was an objection to his qualifications to serve as a receiver.

Q. That occurred upon that day of which you have been speaking?—A. That morning.

Q. And the matter was taken up later in the afternoon, was it not?—A. The court said he would hear it at 2 o'clock.

Q. Did you go back at 2 o'clock?—A. I did.

Q. And he overruled the motion, did he not?—A. He overruled the objections.

Q. And appointed Mr. Richardson?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You carried on as attorneys for that committee all through the proceedings that took place after the initial hearing?—A. My associate did.

Q. Your firm did?-A. Yes.

Q. And down to the time the final decree was made?— A. Yes, sir.

Q. And subsequently?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question to be propounded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Pope, as follows:

Did you address the court? If so, what was said by you and by the court?

A. I was introduced to the court by Mr. Bowen, of Shutts & Bowen, with the request that I be permitted to speak. The court granted that indulgence. I told the court that I was there on behalf of a committee of bondholders in behalf of bondholders; that it was the opinion of the committee that an appointment of a receiver was unnecessary and that the committee wished the court to consider their views; that a receivership of this property would be an expensive and unnecessary action; that the property was in the technical possession of the trustee under the first mortgage-bond issue and had been surrendered to him by the owner of the equity; that the committee was quite satisfied to employ competent managers to operate the hotel under the direction of the court. I gave him the names of the committee and the interests or affiliations that those members of the committee had, some being from Boston, some from New York, and some from Chicago; that if the court desired, the committee would submit itself immediately to the jurisdiction of the court; that if the court desired, the committee would augment itself by any representative citizen of Miami, of Florida, that the court might select, who would be under the supervision and direction of the court in the activities and management and operation of the property under the trustee in possession under the bond issue. The court indicated to me that he did not believe that the action of the plaintiff in asking to withdraw or dismiss the suit was in good faith. He said to me that he did not care to hear from a bondholders' committee any further, that he did not care to have any interference with the operation of this property by the court; that he felt that by the appointment of a receiver the court could look after the property without any other persons interfering.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I submit a question to be asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question:

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Adams, as follows:

Did you, or your firm, ever enter an appearance in this proceeding?

A. We did not.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You had Messrs. Shutts & Bowen representing you in the filing of a cross-bill there, did you not?—A. No, sir; they represented the trustee under the first mortgage.

Q. Did you have anything to do with their filing of the cross-bill?—A. Yes; we conferred with them, consulted with them—in respect to the filing of the cross-bill.

Q. And you advised with respect to the form of it—the prayer in it?—A. I do not think so.

Q. You read it, did you not?—A. After it was filed.

Q. After it was filed. And that contained no such prayer as you have stated in the answer to the question handed up by a member of the Court?—A. The receiver had already been appointed, and was in possession.

Q. You could file a motion, could you not, to set that aside? You could have filed a motion? First, you could have taken an appeal, could you not, from anything that was done there, and, second, you could have filed a motion if there was anything wrong about the appointment of a receiver, his character, and had a hearing upon it, could you not?—A. We could have done many things, but we did not.

Q. There was no appeal taken?—A. The prayer of the bill was to foreclose the trust deed on behalf of the trustees.

Q. That cross-bill was filed the same day, was it not, on which you had that discussion at the hearing?—A. I am not sure when it was filed.

Q. Is it not a fact that the answer and counter-claim of Harold A. Moore, trustee, was filed on October 28, 1929?—A. If that is what the record shows, it must be. I had no knowledge of my own as to the date.

Q. I know you are testifying from your recollection, and I am asking you whether or not you recollect that that is so.—A. No.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender an inquiry to be propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Lewis, as follows:

Do you now hold or have you lately held any official position at the Chicago bar, chosen by the bar at Chicago. If so, at what time and for what length of time was your service?

A. I have been secretary of the Chicago Bar Association 3 years; I served on its board of managers 5 years; I have been first vice president 1 year, and am now president of the Chicago Bar Association.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send the following interrogatory to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Was any motion made to have the committee representing the bondholders named as plaintiffs or to have them substituted for Bert E. Holland?

A. No

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk to be propounded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. MINTON, as follows:

How did the Whitehall property ever come into the control of the trustee under the mortgage?

A. I assume that that question means prior to the filing of these proceedings.

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

A. There had been a foreclosure of a junior mortgage, and at the foreclosure sale it had been bid in by the trustee or his nominee under a junior mortgage. To him the property was turned over by the trustee in bankruptcy, and he surrendered possession to the trustee under the first mortgage. The actual control of the physical property was in the managers of the hotel who were employed at that time.

Does that answer the question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

I send forward another question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Minton, as follows:

For whom was the trustee acting in the foreclosure of the third mortgage?

A. He was acting for the owners of the bonds under the third mortgage; and those were owned, as I understand it, by the American Bond & Mortgage Co., which subsequently passed into the hands of liquidating trustees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send forward a question which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Did the action in the name of Holland continue till the end of all proceedings?

A. It did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further questions from members of the Court?

Does the counsel for the respondent have any other questions on cross-examination?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have no other questions, Mr. President.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. I forgot to ask you this question: What percentage of the first-mortgage bonds came into the control of the organization which you represented?—A. Ninety-three percent.

Q. At the time this matter was being discussed in the court of Judge Ritter, was anything said there about the bonds that Mr. Holland claimed to represent having been transferred to any other party or interest? What I mean is, did anyone claim that he did not have the authority to represent the bonds?-A. Did anyone claim that he did not? Q. Yes .- A. No.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other questions to be asked of this witness?

RECROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Was the third mortgage given for claims of the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?-A. I cannot answer.

Q. Do you know?-A. I cannot answer that.

Q. Do you know what the indebtedness covered by the bonds was for?-A. Not of my own knowledge: no. sir.

Q. The trustee under the second mortgage was a man named Thomas, was he not?-A. I believe so.

Q. Do you know who Mr. Thomas is?-A. I do not know him; no.

Q. Was he an officer or employee of the American Bond & Mortgage Co.?-A. I think he was.

Q. So that the American Bond & Mortgage Co., as a matter of fact, controlled all the mortgage indebtedness there was upon that property? You know that, do you not?-A. No; that is not true.

Q. That is not true? They did not control it?-A. They may have controlled the second and third mortgages, but the first mortgage was in the hands of the public.

Q. Yes; but they had their trustee in that first mortgage, did they not? He could have foreclosed it a year before he did, could he not?-A. Yes.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send forward another question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana propounds a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. MINTON, as follows:

The trustee in the first mortgage in the foreclosure of the third mortgage was not acting for and on behalf of the bondholders under the first mortgage, was he?

A. Well, I am not sure that I understand exactly that question. He was trustee under the first mortgage at all times, and would be acting for the benefit of the bondholders under the first mortgage at all times. Now, if you mean whether he took any part in the third-mortgage foreclosure as trustee in the first mortgage, I cannot answer what his activities were in that foreclosure. I am not familiar with that.

FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. One additional question: What part of the $300,000 mortgage that was put on the Whitehall property after it was foreclosed and came into the possession of the representatives of the first-mortgage bondholders was expended by the committee which organized and represented that bondholders' committee?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to make an objection to that question. We are not responsible, or Judge Ritter is not responsible, for anything this committee did afterward. It is entirely immaterial. It is raising a collateral issue.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I withdraw the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The honorable manager on the part of the House withdraws the question.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I should like to ask counsel a question, however. My recollection has been confused. thought it was in the record in this case that a $300,000 mortgage had been put on the property, and that a certain part of that money had gone to the expenses of the committee which organized the bondholders.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). My answer to that would be that it is immaterial, if I had the knowledge; but I have not the knowledge. Furthermore, that would be as immaterial coming from you, with all due respect, as it would from the witness.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. All right, Judge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is excused. Mr. Manager PERKINS. Call J. M. McPherson.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF JOSEPH M. M'PHERSON

Joseph M. McPherson, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. McPherson, you are a member of the firm of Shutts & Bowen?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present in the courtroom on the day of October 28, 1929, the scene of which has been described in this courtroom here?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Please state to this Court what transpired .- A. The matter came on on that day upon an application for the appointment of a receiver, notice of the hearing having been theretofore served upon counsel of record. The appearances. as I remember them, were: For the plaintiff, Mr. Rankin and Mr. Metcalf; for the defendant Harold A. Moore, as trustee, the firm of Shutts & Bowen, represented by Crate D. Bowen and myself, and Mr. Albert C. Fordham, of West Palm Beach. There was also present in his own proper person Mr. Bert E. Holland, the plaintiff. Mr. Herbert Lautmann, of Chicago, was present in the courtroom on behalf of the bondholders' committee. When the hearing opened Mr. Bowen or someone announced to the court that Mr. Holland was present in his proper person and would the court hear him. Mr. Holland announced to the court that he had, as I recall it, requested Mr. Rankin not to file the bill of complaint, advising the court, however, that he had theretofore authorized Mr. Rankin to do so. He asked Judge Ritter to take no further action on the bill. It is my recollection that he asked leave to withdraw it. He, in any event, was clear in his request that nothing further be done on the application for the appointment of the receiver. Judge Ritter, after hearing Mr. Holland's statement in its entirety, whatever it was, announced that he did not fancy outside counsel-that is, counsel from out of the State of Florida-commencing litigation in his court and, after it was brought on for attention or action, attempting to withdraw it or to stop those proceedings. He stated that he was somewhat familiar with the property and that, in view of the fact that there had been or were then before him petitions for leave to intervene, he felt that he was required to go ahead and that he would do Thereupon Mr. Rankin presented the application for the appointment of a receiver.

Q. Just there did or did not Mr. Holland tell the court that he had dismissed Mr. Rankin from the case?—A. As I remember the statement, Mr. PERKINS, it was this: Before the hearing commenced I saw Mr. Holland and Mr. Rankin in a conversation in the court. Of course, I did not hear what they said. As I remember Mr. Holland's statement to the court on that point, it was that he had-though he originally had authorized Mr. Rankin to file the suit, he had subsequently instructed him not to do so, and that he had asked him to dismiss the suit or withdraw as his counsel. I will not be positive as to which he said, but the impression was clear, I think, that Mr. Rankin was at that stage not authorized to proceed for Mr. Holland. After Mr. Rankin had completed his presentation of the application Mr. Bowen, of my firm, presented an argument dealing generally with the law of the case, of course, in opposition to the application. Mr. Bowen, at the conclusion of his address, presented Mr. Lautmann to Judge Ritter, with the statement that Mr. Lautmann represented the bondholders' committee, and he would like for Judge Ritter to hear him. Judge Ritter asked if the bondholders as such were parties to the record. Upon being advised that they were not, he declined to hear Mr. Lautmann. I thereupon commenced the presentation of the opposition to the application. I had there and then or shortly before that lodged with the court as attorney for the defendant, the trustee, an answer and counterclaim. I had also filed at that time a number of affidavits touching the allegations of fact in the bill of complaint. I set out and outlined the position of the trustee as reflected by those pleadings and those affidavits. At the conclusion of that presentation, Judge Ritter stated, as I remember it, that there were "altogether too many Moores in this lawsuit", and, though he was not particularly interested in the fraud charge made against my client, that he was going to appoint Walter Richardson receiver of the hotel. Being on my feet at the time, I asked Judge Ritter if he would hear me in opposition to the person of his selection. He said that he would and fixed the time at 2 o'clock that same day. I went back to my office and procured from Mr. Holland or Mr. Lautmann, or perhaps both, some correspondence and telegrams. I do not have them now; they are not in the record.

Q. Do you know what became of them?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did you file them of record in the court?—A. It is my recollection that I did, sir; but I do not find them there now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to propound two questions to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts submits a question, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. WALSH, as follows:

Was the manner in which Judge Ritter spoke to Mr. Holland brusque or indicative of temper?

A. I should rather say that it was positive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the next question submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

What was the tone or manner of Judge Ritter toward Mr. Holland and other counsel?

A. I should say that Judge Ritter's attitude toward Judge Holland as expressed by his remarks was very firm and positive; and probably less respectful, if that is the word, to Mr. Lautmann.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the proceedings for a moment? In order that a message may be received from the House of Representatives, I ask that the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment be suspended temporarily, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

(The message from the House of Representatives appears elsewhere in the legislative proceedings of today's Record.)

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate, in legislative session, take a recess in order that the Court may resume its

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, resumed the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

MODIFICATION OF ORDER PRESCRIBING HOURS OF DAILY SESSIONS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the order heretofore entered with respect to the daily sessions of the Senate sitting as a Court provided that a recess should be taken from 1:30 o'clock until 2 o'clock. It has been found that 30 minutes are insufficient to enable the participants in these proceedings to obtain lunch. At the request of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and others, I ask unanimous consent for a modification of the order, so that it will read from 1:30 o'clock p. m. until 2:15 p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order heretofore entered will be modified as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF JOSEPH M. M'PHERSON (CONTINUED)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send several questions to the desk and ask that they may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The questions submitted by the Senator from Utah will be read.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Was not the question raised as to the legality or propriety of the court proceeding when the plaintiff, Holland, asked that the suit be dismissed?

A. I recall an observation made by the bench that, in view of the petitions for leave to intervene or the intervention theretofore granted-I do not remember which-that he felt required to go ahead with the proceedings; and so the point must have been raised. I have no recollection of it beyond that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the next question submitted by the Senator from Utah.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Who sent the notices for the hearing on the appointment of a

A. They were served upon us by counsel for the plaintiff. The hearing on the 28th, that is, the day upon which the receiver was actually appointed, was an adjourned hearing, it having been theretofore set, I believe, for about the 16th of October, and an adjournment was granted at my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the next question propounded by the Senator from Utah.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Did Rankin's name appear as attorney for the plaintiff Holland?

A. I have no independent recollection of it. If the notice is in the files here before the Senate, I could say if I saw it. By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Proceed and tell the Court what happened in the afternoon when you appeared before Judge Ritter.-A. At 2 o'clock I returned, and the appearances were precisely the same, except that I do not believe Mr. Bowen was present. I read to Judge Ritter the letters which had been furnished me by Mr. Holland and Mr. Lautmann, and also, as I remember, perhaps, a telegram or two. The telegrams had principally to do with Richardson's solicitation of the applicants for intervention. The correspondence, which I do not now have, was an exchange between Richardson and Sweeny-Mr. Martin Sweeny, I believe-and Mr. Holland. I do not remember who the authors of the particular letters were, but they were an exchange of correspondence between those three individuals.

Q. Just there, can you identify any of these letters?-Perhaps I could if I saw them. [The witness was handed the papers and examined them. I think perhaps the letter which I have just returned to you was one of those read. I do not believe the letter of September 10 was. I am not certain. My recollection of the letter that I read to the Court is that one.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I desire to offer in evidence the letter identified by the witness on the letterhead of Walter S. Richardson, dated August 30, 1929, and I shall read it.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I see it first, please? [After examining letter.] All right.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The letter offered in evidence is on the letterhead of Walter S. Richardson, counsellor at law, Palm Beach, Fla., and reads as follows:

PALM BEACH, FLA., August 30, 1929.

Mr. MARTIN SWEENY.

21 East Fifty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MARTIN: I am just in receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, and would appreciate it if you would try to see McBride as soon as possible and get the combination, as I am getting sick and tired of fooling with old man Fordham forever wanting to check

We had a hearing in Miami this week, being a continued meeting to pass upon my final report. It has been dragging along, as you know, since June 1. This time Fordham centered his attack upon know, since June 1. This time Fordham centered his attack upon three things—the insurance, the Ed. C. Sweeny Co. account, and my hotel bill while in New York of $71. It developed that there was about $700 in commissions on all the insurance placed by the trustee; they had an idea that it was about five or six thousand dollars. I stated most emphatically that I did not receive one penny commission on the placement of this insurance. Fordham went into the Ed. C. Sweeny account at length, and I stated that I knew nothing of the Ed. C. Sweeny Co., that I did not own one penny interest in it, that I had received nothing from the Ed. C. Sweeny Co. I also testified that Mr. Bemis asked me if I wanted to cater to the Bath and Tennis Club and that I told Mr. Bemis I did not, that I did not think the trustee had authority to under-I did not, that I did not think the trustee had authority to undertake this kind of work, but that I had no objection to Mr. Bemis or to you or Ed. doing this catering. Fordham asked me if I had loaned you or Ed. or the Ed. C. Sweeny Co. $8,000; I stated that I had not and I had never heard of any such transaction. He also wanted to know how much you had made out of the Bath and Tennis Club and if Whitehall financed this catering. I told him that I knew nothing of what was made and that I knew nothing of the work of the Whitehall having financed this catering. Whereupon he asked that the hearing be continued so that his auditor could go into this mat-ter and the bank accounts. I am satisfied my accounts are absoter and the bank accounts. I am satisfied my accounts are absolutely correct to the penny, and I am not losing any sleep over Fordham's attempt to show up any wrongdoing, but I am spending much time in working out a plan whereby the bondholders can take it away from them just as quickly as they get through with the bankruptcy proceedings; but, for the Lord's sake, don't breathe this, as I am again attempting to match wits with old man Moore, and I believe I have about solved his line of procedure.

Just as soon as my final report is approved and cut of the way.

Just as soon as my final report is approved and out of the way, I expect to go to New York, and go into the matter in detail, and formulate a definite plan of procedure. I have already gone into this matter very thoroughly with Mr. Bemis, and immediately upon his return I expect to take action and shoot as fast as a machine gun in order to have things in shape for another season's operation.

I wish you would get in touch with as many first-mortgage bond-holders as possible in order that we may take up with them our plan and have their cooperation. Now, don't argue the question with me, for I have gone into the matter thoroughly and have been watching and planning for some 6 months, and the plan of procedure is the correct one, and you leave this part of it to me, as I am more anxious than ever to thoroughly demonstrate to Mr. Moore that he is not so wise, after all, and that this "fathead" that he has down here is a "pluperfect boob."

wonder if you have any connection in Boston that could reach Mr. Bert E. Holland, an attorney, whose address is Tremont Building, Boston? Mr. Holland is a cotrustee and, as such, is the holder of $50,000 of the first-mortgage bonds. Mr. Holland's full cooperation with us would solve our problem, along with Franklin P. Smith, and others whom Mr. Bemis has been in touch with. Let me know if you can reach Mr. Holland in the right way to insure his cooperative with the second of the second o tion with us.

Again, I wish to caution you not to mention or indicate in any ay what we plan to do, and if Moore wants to dicker with you way what we plan to do, and it moore wants to dicker with you for the operation, go ahead and carry on the negotiations as though we had no other plan in view.

Please get me the combination as quickly as possible and let me hear from you about any of these matters. Kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Now proceed. Continue, please, and state what happened before Judge Ritter in the afternoon session .-A. After I had finished reading the letters and telegrams, and had pointed out to Judge Ritter that Mr. Richardson was even as yet trustee in bankruptcy, and was a party defendant to the proceedings and a party defendant to the cross-bill, he stated that Mr. Richardson had been an unusually successful trustee in bankruptcy; that his operation of the property had been excellent and profitable; that he felt the nature of the property was such as required the attention of someone familiar with it; that he did not consider the letters, telegrams, and points raised by me in opposition to Mr. Richardson sufficient to disqualify him; and that it was his purpose to appoint him. I then asked Judge Ritter if he would name Mr. Bemis as receiver. We, of course, did not at that time know that Mr. Bemis had been collaborating with Mr. Richardson in fomenting the litigation. I pointed out to Judge Ritter that Mr. Bemis had been the person in charge of this hotel since it was first erected; that the clientele and patronage of the hotel was very exclusive, and largely controlled and dominated by Mr. Bemis; that so far as my clients were aware, his operation had been successful, and if the court were going to appoint anyone receiver we hoped that it would be Mr. Bemis. Judge Ritter then stated to me that Mr. Bemis would not serve as receiver, but that he would, and I believe his order did, direct Mr. Richardson to appoint or employ Mr. Bemis as the manager of the hotel.

Q. Mr. McPherson, how many letters and telegrams of like import to the one read did you read to Judge Ritter that afternoon in opposition to the appointment of Richardson

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think that is calling for a conclusion of the witness, and an improper conclusion of the witness. If they have any such letters, let them produce them. They are the best evidence. Otherwise it would start us out on an investigation to contradict them.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The witness has testified that he filed some of these letters in the records of the court, and,

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Well, strike that part out of the question.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. How many letters and telegrams did you read to Judge Ritter; and state to the Court your recollection of the contents of them .- A. My recollection is that I read three or four letters, and more than one telegram; I would not say how many. Shall I state the contents of the letters?

Q. State the contents, please.—A. The letters, in the main, were urging that the procedure which was subsequently adopted be adopted; and one of the letters—the one upon which we particularly grounded our objection to Mr. Richardson-stated, in effect, that if a bill of the nature of the one subsequently filed was filed, that a receiver would be appointed, and that Mr. Bemis' management of the hotel would be continued.

Q. Did any of those letters state that if a receiver were appointed, Mr. Richardson would be the receiver?—A. I should not like to say that, sir. I do not remember.

Q. But one did say that Bemis and Sweeny would be appointed to operate the hotel?-A. That is my best recol-

Q. Were they later appointed to operate the hotel?-A. Yes, sir. However, that was probably done at my insistence.

Q. Under whose order were Bemis and Sweeny later appointed to operate the hotel?-A. It is my recollection, sir, that the order appointing the receiver required him to employ Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeny.

Q. So that it was all in one order—the appointment of the receiver, and the appointment of Bemis and Sweeny to operate the hotel?-A. The record would show that; but that is my recollection of it, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether Mr. Grill, who appeared here as a witness, was present in the courtroom that morning?-A. I should not like to say that. There were quite a number of people there, and it is altogether possible that he was. I do not remember him.

Q. Who signed the letters and the telegrams which you read to Judge Ritter?—A. The telegrams were signed by Mr. Richardson. Some of the letters were signed by Mr. Richardson, and I think one, or perhaps more, by Mr. Sweeny.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Where did you get those letters?—A. The letters came to me from Mr. Bert E. Holland. The telegrams were given to me by Mr. Herbert Lautmann.

Q. Did Mr. Holland tell you where he got them?-A. I would not want to say that now; I do not remember.

Q. To refresh your memory, did he not say he got them from Mr. Sweeny?-A. I have no independent recollection of it, Mr. Walsh.

Q. There was no letter that you recall now, was there, Mr. McPherson, leaving out Richardson's, that was signed by anybody but Mr. Sweeny?—A. It is my best recollection that all of the letters I read were signed either by Mr. Richardson or by Mr. Sweeny.

Q. It was evidently a part of a system of correspondence that had been carried on for some time, was it not?—A. Yes. As I remember it, the correspondence went over a period of about a month and was ended about a month, as I remember it, before the suit was filed.

Q. Did Mr. Holland tell you that he had any other letters?-A. I think not, because Mr. Holland, as I remember it, made available to me his file, and these letters were in it.

Q. Was he there with you when you got the letters?-A. Yes.

Q. Did he take them out of the file, and did you also go over the letters in the file?-A. I do not believe I understand your question.

Q. I say, did you look through the letters personally in the file which Mr. Holland gave you?-A. It is my recollection that he gave me the file and I selected the letters that I considered applicable to my point.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will the managers please let me see the letters, those which they have?

(Several letters were handed to Mr. Walsh.)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Do you know the date of the earliest letter you saw there?—A. The date of the earliest letter, as I remember it, was about 2 months before the proceeding was filed, and the last about a month.
- Q. That would take it back into August and September?—A. Yes; the suit was filed in October.
- Q. Did you see any other letters there, or copies of letters, showing a passage of correspondence between Mr. Sweeny and Mr. Richardson antedating the letters you took out for presentation to the court?—A. I do not now recall them; there may have been.
- Q. Were there any there prior to August 30—August or September?—A. No, sir; I do not remember the dates of those, but I do remember, since you make the point as to dates, that I referred to the fact that the prophecy made in advance of the filing of the suit, standing alone, ought to be sufficient to disqualify Mr. Richardson; but I do not remember the dates.
- Q. Will you kindly answer my question? Were there any there, according to your recollection, that predated August?—A. I should not like to say that; I do not remember.
- Q. You do not remember. Were there any there that antedated the letters which you brought to present to the judge?— A. I have no independent recollection of that.
- Q. How many letters would you say there were, according to your recollection——A. Three or four.
- Q. One minute—in the entire file that was shown to you by Mr. Holland?—A. There was a matter of 8, 10, or 12 letters in his file, and of that amount I took, I think, 3 or 4.
- Q. Did you see any letters in the file, this particular file, except those that passed between Mr. Sweeny and Mr. Richardson?—A. Please repeat the question.

The Official Reporter (John D. Rhodes) read the question, as follows:

- Q. Did you see any letters in the file, this particular file, except those that passed between Mr. Sweeny and Mr. Richardson?
- A. Yes; it is my recollection that the file contained other correspondence than those four letters, from other people.
- Q. Any letters from Mr. Bemis?—A. I do not recall any; no. sir.
- Q. Any letters from Mr. Richardson to Mr. Bemis?—A. No. It is my recollection the letters were between Mr. Richardson and Mr. Sweenv.
- Q. Do you remember that there were some letters, which antedated the letters which you produced, between Mr. Sweeny and Mr. Richardson?—A. I do not remember the dates at all.
- Q. This suit that was brought was what is called a class suit, was it not? That is, a suit was filed on behalf of certain bondholders with a provision that it would apply to all similarly situated?—A. That is my recollection of it; yes.
- Q. And you understand, of course, Mr. McPherson, the law with reference to that class of suits?—A. I think so.
- Q. That is that if an intervener comes in and makes the proper showing, he can be added to the original suit?—A. Quite right.
- Q. And any number that come in can be so added?— A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And it is perfectly ethical, is it not, no matter who the first bondholder is, that those who come in may be intervened for, and the suit proceeded with on behalf of all of them?—A. On the question, as put by you, I should say perhaps that was proper.
- Q. Well, I tried to put it directly. If you brought a suit, for instance, for John Jones and he had a certain number of bonds, you would bring the suit and the law would require you, would it not—at that time, the common law—to allow any other bondholder to come in that desired to do so that intervened? You could not keep him out; could you?—A. I do not think so; no.

- Q. So that if they came in, one, two, three, four, or any number, after the first one came in there would be nothing urethical, would there, in carrying it along for all of them?—A. No, sir; not on the question as you put it.
- Q. Well, I put it as clearly as I could to get your answer. You say on that morning that Mr. Holland asked that the suit be withdrawn or dismissed. Is your recollection clear upon that, Mr. McPherson?—A. Mr. Walsh, my recollection of that, of course, is rather hazy. It has been a long time ago. As I remember it, Mr. Holland's statement to Judge Ritter was that he had in the beginning authorized the suit, that he had subsequently instructed Mr. Rankin not to file it, and that he had in this conversation that I referred to asked Mr. Rankin to dismiss it or withdraw it, using, as I remember it, both. I do not recall that he asked Judge Ritter to dismiss the bill or that he moved Judge Ritter to dismiss the bill. I did not mean my testimony to carry that inference.
- Q. I see. You did say the thing was clear in your mind that what he asked for was not to appoint a receiver?—A. Quite true.
 - Q. Yes; and that is clear in your mind, is it not?—A. Yes.
- Q. And you would not say, after this lapse of years—it is 6 or 7 years now, almost 6½ years—you would not say at this time that this was not what occurred: That Mr. Holland said that he did not want a receiver appointed, and that he wished the matter to stay just as it was? [Addressing Mr. Hoffman:] Let me have that paper.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send forward a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the witness desire to respond to the last question?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I can withdraw that question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Go ahead and ask the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last question asked by counsel for respondent is withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I yield. I can ask the question just as easily later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question sent forward by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

Was this particular suit properly retained in court under all the circumstances, in your opinion?

- A. Not as to the plaintiff Holland.
- By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
- Q. But was it retained properly as to all the other plaintiffs?—A. Yes.
- Q. And if there was anything improper or wrong or illegal about it, Mr. Holland could set that up, could he not?—A. Yes.
- Q. If he had any claim of champerty or anything of that sort, he could set that up, could he not?—A. There was no suggestion made, Mr. Walsh, of any impropriety in Mr. Rankin's conduct. On the contrary, he stated that he had authorized the commencement of the suit, but that he had subsequently instructed not to go forward with it or to file it.
- Q. Yes; but I am directing your attention now to the proposition of the retirement of Mr. Holland himself. If there was any information or any charge that there was anything wrong about the institution of that suit, that it was tainted with champerty, he could file an appropriate motion, could be not?

RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question must be answered later on. The hour of 1:30 having arrived, in accordance with the order heretofore entered, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess until 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., at which time it reassembled.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Keyes	Pittman
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Pope
Austin	Couzens	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Davis	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Dieterich	Logan	Robinson
Barbour	Donahey	Lonergan	Russell
Barkley	Duffy	Long	Schwellenbach
Benson	Fletcher	McGill	Sheppard
Black	Frazier	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	George	McNary	Smith
Brown	Gerry	Maloney	Steiwer
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Glass	Minton	Thomas, Utah

Capper	Hastings	Neely	Van Nuvs
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hayden	Nye	Walsh
Clark	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Connelly	Johnson	Overton	TYALLOO

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences of certain Senators for the causes given upon a previous roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ASSISTANTS TO MANAGERS AND COUNSEL

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I find that the managers on the part of the House have not followed the precedents heretofore with regard to the assistance the young gentlemen with us are rendering. In order to put our procedure in line with the precedents I ask unanimous consent that Elmore Whitehurst and Thomas M. Mulherin be permitted to sit with the managers on the part of the House during the progress of the trial.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I did not know about the precedents, but I have had an agreement with these courteous gentlemen that we might have an assistant to sit with us. Accordingly I make the same request with reference to Mr. Ralph O. Cullen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF JOSEPH M. M'PHERSON (CONTINUED)

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I submit the questions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] has already sent to the desk a question which he desires to propound.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the answer I wished to elicit was made in response to a question asked by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], and I therefore withdraw my question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his question. The clerk will read the interrogatories propounded by the Senator from Indiana.

The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Minton, as follows:

If interveners come in they do so under the jurisdiction and cause of action established by the bill, do they not?

A. That is correct. As I understand the rule an intervener comes in, as they say, in subordination of the cause of action set up in the bill of complaint.

The Chief Clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Minton, as follows:

And under equity rule 37 interveners cannot challenge the proceeding?

A. That is my understanding of the rule.

The Chief Clerk read the third question propounded by Mr. Minton, as follows:

If the suit of Holland and others, the principal plaintiffs, had been dismissed would not that have taken out the interveners?

A. Yes; unless an application for substitution had been made on behalf of the interveners. I do not understand, in other words, that the plaintiff can of his own volition dismiss a suit after intervention and cut off the right of the interveners. An application to preserve their rights could and probably would have been entertained.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. But nothing further was done about the matter by the defendants?—A. No. On the contrary, the conduct of the counsel present indicated that they did not consider the main bill dismissed nor a motion to that effect made.

Q. I believe you stated that when the notice was first given as to the appointment of a receiver—that is, that it was coming on—you asked for some time, for an adjournment?—A. That is correct; I think about 10 days.

Q. About 10 days. When it came up subsequently, it came up on the morning about which you have been testifying. Is that correct?—A. That is correct,

Q. You proceeded, after the argument in the morning, to look up the matter, did you? I understood that you had an adjournment until afternoon.—A. That is correct.

Q. It was made at your request?-A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Did or did not Judge Ritter say that inasmuch as there was some discussion about the receiver, if each side would have one of its counsel withdraw, he would appoint them both as attorneys for the receiver?—A. Not exactly. The matter came up in this way: After the objections to Mr. Richardson had been made known to the court, and after he had overruled them, so to speak, he announced that in view of the opposition both to the appointment of a receiver and to the receiver whom he had selected, if one of the counsel for the plaintiff would withdraw, he would name that counsel, together with my law firm, Shutts & Bowen, as cocounsel for the receiver, so that each side might be advised in advance of the character of operation the receiver proposed and also have control of his conduct.
- Q. And Mr. Metcalf withdrew as one of the attorneys for the plaintiff?—A. That is correct.
- Q. And who was designated by your firm?—A. There was no one. The order, as I remember it, reads "Ernest Metcalf and Shutts & Bowen."
- Q. And Shutts & Bowen. Did you yourself carry on any of the work that was done?—A. Yes, sir; some of it.
- Q. You continued to act as counsel for the same parties down to the closing of the case, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You did agree, did you not, with Mr. Rankin upon the final decree?—A. Yes; Mr. Bowen and I together did that.
- Q. Was it subject to some negotiation?—A. Yes; quite a lot.
- Q. Extending over a period of time?—A. From the latter part of June or the 1st of July until December 19.
- Q. And you carried on the negotiations on behalf of whom?—A. On behalf of Harold A. Moore, the trustee in the mortgage, one of the defendants.
- Q. And Mr. Lautmann's firm remained as the attorneys for the bondholders' committee that had been organized in Chicago?—A. They were attorneys for the bondholders' committee. I am not familiar with its organization.

Q. Very good. So that there was no change in counsel between the time of the original filing of the bill and the making of the final decree?—A. None that I now recall.

Q. Did you mention all that were present that morning? I call your attention to the fact, if it be a fact, that Mr. John P. Stokes was there, representing Messrs. Bemis and Sweeny.—A. My recollection is, since you have refreshed it, that Mr. Stokes was there, and that he filed an answer on behalf of the Whitehall Building & Operating Co., consented to the prayer of the bill, and joined in the application for the appointment of a receiver.

Q. And the prayer of the plaintiff asked for the fore-closure of the property?—A. That is correct.

Q. And your prayer likewise asked for the foreclosure of the property. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you took up the matter of negotiations for settlement, did you go to Chicago? I believe it might be to the advantage of the Court to have you just detail yourself, if you will, what was done toward negotiations, how they were taken up, what steps were taken, and bring it down to the filing of the decree.—A. After the depositions had been taken in Chicago upon the notices which we had issued on behalf of the defendant trustee, Harold A. Moore, and, as we had thought, successfully disproved the allegations of the bill of complaint and sustained the averments of the answer | and counterclaim or cross-bill, we had a conference with Messrs. Lautmann and Morse, of the Sonnenschein firm, Mr. Harold A. Moore, and his father, W. J. Moore. I am not certain that the other trustees were present. There were other people there whose names I do not now recall. was suggested by Mr. Bowen that the only point remaining, in the event the plaintiff should be unable to overcome the effect of our proof, was whether our firm would get the foreclosure fee, or whether Mr. Rankin, representing the plaintiff, would get it; because if the proof we had offered had not been overcome, the decree of necessity would have been for the defendant trustee. With that in mind, and after calling their attention to the fact that if an order were taken on the merits an appeal would probably result, Mr. Lautmann or Mr. Morse or someone there suggested that Mr. Bowen undertake to negotiate a compromise with Mr. Rankin. He came back to Miami and opened those negotiations in the early part of July.

Q. Make it as brief as you can .- A. Yes. Mr. Rankin submitted a written proposal of the terms upon which he would settle. He made a slight modification of that in a second letter, written shortly thereafter. Both of them were communicated to or furnished our client trustee and Mr. Lautmann's firm, representing the bondholders' committee. There were several drafts made of the final decree, attempting to carry out the terms of Mr. Rankin's proposal. The committee considered the matter and interjected certain ideas of its own, as did our client. We finally were able to draft a decree which embodied the requirements of Mr. Rankin and met the approval of the committee representing the bondholders, as well as my client, the defendant trustee. I went to Chicago with that decree in December, I think about the 13th. I was there several days. We went over the decree in detail. The committee's counsel wished several changes made in it, having, as I recall it, particularly to do with the qualifications of the bidders at the sale, if I remember correctly; perhaps some other procedural matters. I do not remember exactly what they were; and I communicated those changes to Mr. Bowen by phone. He incorporated them in a rough draft of the decree and submitted it to Mr. Rankin. I returned here on the 19th of December-I mean to Miami-we called on Judge Ritter and advised him of the settlement which had been agreed upon.

Q. May I ask you whether you went back to Chicago again before the final decree was filed?—A. No; I was in Chicago from December—I think the 13th—until December 17

Q. During that time did the question of fee come up?—A. Oh, the question of fee—that is, the division of the fee—had been understood and agreed upon as between my firm, Mr. Rankin, the bondholders' committee, and the other defendant trustees since along about the latter part of August.

Q. As I understood the matter—perhaps I am wrong about it; and if so, you will correct me—while you were there, a discussion of the fee came up with the attorney for the bondholders, those with whom you were negotiating, and you had some communication with your office in Miami. When was that?—A. That was before any negotiations were opened at all, at the time we took the depositions.

Q. You might go ahead with your narrative, then, and I will come back to that.—A. All right, sir. We advised Judge Ritter, after my return from Chicago, that a settlement had been agreed upon. I am not certain, and I would not want to say, that we told the judge what the terms of that settlement actually were. We did tell him, however, that they involved a division of the fees. We asked Judge Ritter how he wished to make the allowances, suggesting that we would like to have them made separately. Judge Ritter said, and I think with propriety, that he preferred to make only one allowance.

Q. And, out of that allowance, do what?—A. He asked that we put some document of record in the case indicating that a division of the fee was being made; and we did that, of course. When the matter had been determined, and we miles.

had procured on that day a date for the final hearing, we gave notice, set the case down for entry of final decree. On that morning all of the counsel involved appeared before the judge. One of them was absent for a time; and during the delay pending his arrival there we announced to the court that we had agreed upon a computation of interest, deferred income tax, and things of that sort; and, at Judge Ritter's request, I inserted in the final decree certain interest computations, the addition of interest and principal, and purely mechanical operations. Judge Ritter read the decree. and I think made some changes himself in its verbiage. He requested all counsel representing parties in interest to endorse their consent on the decree, which was done. He asked them if there was anyone there representing the bondholders' committee as such. On being advised that there was not, Mr. Bowen, of our office, called either Mr. Lautmann or Mr. Morse-I do not remember which-by longdistance phone, advised them that the court was about to make the decree, and could he advise him of the committee's consent; and Mr. Bowen did, as a result of that conversation at that time, advise Judge Ritter that the bondholders' committee had consented.

Q. That took in all the parties?—A. That is all of them. Judge Ritter thereupon signed the decree.

Q. To your knowledge, did Judge Ritter have any advices from any source up until the time you notified him that the decree had been agreed upon?—A. Not so far as I know, or so far as any of the members of my firm with whom I have talked know, Judge Ritter did not have any knowledge of either the terms of the settlement or that one had been made until after I returned from Chicago on the 19th of December 1930.

Q. When the entry was made, the order was made by him, and final decree signed, every person connected with the matter, every attorney connected with the matter, except the attorney for the bondholders, was present in person, or a representative of the firm, and as to the bondholders, you got the direct confirmation of the willingness of the bondholders to have the decree entered by a telephone communication from Mr. Bowen?—A. That is correct; yes, sir.

Q. That is Mr. Crate Bowen?-A. That is correct.

Q. Of your firm, Shutts & Bowen?-A. That is correct.

Q. Is that correct?—A. That is correct.

Q. I will ask you to go back to the time when the question of the amount of the fee came up.—A. After we had completed the depositions, and the conversation was had about approaching Mr. Rankin for a compromise, Mr. Lautmann or Mr. Morse, one of the gentlemen representing their firm, at least, asked Mr. Bowen what he thought the fee would be. Mr. Bowen said he thought the fee we would be satisfied with, if we prevailed, would be $50,000 or $60,000. Mr. Lautmann, I think, made a computation of the Chicago bar rate, and advised me that it would be, according to their computation, forty-two or forty-three thousand up to $50,000, dependent upon the character of contest.

Q. Did that just refer to your fee alone?—A. Just to us; yes. We then, at Mr. Bowen's suggestion, communicated with our office in Miami and obtained a statement of the figure showing the fees allowed in what we considered comparable cases, and Mr. Bowen advised these gentlemen of those figures, and I do not remember exactly what was said about it, but it was more or less understood that as to us, if we prevailed the fee would be $50,000 or more.

Q. At the time of the signing of this decree was there any memorandum made or anything further than what you have testified to with regard to the fees?—A. There were affidavits presented by Judge Rankin of a number of the members of the Palm Beach Bar testifying to the reasonableness of the fee which he had asked.

Q. Were they or were they not reputable members of the bar in good, high standing?—A. With the exception of Judge Donnell, who had formerly been a judge of that circuit, none of the affiants were known to me personally. I have since learned that they were men of standing in that community.

Q. How far is Palm Beach from Miami?—A. Sixty-six miles.

- Q. West Palm Beach and Palm Beach are adjacent to each other?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. Divided by a stream?—A. By Biscayne Bay.
- Q. The total population of the two Palm Beaches is about what?-A. I have not any idea. I should say around 50,000; maybe not as much.
- Q. And the population of Miami is something over 100.000?-A. Yes.
 - Q. Was at that time?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I thank you. That is all.
- Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have two questions I desire to have answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. King in the chair). The clerk will read the questions.

The Chief Clerk read the questions propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

What time did you get your part of the fee? Was it on the same day the decree was entered?

- A. It is my recollection that we got a portion of it on that day, and that we received the balance some months later.
 - Q. Was it in the morning or afternoon?
- A. I should say it was around noontime; at least, before the bank closed, because the check was handed to Mr. Bowen and myself in the lobby of the First National Bank, which was still open and doing business.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. Mr. McPherson, I show you what purports to be a copy of a letter dated October 3, 1929, addressed to Bert E. Holland, and ask if you recognize that as one of the letters read to Judge Ritter in opposing the appointment of Richardson as receiver .- A. (Examining letter.) I am unable to say whether this particular copy was the one read, but I read that letter to Judge Ritter.
 - Mr. Manager PERKINS. I offer that in evidence.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I would like to see it first.
 - Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will read it to you.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). No; I should like to see it first, because I may have to question him about it.

(The letter was handed to Mr. Walsh.)

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I ask a question?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. No; this is during my examination, and I think I ought to proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Then I will make the request without doing it. I want to make this suggestion to the President and the Court, that it is unfair-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an objection to the reception of the letter?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. State the objection.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I say it is unfair to tear from the context of a long correspondence one or two letters. I say this for the reason that these letters, the entire Sweeny correspondence, have been in the possession of the managers on the part of the House, as I understand it. The witness is subpensed here as a witness, he has his correspondence with him, we have subpensed him also, and I ask that this letter be not allowed to be introduced, although one has already gone in, unless we are given the opportunity of putting in the entire correspondence, which we say will throw great light on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair see the letter,

(The letter was handed to the Presiding Officer.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is overruled. Proceed.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. Who signed this letter, Mr. McPherson?-A. As I remember it, the letter I read was the original, and it was signed by Mr. Sweeny.
- Q. Signed by Martin Sweeny?-A. Yes; the letter I read, of course, was the original, of which that purports to be a copy.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The letter is as follows:

WHITEHALL, PALM BEACH, FLA., October 3, 1929.

Mr. BERT E. HOLLAND.

Mr. Bert E. Holland,
73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

Dear Mr. Holland: Confirming our conversation this morning, we are planning to apply to the Federal court for a receivership under the first-mortgage bonds and ask the court to appoint the following committee as a self-constituted bondholders' committee representing the 7,000 bondholders of the first mortgage on White-representing the 7,000 bondholders of the first mortgage on Whitehall, Palm Beach, Fla.

The court will in return appoint Mr. Bemis and me as managers of the property, and as we have always made more than the interest on the first mortgage, you can rest assured that your interest payments will be met. Furthermore, the committee after securing this property will work out a plan for the future, and as president of this company since it has been incorporated, I can assure you that your bonds will become of real value.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) Marriy Swerry

(Signed) MARTIN SWEENY.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Read the rest of it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Annexed to it is a list:

Mr. G. B. Romph, First National Bank of Miami, Fla.
Mr. Charles H. Gilman, president, Bank of Bay of Biscayne.
Mr. Frank A. Shaughnessy, president, First National Bank of Palm Beach.

Mr. Franklin P. Smith, Lake Forrest, Ill.
Mr. E. F. Hutton, chairman of the Board of General Foods Co.,
New York City.
Mr. Bert E. Holland, 73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. Mr. McPherson, are you familiar with rules of Judge Ritter's court with reference to interventions?—A. I think so; yes, sir.
- Q. I show you rule 22, and ask if you are familiar with it?-A. (After examination.) Yes, sir; that is one of the rules of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.
 - Q. Rule 22 reads as follows:

Procedure: Not less than 5 days' notice of the application for leave of court to file petitions of intervention in equity causes pending in this court shall be given to all parties in interest, stating the time and place such application will be made, and a copy of said petition shall be served with such notice, and if such petition be filed by leave of court, parties in interest shall file answer or motion to dismiss said petition, unless otherwise ordered, within 20 days.

That is the rule, is it?—A. That is correct.

- Q. Do you know whether or not any notice of motion was given for the intervention of the interveners in this case?-A. I have no independent recollection of the notice given; but I do have in my office file the petitions for leave to intervene and the orders made thereon, but I do not recall what form or character of notice was given.
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. I desire to offer in evidence petition for intervention by A. H. Hill in the above case, Holland against Whitehall Building Co., signed by Mr. Rankin, and sworn to by Mr. Rankin as attorney on the 16th of October 1929; motion to grant order permitting intervention filed on the 16th of October 1929, signed by A. L. Rankin and Ernest Metcalf, attorneys for petitioners; and order allowing intervention, signed by Judge Ritter on October 16, 1929, and filed on the same day with the clerk of the court.

The WITNESS. Mr. Perkins, on the matter of notice, in fairness to Judge Rankin and to myself, we were before Judge Ritter on the 16th of October, as I remember it, that being the day of his first application for the appointment of a receiver, and that was the date upon which the hearing was adjourned until the 28th; so I do not want to say that we did or did not have notice of the application. I do not remember.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. There were a great many parties to that suit; were there not?-A. Yes; quite a number.
- Q. And do you know of any notice being served by Rankin or Metcalf on any other parties of a motion to intervene?-A. No. On the contrary, I do not remember that he served any on us. I do not want any inference to be drawn from that. I do not remember that he served any on us.
- Q. Is it a fact that the files show that he served no notice on anybody?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think the files of the court will be the best possible evidence. They are all here.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The files of the court cannot show the negative.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Do you know whether there appears in the files of the court any notice served on the parties interested of this motion to intervene?—A. When I examined the files in the courthouse I did not find it.

Q. After the filing of the bill, and the application for intervention, and the application for receiver, what did Mr. Rankin actually do in the case down to the time that he began to negotiate on the final fee and the final decree?—A. Well, he filed some pleadings, of course, further put the case at issue upon our cross-bill, or counterclaim, and I suppose he necessarily responded to such hearings as were had upon the sufficiency of those pleas. He drew an amendment to the bill of complaint after the settlement had been agreed upon.

Q. No; but I am saying from the time he made the application and got the receiver appointed until the final decree was agreed upon, what did he do?—A. Until the final decree was agreed upon?

Q. Yes.—A. I could not say, sir, without seeing the docket.

Q. Do you know that he did anything of any substance? Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Here is the docket.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That question is proper.

The WITNESS. I do not recall, sir.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. The fact is that he took no depositions on his allegations of fraud, or allegations of any kind; did he?—A. No. sir.

Q. Until you served upon him a 120-day notice to proceed and take depositions, that you were going to do so; is that true?—A. It was not a 120-day notice. The notice was of the taking of depositions for the defendant. The taking commenced after the lapse of 120 days.

Q. So you gave him notice that after 120 days you were to take depositions; is that right?—A. No. I do not think you understand it. After the case goes to issue, the plaintiff, in our jurisdiction, and other Federal jurisdictions, has 120 days in which to take depositions as a matter of right. At the expiration of that 120-day period, I immediately served notice of the taking of the depositions on the part of the defendant to sustain the counterclaim and disprove the bill.

Q. Did he take any depositions within 120 days?—A. He did not.

Q. Then you served him with notice that you were going to take depositions?—A. That is correct.

Q. And your depositions were taken in Chicago?—A. Yes.

Q. And fully disproved every allegation set up in the bill?—A. We put on the stand every person charged in the bill and examined him, so he might have been cross-examined.

Q. Did Mr. Rankin or Mr. Metcalf or anybody appear on behalf of Mr. Rankin's client there?—A. They did not.

Q. So it was entirely an ex-parte procedure in Chicago?—A. Yes.

Q. Fully disproving any allegations of fraud?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you have been, on that proof, entitled to your decree and to file a motion for dismissal of his bill?—A. Yes; because the depositions included other things than denial of fraud. We proved everything alleged in the cross-bill, which included an accounting of the trustee.

Q. So at the time you were entitled to a dismissal of his bill of complaint and the entry of a final decree on the crossbill?—A. That is right.

Q. So that practically the only thing with respect to the appointment of the receiver that you had to negotiate with Mr. Rankin was a question of how much the fee was to be?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). One minute! I object to that.

A. No; that is hardly fairly put. We were negotiating with him upon a settlement of the case which involved how much we would have to pay him to get him out.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. That is entirely what you were negotiating about, is it—how much you would have to pay Mr. Rankin to get him out?—A. The principal negotiations had to do—that is, the thing that was so troublesome was this upset price and things that tended to keep the case in court. There never was any dispute—we met immediately about that question—Mr. Rankin's demand for the fee. The difficulty was in determining upon a decree which was to enable us to sell that property before the next season's operation.

Q. The idea was to sell the property before it went into another season's operation by the receiver?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Rankin delayed it so it got into another season's operation, did it not?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as calling for an improper conclusion of the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is sustained. By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Did Mr. Rankin make objection to the form of your decree and other things, so that the matter was delayed until the next season?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I make the same objection, if Your Honor please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. State what occurred.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. State what occurred.—A. After we received his letter outlining his proposals, there being two of those, we communicated them to our clients, and advised our clients and the committee that since the only remaining question was principally one of fees, that my firm was not willing to keep the case in court for that alone, and that we were willing to get to other issues, and that if they wanted to meet Mr. Rankin's demand we were quite willing to do so. They said, "Go ahead."

We then undertook to draft the decree. The first question that came up was whether or not the trustee, Moore, should resign. We finally prevailed on him.

The next was whether or not he ought to be reimbursed for the advances made in the preservation of the property. The next one was whether or not the American Bond & Mortgage Co., which had advanced money to the trustee for that purpose, should be reimbursed. That we never could settle, and it was deferred until after the final decree. The next was the matter of the upset price, and things of that kind. I do not remember them all, but they were brought up more or less one at a time.

Q. At what time of the year was it when you finally agreed to pay him his fee to get him out of the case?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). One minute. I object to that as a highly improper question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first part of the question is proper. The Court, however, will determine the effect of the payment of the fee.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will reframe the question.

Q. Did you not state that the only point was how much money you would have to pay Rankin to get him out of the case?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He may answer.

A. That was the principal question, of course, so far as we were concerned. There was no real dispute between the parties on the matter of foreclosure.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. One other question: At the time Judge Akerman allowed the $15,000 preliminary fee to Mr. Rankin, did you know anything about it?—A. Not until quite a long time after it had been done, sir.

Q. And no notice was given to you of that application, was there?—A. No, sir.

Q. And the proceedings in court were without the knowledge of your firm, were they not?—A. That is correct.

Q. How many months elapsed before you learned that he had received this preliminary $15,000 fee?—A. I would not want to say. It was quite a long time. As a matter of fact, I think we first learned it from Mr. Lautmann.

Q. From whom?—A. I think we first learned it from Mr. Lautmann.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I see rule XXII, please? Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send forward a question, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana submits a question, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. MINTON, as follows:

If the motion to dismiss the Holland bill had been sustained, the interveners would have had to establish an independent cause of action and jurisdiction of their own, would they not?

A. Yes, sir.

RECROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did I understand you to say that you were not present in Judge Ritter's court when the application for the $15,000 fee came up?-A. No; I did not so state. The application made to Judge Ritter, as I remember it, was not for any sum certain. He appeared before Judge Ritter and asked that he be allowed a conservation fee, and he gave notice of that, and we appeared and opposed it.

Q. So that you were in court at that time?—A. Yes; but Judge Ritter, as I remember it, made an order of $2,500 on the petition, upon Mr. Bowen's consent.

Q. Were you there then?—A. I was.

Q. And did he say that he was going to refer the balance of the fee to Judge Akerman?-A. Not in my presence.

Q. Not in your presence.

I want to ask you about your interpretation of rule XXII. A suit is brought by the plaintiff against a number of defendants; and prior to the return day of the writs against these defendants, interveners come in and file their interventions. Is there anyone that is required to have notice of that before the return day of the various writs?-A. Yes; I think under our practice the petitioner would be required to serve notice upon all of the parties named in the suit, both plaintiff and defendant, in order to obtain an order upon his petition.

Q. They are not brought in yet; they are not properly parties to the case until they come in and file some sort of a pleading; are they?-A. No, sir; but the principal defendant in this case appeared, and most of the defendants, if I remember correctly, upon the 16th day of October.

Q. Yes; but up to the time that there is service had, there is no one upon which to serve the notice; is there?-A. Oh, yes!

Q. No; the plaintiff standing alone, and the other parties not having been brought into court?-A. Upon the question put hypothetically by you, I should say under our practice that if I were for the petitioner I would undertake to serve the parties named, both plaintiff and defendant.

Q. The interpretation I place upon it your answer indicates is incorrect?-A. Yes; because you say the return of process had not been completed.

Q. You did not file your pleadings in this case until October 28, 1929?—A. That is correct. We appeared on the 16th and advised Judge Ritter that all the defendants, except the Whitehall Building & Operating Co., who had appeared and consented were residents of Chicago, Ill., and asked him to give us sufficient time that we might get their affidavits down there and resist their application, which he did.

Q. There were no pleadings filed, however, by any of the parties?-A. I do not recall.

Q. None by you, we will say, until October 28, 1929?—A. That is correct, I think.

Q. Did you make any objection to the interventions on the 16th when you say they were in court?—A. I do not recall ever having opposed the petition for intervention in this or any other.

Q. That is all. Thank you.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk two questions which I should like to have asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The interrogatories submitted by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Fletcher, as follows:

How much did the bondholders realize out of the foreclosure?

A. The bondholders, if I understand the question correctly. Senator Fletcher, bid for the property at the sale. They bid $1,500,000. They formed a corporation and took over the title in the name of the corporation, and issued participating shares, though I am not positive as to that, because I did not represent the purchasing company. The bondholders, however, got the property, together with whatever funds the receiver had on hand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the next question submitted by the Senator from Florida.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Fletcher, as follows:

How much did the complainant and interveners receive or realize from the trustee, referee, or receiver?

A. If I understand your question correctly, I answered it before, save and except that there was, as I recall it, about $200,000, or something in that neighborhood, in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, who subsequently became the receiver in this case. At the time he was appointed the referee in bankruptcy never at any time had in his hands, so far as I know, any funds that belonged to the plaintiff bondholders or any other bondholders in this case. The receiver, after the entry of the final decree in this case, submitted to the court an audit of his acts and doings, his receipts and disbursements. Notice was had of his application for approval of his accounts and his acts. The report was inspected and found to be correct; so that whatever moneys he had went into the hands of the persons entitled to receive them. Whatever it was, I do not recall.

FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. I desire to ask another question. Mr. McPherson, does not the receiver's report show that the 2 years' operation of the hotel netted $658,298.34 and that his disbursements out of that amount were $638,876.18, so that all the money left in the hands of the receiver after the 2 years' operations and the payment of these fees out of the $600,000 was $19,422?—A. I do not remember, sir. There was an audit there. It is a part of the record, and the record will show it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I desire now to offer in evidence a letter written by Walter S. Richardson to Martin Sweeny, under date of September 10, 1929, and identified by Mr. Fordham, one of the previous witnesses. Counsel for the respondent have seen the letter.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not recall it now. What is the date of it?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. It is dated September 10, 1929. (The letter was handed to Mr. Walsh (of counsel) and examined by him.)

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, one question directed to the witness was of such a character that he was unable to answer it. I am wondering if counsel between themselves cannot inform us concerning it, so that they might save themselves the necessity of producing a lot of documents in Court. I refer to the question with respect to the matter of service of notice on the parties to the action by the inter-

It seems to me counsel could tell us that in just a moment, They might agree on that, and we would have that out of the way. It is obscure at this time.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I think that counsel can agree that there was no notice served upon anybody.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We will say that no written notice was served. The application of the receiver was in court on the 16th, when the orders were made by the court for the intervention, and that no pleadings at that time had been filed by any party to the suit.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, the letter offered in evidence is on the letterhead of Walter S. Richardson, counselor at law, Palm Beach, Fla., and is dated September 10, 1929, and addressed to Mr. Martin Sweeny, 21 East Fifty-second Street, New York City.

PALM BEACH, FLA., September 10, 1929.

Mr. MARTIN SWEENY,

21 East Fifty-second Street, New York City.

DEAR MARTIN: Your letter of September 5, in which you enclosed

DEAR MARTIN: Your letter of September 5, in which you enclosed copies of Moore's letter to you and your reply received. Atta boy! That's the way to get him told!

Miss Lloyd tells me that Mr. Bemis will arrive in New York on the 24th. It is my plan at present to leave here either the 22d or 23d, that we may immediately have a conference and decide definitely upon plans of procedure. Mr. Bemis told me before he left that whatever we decided on we would have to begin immediately, writes to the close time remeining for booking for the coming owing to the short time remaining for booking for the coming season. If our plans carry, it will be very close to the 1st of November before a new receiver could be appointed, due to the absence of the district judge, as he will not return here until about the 15th of October.

Judge Rankin, a former partner of Judge Ritter, will come up with me also, to advise with us and at the same time take up some matters he has with Judge Ritter, who is now holding court in Brooklyn.

Brooklyn.

My fee has been held up owing to the absence of Judge Ritter and the referee will not approve an advance, so it is barely possible that I will have to borrow a little money from you or Mr. Bemis to take care of my expenses in getting our plan in motion. I cannot go into detail regarding the plan for fear a letter may go astray, but I am confident that we are all set to go under the plan outlined to Mr. Bemis and which he probably discussed with you.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Have you the letter that is referred to in that letter?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I have not it at hand at this moment, but I have it here somewhere.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to see the letter if it is here.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I understood that Mr. Rankin would resume the stand at this time.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, far be it from me to suggest to eminent counsel engaged in this case how they should conduct a lawsuit, but I respectfully suggest that they identify their exhibits in some way, and also the papers that are introduced in the record, so that we may keep track of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair takes the liberty of suggesting that the statement made by the Senator from Indiana is a wise one, and is followed in court. The Chair sees no reason why identification should not be made of the exhibits which are received in evidence. Counsel will proceed.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF A. L. RANKIN (RESUMED)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. When you left the witness stand upon yesterday, Mr. Rankin, you were handed prior to leaving it a list, chronologically and by number detailing the entire record, motions, pleadings, and other matters filed in the Whitehall case, were you not?-A. I was.

Q. And you were asked to indicate upon that list the papers that you filed yourself and, by some designation, the papers that were filed in the case of which you had to take cognizance, attend hearings, or perform other duties, were you not?-A. I was.

Q. I will have you look at the paper which I now hand you and say whether or not that is the paper, and what marks you put upon it to show the facts that I have just detailed to you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does counsel desire to have it offered in evidence?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am going to do this, I think, in an orderly way, Mr. President, and offer it as an exhibit. I have not offered anything as yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had in mind the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana and thought it might be a good idea to indicate the proposed exhibit. Counsel will proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think it could be improved upon. However, I could have it marked as an exhibit, but I will continue with this until the witness gets through and then have it properly marked.

A. I have indicated on this list by a check mark the different papers which I prepared and filed. That is indicated on the left side opposite the number. Each paper on this list is apparently numbered. I have indicated by cross mark in front of the number the papers which I did not draw. However, I was cognizant of them, and of practically all of them I had copies handed me or served on me. Some of them I had to answer.

- Q. You mean answer in court or answer by mail?-A. How is that?
- Q. You mean answer in court or answer by mail?-A. Answer in court.
- Q. Go ahead .- A. A great many of them that are marked with a cross mark pertained to or required hearings in court. Some of them required motions to dismiss; some required answers; and practically the entire number here had to be considered, outside of the papers which I drew myself, and some of them, with Mr. Metcalf's assistance, had to be examined, and in some instances we had to have conferences over them with the receiver; and I had conferences with Mr. Bemis with reference to some of them. There were some claims filed in the court, some insurance claims for four or five different people filed in the court, that we had to contest because of the fact that, as I recall, Harold A. Moore, the trustee, had taken out insurance on the hotel property and that insurance had later on been canceled, as I remember. He had paid part cash and he had given notes for the balance of the premiums, and the holders of these notes had assigned them.
- Q. Mr. Rankin, I am doing everything I can to shorten this. I want to ask you whether or not these check marks which you have described indicate the papers you drew yourself, and the other marks indicate other matters-motions for hearings, appraisals, and matters of that kind—that you did not draw yourself, but to which you had to give more or less attention during the entire time down to the filing of the final decree?—A. Yes.
- Q. After the final decree, I see a great many numbers and a great many documents which are also numbered. I did not ask you to make any such indications as to those, did I?-A. No; you did not.
- Q. I will ask you this general question: In addition to what you did, as outlined, were you required to give attention to these other matters that ran on after that time?-A. I was required to give attention to those matters.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I send forward several questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The questions submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

When was the paper you hold prepared?

A. That paper was handed to me on yesterday.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

Was it prepared for the information of the Court?

A. I so understood it.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

Were these items entered in your private account books for the purpose of noting the time spent on this case?

A. They were not.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

Did you make any entries; and if so, what entries of charges for legal work on this case?

A. I do not recall that I made any entries whatsoever.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I make a statement to the Court as to the source of this paper?

Mr. WALSH. I should like to have a statement made showing when the paper was prepared and for what pur-

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). When the records were subpenaed, they were very great in volume and some 249 in number. We asked the clerk when he brought them, in order to facilitate the trial, to bring with him a record of those papers with a number for each, so that as they are introduced we may take out each paper and offer it in

Mr. WALSH. So the paper is a copy of the court records and was presented to the witness for the purpose of his Item Date identifying the items in the record?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent may proceed.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. This document you have just examined is headed "Sheet 1, Holland v. Whitehall, 678-M-Eq.", is it not?—A.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer this document in evidence and ask that it be marked "Exhibit 1" of the respondent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be received and so marked.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 1.") Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will now read respondent's

Q. And when you told me, I told you to let them go, and we would turn the list in without them. That is correct, is it not?-A. Yes.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel, to the managers on the part of the House). You have a copy of that list, have you not?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. If we have, it is all right. If we have not, it is all right.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You are still acting as attorney in anything that comes up in those matters?-A. Until the final settlement.

Q. And there are, in addition to what we have read here. some 100 or more matters that you attended to after the final decree. Is that correct?—A. Repeat your question.

Q. I say, in addition to those you have marked, there are some one-hundred-odd matters that you have attended to between the time of the final decree and down to the last notation, which was in 1935?-A. Where it was necessary.

Q. I will ask you to look at the file which I now hand you, which is the bill of complaint for foreclosure of trust deed or mortgage, appointment of receiver, and other relief, and say if that is the bill of complaint which you filed?-A. [after examining document:] It is.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer this document in evidence and ask that it be marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 2."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be received.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 2.") The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of counsel whether or not it is important that the document be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Is the Chair's inquiry addressed to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair addresses that interrogatory to counsel on both sides.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Your pleasure shall be mine, sir. I have no desire to have it printed. It will be exhibited to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The memorandum will be sufficient. If any member of the Court then wants to read it, it is in the record as a whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be filed with the clerk and will be available here for any member of the Court who desires to examine it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send to the desk an interrogatory which I desire to propound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The interrogatory submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

What is the date of the filing of the bill, and what is the date of the final decree?

A. The bill of complaint is marked "Filed October 11, 1929", and I have not the final decree.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The date of the final decree, if I may read it off, is December 24, 1930, as shown on the original record. That is now in evidence, on the list that was identified by the witness and marked as "Exhibit 1."

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you or did you not attach, as an exhibit to that bill, the trust deed covering the bonds mentioned?-A. I attached a copy of the trust deed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to read from the trust deed the paragraphs referring to the right to bring foreclosure proceedings.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will get you to look at the paper which I now hand you and ask if that is a copy of the first trust deed [exhibiting document to witness].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire of the managers on the part of the House whether there is any controversy as to whether this is a copy of the trust deed which is a part of the record?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I have not any idea, sir. We have never seen it before. If Mr. Walsh says it is, it is O. K. with us.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It is. There is a typewritten copy attached to the bill; but here is a printed copy, and it is easier to read.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Is that a copy of the trust deed?-A. It appears to be. Mr. Manager HOBBS. Do you know it to be, Mr. Walsh? Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; I know it to be. It is printed. I would not say that I checked it off.
Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is all right.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). This is marked at the top "Original", and also has the letters on it "American Trust & Safe Deposit Co., C-51, first trust deed." That is the document you just looked at.

I now offer the entire trust deed in evidence and ask that it be marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 3."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it will be received and so marked.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 3.") The PRESIDING OFFICER. Proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think, if Your Honor please, that trust deed ought to be printed in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that the desire of the honorable managers on the part of the House?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We have no objection, may it please the Court, if the Court so desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered. Proceed. (The document, Respondent's Exhibit No. 3, is as follows:)

HAROLD A. MOORE, EXHIBIT No. 1

[Original. Apr. 8, 1936. Offered in Exhibit No. 3.] Offered in evidence by respondent
